I am not sure but what the old precedents may have sustained them, but it seems to me the better practice has been—the practice which has been pursued for many years—that the Committee on Rules itself should not undertake to run the business of the House by offering a resolution on its own motion without the House having referred to it, under the rule, a resolution offered by a Member for the consideration of public business. We have heard a great deal in the past about how the Committee on Rules was undertaking to run the House, but during my term of service in the House the old Committee on Rules never undertook of itself to propose what the House should do until the House had referred to it a resolution introduced in the ordinary course of business. We have come to a proposition now where this new Committee on Rules, under reform measures of our friends on the Democratic side of the House, proposes, itself, to say, without reference to what the House shall do, and, although the Committee on the District of Columbia has had many days when it could bring up business before the House, this afternoon the Committee on Rules, without any previous resolution to which it refers in its report on the subject, proposes that the House shall devote the balance of this day to District business, and then proposes, as I understand, to-morrow or the next day to tell the House what it shall do with all the other bills on the calendar. We have a method of reaching every bill on the calendar, an easy, simple method under the rules of the House. It is not intended that we shall proceed under the rules of the House, but the Committee on Rules must undertake to tell the House how it shall proceed. The usual practice was that the House proceed in the regular order of business, and the Committee on Rules was never called upon except in case of emergency, where it was evident that a majority of the House, in order to carry out some fixed purpose which it could not reach under the ordinary rules, called upon the Committee on Rules to report a special rule.

I do not know whether it is expected that during the entire Congress we will have the Committee on Rules telling us every day, during the regular sessions, what we shall do—whether it is expected to abandon all proceedings under the rules. This rule provides that the Committee on the District of Columbia shall have the balance of this legislative day. There can be only one reason for putting in that term, if the gentleman who puts it in understands what it means. The only reason that can be used for putting in the term "legislative day" is to take a recess to-night in order to cut out Calendar Wednesday tomorrow. Is that the proposition on that side of the House? Why do you use the term "legislative day"?

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]?

Mr. MANN. Always; with pleasure.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not understand just what the criticism of the gentleman is leveled at.

Mr. MANN. If I have not made myself plain enough to be understood by the gentleman, I am afraid we will never get together on the proposition.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman always makes himself clear, but the gentleman understands there has been some confusion about, and I have not caught all that the gentleman said. I understood the gentleman, however, to begin his criticism by a suggestion that this was reported as an original resolution. Am I correct in that?

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is mistaken about that. This is reported as a substitute for the resolution which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. I took the trouble and precaution, which the gentleman has not taken, to go to the desk and get the resolution and report as they were presented. It says nothing about being in lieu of any other resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills pertaining to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] means to move that the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rule adopted by the House just now. I take it that is the proper motion.

The SPEAKER. That is the Chair's understanding of the motion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills relating to the District of Columbia, with Mr. SIMS in the chair.

HEALTH, ACCIDENT, AND DEATH BENEFIT COMPANIES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to call up the bill S. 2495.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2495) to define and classify health, accident, and death benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out section 653 thereof and enacting in lieu thereof the following:

"HEALTH, ACCIDENT, AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES OR ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 653. Every corporation, joint-stock company, or association not exempt herein, transacting business in the District of Columbia, which collects premiums, dues, or assessments from its members or from holders of its certificates or policies, and which provide for the payment of indemnity on account of sickness or accident, or a benefit in case of death, shall be known as 'health, accident, and life insurance companies or associations.' Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act, have in assets or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or in both together, not less than $25,000 as a capital or guarantee fund; which assets may be invested in United States, municipal, or railroad bonds, or in real estate, or in mortgages or deeds of trust on real estate, such investments to be approved by the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia. No such health, accident, and life insurance company or association, now or hereafter transacting the business of health, accident, and life insurance, or either or all said kinds of insurance, in the District of Columbia shall issue policies or certificates providing, either singly or in aggregate, a greater accident or death benefit than $500, or a greater weekly indemnity than $20, on any one person unless such company or association have in assets or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or in both together, not less than $100,000 invested and approved as aforesaid. Every such company or association shall pay to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia a sum of money, as tax, equal to 1 per cent of all moneys received from members of policy or certificate holders within the District of Columbia, said tax to be paid on or before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of such income for the year ending December 31 next preceding; and shall also file annually with said superintendent of insurance, on or before the 1st day of March of each year, a sworn statement, on blanks furnished by said superintendent of insurance, showing its true financial condition, income, disbursements, assets, and liabilities on the 31st day of December next preceding, and such other information as said superintendent of insurance may require; and shall pay to the said collector of taxes $10 for filing such statement. Said superintendent of insurance shall have the power to examine from time to time all companies or associations described herein; and when he finds the capital stock or assets of any such company or association impaired to an amount less than required by the provisions hereof he shall at once give notice of said fact to said company or association, and unless said impairment is made good within 60 days after said notice, it shall be the duty of said superintendent to revoke or suspend the license of said company or association until such impairment shall have been made good; and any company or association that issues policies or certificates of insurance as described herein without a license from said superintendent or during a suspension thereof, as herein provided, shall be fined not less than $20 nor more than $100 per day: Provided, That if any such company or association shall feel aggrieved by the decision of said superintendent concerning the investment or impairment of its assets or capital stock, it shall have the right to appeal, within 10 days, from the decision of said superintendent to the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall prescribe rules and regulations for the hearing of said appeal, and their decision shall be final: Provided also, That when any such company or association shall have complied with the provisions contained herein, the superintendent of insurance shall issue to it a license to transact its business in the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall interfere with or abridge the rights of any fraternal beneficial association licensed to transact business under subchapter 12 of chapter 18 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, or incorporated by special act of Congress: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall apply to any relief association, not conducted for profit, composed solely of officers and enlisted men of the United States Army or Navy, or solely of employees of any other branch of the United States Government service, or solely of employees of any individual, company, firm, or corporation."

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall repeal or affect the other provisions of subchapter 5 of chapter 18 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia regulating foreign corporations, or corporations, associations, or companies who are nonresidents of the District of Columbia (to whom the provisions of this act shall also be applicable), or the provisions of section 652 of said code relating to inquiry into the affairs of District companies.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

On page 4, line 20, after the comma which follows the word "Columbia," insert the words "or any chartered trades union," and after the word "or," in the same line of the same page, insert "or any such association."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] a question relative to lines 8, 9, and 23, on page 2. Is not the language susceptible of double meaning? It says that the company organized must—have in assets or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or both together, not less than $25,000.

Now, they might have capital stock which was fully paid up to the extent of $25,000, and they might have squandered that $25,000 and not have any assets. So it seems to me that the language which permits the company to organize and do business when it has assets amounting to $25,000, or capital stock fully paid up to that amount, is susceptible of being misconstrued.

Of course if the capital stock was fully paid up and if the money which was paid into the treasury of the company was not squandered they would have assets. But under that language what would there be to prevent a company from organizing with a capital stock of $25,000 fully paid up and then paying it out and having no assets? I suggest the query in order to give the gentleman from Kentucky an opportunity to formulate some other language; whether this language should be employed in the connection which it is employed is a matter that ought, in my judgment, to be given careful consideration before the bill is passed.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask of the gentleman whether the language that follows does not explain that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, before replying to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] I first prefer to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] 10 minutes. Then I shall try to get at the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. NELSON. I think I shall need about 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the Senate bill 2495 will become a law. The need of legislation such as this, I think, will be apparent to every member of the committee who will reflect for a moment or two upon a few plain, reliable, and suggestive facts.

There are 18 companies or associations in the District of Columbia that pretend to do what is known as health, accident, and funeral-benefit insurance. Two of these are colored companies. I am reliably informed by the Commissioner of Insurance of the District that there are practically only three men back of each of these companies, that are run by white men, and I use the term "white men" literally and not metaphorically. In the better one of the two colored companies the stockholders are more numerous, but it is safe to estimate that not to exceed 75 men are back of all these insurance concerns. And you will realize the need of some protective legislation when you understand that these 75 insurance sharks, by practicing upon the credulity, the fears, not to say the ignorance, of these poor people, which in this case consist mostly of colored working girls and women, collect from these unfortunate—I would almost say helpless—human beings at least the sum of $500,000 a year.

The need of protective legislation is further emphasized in my mind by the fact, as I am informed by the commissioner of insurance, that these companies are unlicensed, many of them; that they do business without capital stock, or only nominal capital stock, without assets or only nominal assets; and that they do not report to the commissioner under the law, because there is no warrant of law for it nor is there authority to investigate them. So that, in short, these sharks prey upon these poor people, restrained only by the limits of their rapacity and greed and the necessity of procuring bait with which to catch other victims.

This deplorable condition of things was called to my attention in this way: Last winter we secured the services of a colored girl as kitchen domestic. This colored girl had been working for years as servant in the home of the widow of an Army officer who lived just across the street from our home, and was recommended to us as a very kindly, efficient, faithful, and Christian girl. Her name was Willie. She was 18 years old. On the day when she began work in my family—on the afternoon of the day—the basement bell of my residence was kept ringing by white men who came to see this colored girl. She was asked what they wanted. She said, "They are insurance agents, and they want to insure me. But," she said, "I am insured now, I have been insured for five years." She said "I have been paying 50 cents a week for five years." That was 10 per cent of her wages, and she had paid in about $130; and she said, naively and innocently, "I expect to get in return $200 when I die."

It required no remarkable powers of deduction to conclude that, in view of the fact that these men were aware of her beginning work on that day, the frequency and the number of their calls, that something was wrong in the District of Columbia when these black-hearted birds of prey are so vigilant, numerous, and active. Investigation disclosed the fact that there are a hundred thousand policy holders in these irresponsible insurance companies, and that more than 65 per cent of them are women. I reported this condition of things to the very able, efficient, and faithful chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky], and he agreed with me that this was indeed a deplorable condition. He was already aware of it. He asked me to prepare a proper measure, and assured me of his hearty support. In the meantime I set to work making inquiries and getting ready to prepare a bill; but either because of my inquiries or his investigations, or because of the inherent fear on the part of these companies that when conditions were disclosed there might be drastic legislation that would put them all out of business, they of their own accord came to the commissioner of insurance in this District and asked that he prepare legislation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I will.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the gentleman consider railroad bonds and real estate a safe form of investment for the trust funds of insurance companies?

Mr. NELSON. I am not an expert along those lines, but I should think not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill provides that they may invest the entire guaranty fund in railroad bonds or real estate. No State in the Union will permit savings banks to invest their funds without limitation in railroad bonds or real estate.

Mr. NELSON. This bill is not what I want, but this is the condition of things before us, and we must pass something at this extra session. This will afford a foundation for future legislation.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. I was going to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question similar to that asked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. It seems to me that suitable provision is not made in this bill to protect the trust fund. If investments are to be made in real estate or real-estate mortgages, I think those investments should be on Washington real estate, and improved real estate at that, and State and county bonds should be added to the list of possible investments. My judgment is that railroad bonds would better be left off.

Mr. NELSON. I will say to the gentleman that this is not my bill. While I was investigating the facts these companies came to the commissioner of insurance and either he or they prepared this bill, and he made such amendments as he thought necessary. The bill has the approval of the corporation counsel of the District, of the commissioner of insurance, of the Commissioners of the District, has passed the Senate, and is reported favorably by the Committee on the District of Columbia. Now, it is not the bill that I would like to have. It does not go far enough. It leaves these premiums excessively high and the benefits ridiculously low. I believe there should be some limit upon the possible amount of expenses and dividends; but if we pass amendments now it is the belief of the commissioner of insurance that that will throw the bill into conference, and there being possibly only a few days left before the end of the session, and this being an emergency measure, we may find that we can pass no legislation at this session.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not take seriously the opinion of the commissioner of insurance as to a legislative proposition between the two bodies, I take it?

Mr. NELSON. No; I would not, but I am giving you the reason why I did not prepare a bill.

Mr. MANN. That might apply to a full bill, but any ordinary amendment made in the House would probably be agreed to in the Senate without question or request for a conference.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say that I believe the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky] is more familiar with this thing than I am, as he has worked with the corporation counsel and the insurance commissioner of the District. I simply discovered these facts and laid them before him, and I would rather have you ask him about the details of this bill.

Mr. CARLIN. I want to inquire whether or not the bill makes any distinction between companies hereafter applying to do business in the District of Columbia and the companies who are now here. You have a number of small companies all doing business in the District of Columbia. This bill proposes that they shall either deposit or have $25,000. Does not the gentleman think that provision ought to apply to those who come in after this, with notice of it, rather than to the small companies that have had no notice of such legislation?

Mr. NELSON. No; I think it should apply to these companies who are now practicing extortion.

Mr. CARLIN. There may be some companies that are not practicing extortion.

Mr. NELSON. How are you going to distinguish those that are not? How are you going to discriminate?

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman does not want the companies that are doing a legitimate business subjected to these conditions under the law?

Mr. NELSON. There is no law now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. NELSON. I have a policy here to which I wish to call attention. I could not get the policy of Willie, because she was frightened about these agents and what they would do. Certainly their manner of doing business is exceedingly insolent. When refused admittance by these colored girls, saying that they did not want insurance, they have put their foot up against the door and forced themselves upon them, and by persistence and the usual persuasive powers of insurance agents finally persuade the colored working girls to take out policies.

This policy is in the least disreputable of the two colored concerns. The policy holder is a woman over 60 years old. She is a colored washerwoman. She is all alone in the world. She thinks she has something in this policy. She pays 15 cents a week. As she has been insured 11 years, she has paid $85.80 premiums, for which she is to get $45 funeral benefits, payable to her son, who, by the way, is dead; but she has not changed the beneficiary. It is true that the policy also calls for sick benefits, in one place for $4 and in another for $3.75 a week. You can appreciate what that means when you read the policy. There are 15 conditions and requirements here, which the insurance commissioner says are absolutely impossible to fulfill. Here are two of them:

4. That no benefits will be paid on account of the certificate until after 10 weeks from date of membership. If sickness, death, or accident occur after 10 weeks and before 6 months, one-fourth of the sum hereinbefore mentioned will be paid; after 6 months and before 9 months one-half the sum hereinbefore mentioned will be paid; after 9 months and before 12 months three-fourths of the sum hereinbefore mentioned will be paid; and after 12 months the full amount will be paid.

14. That in case of epidemic sickness, numerous accidents, or widespread increase of mortality not more than two-thirds of the amount of benefits hereinbefore mentioned shall be paid by this association.

These are samples of the way these sick benefits are hedged about. She told me her experience. She said she had been sick once. The colored doctor's certificate brought no response. She changed doctors, and the certificate of the white doctor brought some response from the company. They put spies on her. These spies would come into the house suddenly to see if she was out of bed. One day she did get out for a short time to see if she could sit up, and she was caught, and although she had to go back to bed and stay for weeks the sick benefits were cut off. The commissioner says that the spy system is general, and if for any cause they catch the policy holder out of bed temporarily the sick benefit is cut off.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. What was the benefit to be paid to this woman?

Mr. NELSON. Three dollars and seventy-five cents in one place in the policy and $4 in another per week, not to exceed 10 weeks in all in any one year.

Mr. WEEKS. Would it not be cheaper to pay the sick benefits than to employ the spies?

Mr. NELSON. Well, I am giving you the facts as I got them from her, and as I get them from the insurance commissioner.

Mr. CARLIN. I would like to inquire why it is that a company with $25,000 capital is limited to issuing policies, while a company with $100,000 capital is unlimited?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman from Virginia address his question to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], as I am not responsible for this measure, but I believe it should pass because it does three things that I approve of. It provides a minimum of capital stock that will be some security against the insolvency of these companies; it provides for making reports to the commissioner of insurance, which they are not required now to do; then he has authority to make investigations as to the solvency of the companies; and he assures me that legislation will be formulated, when he gets these facts, that will adequately protect these poor people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I sent the proposed law and this policy of insurance to the insurance commissioner of the State of Wisconsin, who is an expert, and I beg leave to read his letter, eliminating the name of the policy holder, as she is afraid to have her name divulged, The letter is as follows:

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INSURANCE,
Madison, August 2, 1911.

Hon. JOHN M. NELSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR NELSON: I have your letter of the 31st ultimo and herewith return you policy No. —, in the National Benefit Association of Washington, D. C.

I can appreciate the difficulty of having a lot of associations of this kind which charge what amounts to, in the aggregate, a very high premium for a comparatively small benefit, and quite probably do not propose to pay even the benefit promised. I do not find that this association is listed in Bests. Neither can I find that this association is listed in the Life Insurance Yearbook, and hence have no information as to the status of this company.

On general principles, these associations should be supervised, and the bill you inclose (Senate bill 2495) will accomplish this purpose and will do away with the small irresponsible associations by the requirement of assets of not less than $25,000. This amount may be rather high, but it is better to err on this side than on the side of not providing sufficient security to policy holders.

I note further the exception in favor of fraternal benefit societies will permit of the organization of associations on the fraternal plan without the assets, and where organized on the fraternal plan, there is greater assurance that the societies will be managed more in the interests of the policy holders.

This matter of accident insurance gives us more trouble in our department than almost anything else, in that companies have been constantly trying to so word their policies as to escape practically all liability, and statistics show that the amount repaid for losses is very small in proportion to the amount paid by policy holders. There is, of course, a point at which the economic waste in having a very large portion of the policy holders' payments dissipated for expenses is such that insurance of that kind ceases to be legitimate. We have tried to meet that in part here by the adoption of the uniform bill relating to provisions in health and accident policies. This bill became chapter 84 of laws of 1911, section 1960 of the statutes. I herewith inclose a copy of chapter 84, but suppose it is too late to do anything about taking this up at this session. Anyway, the bill proposed will no doubt improve conditions.

Sincerely, HERMAN L. EKERN, Commissioner.

I have given you some specific cases. Let me give you some facts in general. The commissioner is the authority for the statement that there are companies that will start out with a nominal capital stock, one year with a thousand dollars and twenty-five cents, and that will go out and collect from seventy-five thousand to one hundred thousand dollars from these people. Then they begin again the next year with 10 cents additional capital stock, or with a capital stock of $1,000.35. It is impossible to give the exact figures, because these companies are not compelled under the law, as decided by the court of appeals, to make reports, but in pending litigation the corporation counsel has filed the following figures, which were obtained from reports made in 1901, 1902, 1903, and with these as a basis we can judge the conditions now. This statement showing the capital stock of the companies, with the amount paid by the policy holders and the amount paid to the policy holders during the years 1901, 1902, 1903, is as follows:

	Capital stock.	Amounts paid by policy holders.	Amounts paid to policy holders.
American Home Life Insurance Co.	$2,000	$50,388	$6,699
Provident Relief Association	5,000	152,496	32,651
Royal Life Insurance Co.	1,000	14,932	2,409
Total		217,816	41,759

If we study the rates of premiums of these companies, we find that in comparison with old-line insurance, as nearly as we can compare them, they are about 40 per cent higher; and the amount of extortion that is practiced upon these people may be understood when I restate what I said before, that the total collection from premiums every year aggregates at least $500,000. This reflects little credit upon the legislative guardians of these people in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman has given us figures paid by and to policy holders. What becomes of the residue?

Mr. NELSON. It goes for salaries, dividends, and expenses.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. It costs a little more to do business where the amount of the premiums is small than it does in the old-line insurance companies.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, yes; but I gave what it was approximately.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. NELSON. I sincerely trust that some bill of this kind may pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, my attention was first directed to this subject about two years ago, when I received a telegram from my home town in Kentucky from an old colored woman saying that her son, who was here temporarily, had just died and asking me to look after his little effects and see that he was buried. I went out to the race track, where the boy had died, and I found he had already been buried because he had a horse and some saddles and bridles, which were sufficient to bury him. He also had a policy in one of these insurance companies. When I took the matter up with them as to a $50 policy they had issued to him they simply laughed at me at the idea of undertaking to collect a policy of any amount from them. The matter went along from then until this session without anything being done about it, but very early in this session a bill was presented to the Senate, which, after it was thrashed out and redrafted several times, passed the Senate and has come to the House. The House committee has amended it, exempting labor organizations in their fraternal insurance societies. That amendment was suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER]. The committee on the District affairs has reported this bill back to the House with an expression of opinion that it pass with amendments.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman that I quite agree with him that there ought to be some legislation on this subject, if the statements which have been made in the press and elsewhere are correct. I would like to ask the gentleman, however, if he happens to have in mind the provision found on page 2, commencing with line 6.

Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act, have in assets or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or in both together, not less than $25,000 as a capital or guarantee fund.

Will that permit the organization of any association hereafter?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not without complying with that provision is my judgment of it.

Mr. MANN. Could any association organize after 90 days hereafter without having within 90 days of the passage of this act a capital stock of $25,000? The language of the bill is,

"Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act, have in assets or in capital stock," and so forth. Now, it is perfectly plain that if an association is organized four months after the passage of this act it can not have within three months a capital stock of $25,000. I take it that is not the intention of the framers of the bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is to prevent them organizing with a capital stock of $25,000——

Mr. MANN. But they will not have it within 90 days after the passage of this act.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I see.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If they have got it now, many of them——

Mr. MANN. Of course, it is all right, that provision; at least I think it is. I do not know anything about the question of amount, but I take it that is well considered. That is a very good provision as to existing associations, but this, it seems to me, absolutely prevents any association being organized at all after a period of three months from the passage of the act. I have not framed in my mind an amendment. I think that is something that ought to be corrected. I do not desire to take up all the gentleman's time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If there is really a fault in the drafting of the bill, I would think it could be corrected on the first page of the bill by saying that—

Every corporation, joint stock company, or association not exempt herein, transacting business in the District of Columbia, or which may hereafter transact business in the District of Columbia.

Would that correct it? But, Mr. Chairman, I will say that this bill has been gone over——

Mr. CARLIN. I suggest we might cure that by saying "within 90 days from its application," application for license. That might cure it.

Mr. MANN. Would it cure that by inserting after the word "act," in line 8, "or at the time of incorporation or organization," so that it would read:

Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act, or at the time of its incorporation or organization——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Or at the time of its application.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me suggest a simple amendment. Add the words "or after" after the word "within," in line 7, page 2.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Add what?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Add the words "or after," so it will read "within or after 90 days of the passage of this act."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That would destroy it. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, this bill, after a great deal of study on the part of the Senate, after it had been rewritten some five or six times, met every objection of the committee over there and met every requirement on the part of the superintendent of insurance in the District of Columbia. The main question is—and it is a very important one—to stop these little robbing companies in the District of Columbia, and I think we should go ahead with this bill in the shape in which it has passed the Senate, unless some glaring mistake has been made in it.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. KOPP. On page 2, in lines 12 and 13, it is provided that these assets may be loaned upon certain securities. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some limit as to the percentage of value of real estate that can be represented by a loan?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that the loan has to be approved by the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. KOPP. I notice that, but does not the gentleman think there ought to be an added provision so as not to throw the whole responsibility upon one man?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The question which the gentleman now raises was discussed both by the Senate committee and the House committee, and the endeavor was not to cut out any small company that was responsible, and as some of these companies already have their money invested in real estate, the desire was not to prevent them from operating if it was possible, and, at the same time, to leave them solvent.

Mr. KOPP. Is it not a fact that nearly all the States require from benefit associations and mutual savings banks and savings banks in general, that loan on real estate, a limit as to the amount of value that may be represented by a loan?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. KOPP. I have made some investigations, and I think it is a fact. It seems to me it is a precaution we ought to take in this bill.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. In order to meet the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I would suggest this amendment:

On line 6, page 2, after the word "every," insert:

Such company or association hereafter organized, and every such company and association now in existence, shall——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WILDER] suggested to me an amendment which I think will cover the case, namely, by inserting after the word "act," in line 8, the words "or before it begins to transact business," so that it would read:

Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act, or before it begins to transact business, have in assets or in capital stock——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would it not be better before the charter is granted?

Mr. OLMSTED. It would be better, I suggest, to say:

After 90 days from the passage of this act no such company or association shall transact business in this District unless it shall have assets—

And so forth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would cover existing companies and companies to be formed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be well for Members of this House to fully understand the necessity for such a bill. There are a great many insurance companies doing business in the District practically without capital stock or without any assets whatever. I have in my hand now the official papers of an application of one of these companies to do business here. Its capital stock is $100, to be divided into 100 shares of $1 each. Then I have here in another package the official papers, brought to me by the insurance commissioner, an application for a company the capital stock of which is to be $1, to be divided into 100 shares of 1 cent each. And that is entitled "The Congressional Life Insurance Co. of Washington." [Laughter.]

Now, then, one of these companies is sought to be incorporated by a colored man.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not that rather indicate that the organizer of that company had fixed the congressional ability to join such associations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. One of the incorporators of one of these proposed companies is a colored man, and his wife and son are the other incorporators. He starts out by extending this charter not only to the District of Columbia, but to every State in the Union and to every foreign dependency of the United States. He has done a good deal of lobbying around here and has told a great many Members that this bill was gotten up for the purpose of cutting out the colored people from doing a life-insurance business here. As a matter of fact, one of the most prosperous of the insurance companies doing business here, and one of the most responsible, is a company owned by colored people. So there is no sort of discrimination on that ground. But the proper thing to do is to make all such people, as the others whom I have referred to, get out of business.

This colored man who has been lobbying to defeat this bill appeared before the committee and made a statement, in which he said that he intended to mandamus the insurance commissioner and compel the issuance of a charter to him. And if this bill does not pass, then the law in the District of Columbia is such that he can mandamus the commissioner and compel the issuance of a charter to him to do business on a capital stock of $1 cut up into a hundred shares of 1 cent each.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman able to state what Members of the House this lobbyist has influenced? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, I hope he has not influenced anybody to offer amendments sufficient in number to delay for one moment the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANN. I think, if the gentleman has been lobbying, he has felt that it was necessary for him to appeal to the majority side of the House, and I am sure he has not had any influence over there; and I have not been able to find anybody on the minority side who has been seen by that gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, some on that side have been seen by him; and some very ugly language has been used by this man when lobbying, against the insurance commissioner, because that official approves the passage of this bill. I may say that on the floor of this House one day, immediately after adjournment, this man used some of the ugliest epithets, applied to the insurance commissioner, that have ever been heard inside or outside of this Capitol.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, as I read the bill on page 2, a condition precedent is provided in the bill requiring a capitalization of $25,000 before a license can be issued. Now, as I read the bill, after they have capitalized to the extent of $25,000, and after the capital stock is paid in and they have assets to that amount, they are then qualified to procure their license and go ahead and issue insurance.

At the bottom of page 2 of the bill another condition is imposed, and that condition is that no greater sum than $500 shall be issued upon the life of any one individual.

Mr. KAHN. In line 20 of page 2.

> Or a greater weekly indemnity than $20 on any one person unless such company or association have in assets or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or in both together, not less than $100,000 invested and approved as aforesaid.

Now, my question is this: Why the limitation found at the bottom of page 2, prohibiting the issuing of a policy of less than $500 and a weekly indemnity not to exceed $20 by a company whose capital stock is $100,000 paid up, and no limitation whatever as to the amount of insurance that can be issued by a company having a capital stock of $25,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, we have gone upon the idea that a company with a capital stock of $25,000 should not be allowed to issue as large policies as a company of $100,000 capital stock.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is the point. Is there anything put in there that would put any limitation whatever on a company organized on the $25,000 capital stock as in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; just which the gentleman has just read limits it. If they have not $100,000 capital stock, they can not issue policies of a greater amount than is there named.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; but if the company has only $25,000 capital stock, and that is fully paid up, how much insurance can it issue?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not exceeding $500 insurance and $20 weekly indemnity.

Mr. ADAIR. That is the language of the bill.

Mr. CARLIN. The chairman is correct. If the capital stock is $25,000 they can not issue a policy in excess of $500. If the capital stock is $100,000, they can issue a policy to an unlimited amount.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think the language after "associations" in line 6, and running down to the word "act" in line 8, makes it absolutely impossible for any organization to be formed after 90 days from the passage of this act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That question was raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. If that is true, would it not be possible to create a monopoly in the associations which are already in existence? And would not that increase the value of their capital stock and their assets if it was known that there was to be no competition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think any company meeting the requirements of the act should have the right to organize.

Mr. ADAIR. It was not intended to prevent the organization of properly qualified companies, was it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No.

Mr. MADDEN. I think there ought to be an amendment to cover that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that if he prepares an amendment correcting that we will accept it.

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has already drawn an amendment of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman offer it?

Mr. OLMSTED. I shall be glad to offer it when it is in order.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman send it up and have it read?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the amendment be read for our information. Then it can be offered at the proper time.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will have it read for information.

Mr. CARLIN. Is the bill open for amendment now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let the amendment be read, so that we can see what it is.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not understand that the bill is open to amendment yet.

Mr. GARNER. The amendment is merely to be read for information now.

Mr. OLMSTED. Merely for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment, which will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment by Mr. OLMSTED.
> On page 2, line 6, after the word "associations," strike out down to and including the word "act," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "After 90 days from the passage of this act no such company or association shall transact business within the District of Columbia unless it shall."

Mr. OLMSTED. Unless it shall have, in assets, and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then the remainder of the language is left the same as it is now?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. That is all right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. CARLIN. I want to ask the gentleman one question. On page 4 of the bill, in line 12, it will be found that you have allowed an appeal in all cases involving property rights and assets of the company to the District Commissioners only, and you have provided that their decisions shall be final. That provision applies to all the large companies doing business in the District of Columbia. Does the gentleman think that such property rights as that should be left to the final decision of the District Commissioners? Does the gentleman not think it would be better to leave the final decision to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think the gentleman has stated that just as it is.

Mr. CARLIN. I will ask the gentleman to state it, then.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The proviso is:

> If any such company or association shall feel aggrieved by the decision of the said superintendent concerning the investment or impairment of its assets or capital stock.

It shall have the right of appeal. That was one question which was sought to get determined as quickly as possible, without running the gantlet of the courts for years; that if the capital stock is impaired and that fact is brought to the attention of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are the highest authority in the District, an order should be allowed for the protection of the people who might be imposed upon and the further issuance of policies be stopped right there.

Mr. CARLIN. I agree with the gentleman that the order to suspend the operations of the company ought to be entered right there, but I do not think the final decision of the merits, involving the questions of privilege and of law, ought to be left to the decision of the District Commissioners.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The only question arising before the commissioners would be whether or not the capital stock had been impaired.

Mr. CARLIN. There are other questions concerning investment and the impairment of assets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A bad investment would impair the capital stock of a company.

Mr. CARLIN. But the question is, Who ought to be the final arbiter of that question? You are dealing with all companies now, and the provision would apply to the largest companies in the United States, and you are putting the final decision of these questions in the jurisdiction of the District Commissioners. I do not say that I am objecting to it; I am simply asking about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The largest companies in the United States are not going to have any objection to it, because the largest companies are solvent ones.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to keep in the provision exempting associations incorporated by special act of Congress? What company does that refer to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That refers more particularly to fraternal societies that may want to come to Congress and get a charter.

Mr. MANN. The provision above that is in relation to fraternal beneficial societies. Does not the gentleman think we ought to insert bona fide beneficial associations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is the intention, and there would be no objection upon my part.

Mr. MANN. I think no one would object to that. A $1 capital stock corporation might get up a fraternal association and thus be exempt. It says that "nothing contained herein shall interfere or abridge the rights of any fraternal beneficial association," and so forth, or any chartered trades union, or any such association incorporated by special act of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Trades unions might be chartered by Congress.

Mr. MANN. I think that is not the understanding of the gentleman who offered that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It says any such association.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but I take it the reading of the bill exempts fraternal beneficial associations, and, second, chartered trades unions; that is, local unions which have a charter from their parent organization, and also any association incorporated by special act of Congress. As to any association hereafter incorporated by special act of incorporation, it would receive its powers under that act. Does the gentleman know whether it refers to any existing corporation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not. I relied in these matters on the insurance commissioner.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Following up the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, I was going to ask the gentleman if, on line 20, page 4, "any chartered trades union" meant a trades union chartered by law or chartered by a superior body of trades union?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I suspect the gentleman who is asking the question has more information upon that subject than I have. I have already said that I am far from being an expert in insurance matters. As to this bill, I referred it to prominent insurance men in my own State before I would agree to report it, and they approved of it; and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] insisted on the insertion of these words, and the Commissioners of the District have approved it, and I am accepting it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am asking for information. As a matter of fact, I want to know whether the amendment meant that there should be exempted from the provisions of this bill any chartered trades union that was chartered by law or by a superior body of trades union.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I frankly admit to the gentleman that I can not answer his question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Perhaps I may make it more clear in this way. Suppose there is a national trades union which charters State trades unions, which in turn charters local municipal trades unions. Does that mean this kind of a charter, or does it mean that kind of a charter granted by law in the regular way?

Mr. KAHN. The language here would meet either.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is whether this shall be interpreted to mean a local union chartered by a general union or national union is exempt from the provisions of this law, and it does not restrict such a chartered organization to one which has secured its charter from the act of the legislature.

Mr. ADAIR. That is the intention.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To relieve the labor union whose charter comes from a superior body of labor union.

Mr. ADAIR. That is the intention.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will further say that at the hearing before the committee some people who felt that they could not comply with the requirements of this bill on account of the requirement as to assets and capital stock were very anxious for an amendment to be offered permitting them to increase their assets $2,500 a year up to $25,000. The objection to that amendment was that it would take them 10 years to comply with the requirements of the bill. We thought it entirely too long.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] to say that there were two of these organizations in the District controlled by colored people.

Is the gentleman able to say whether there are any of the organizations in the District who now comply with the requirements of this bill? Are there any organizations controlled by colored people or others which now comply with the requirements of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I suggested in the first part of my remarks that one of the best and most solvent companies engaged in doing this business was owned and operated by colored people.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but does it comply with the provisions of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In every respect.

Mr. ADAIR. Has it a capital stock of $25,000?

Mr. NELSON. No; but it has $60,000 of assets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It meets the requirements of the bill so the insurance commissioner says.

Mr. TURNBULL. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. TURNBULL. On page 33 of the bill there is imposed a tax of 1 per cent of the revenues of these companies, and then the companies are required to furnish to the superintendent of insurance each year in March a list of their assets, and right at the bottom of that clause, in line 13, there is this provision:

And shall pay to the said collector of taxes $10 for filing such statement.

Is that meant to be an additional tax on the companies, or is it simply $10 paid to the collector for filing the statement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The company has to pay the $10.

Mr. TURNBULL. Does that go to the collector?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; the collector's compensation is fixed by law; he receives a fixed salary.

Mr. TURNBULL. That $10 is an additional tax on each one of these companies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is my belief.

Mr. TURNBULL. Why is it fixed in that way? It says for filing the statement. It seems to me it is a very peculiar way of collecting a tax.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. All other taxes are paid to him.

Mr. TURNBULL. I understand; but if it is to be an additional tax, it seems to me that we ought to say so in the bill, instead of providing that the collector shall have a fee of $10 for the filing of each statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He would have to pay that into the Treasury.

Mr. TURNBULL. It does not say so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Other laws do.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman if there would be any objection to inserting in the provision providing for the investment of these bonds some qualification? It seems to me that that is rather loosely drawn, and would permit investment in a lot of things that might be called in the investment world "cats and dogs."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman will notice the provision contained on page 3, line 15:

Said superintendent of insurance shall have the power to examine from time to time all companies or associations described herein, etc.

He can stop them from doing business.

Mr. TILSON. But if we authorize them to invest in railroad bonds and they do invest in railroad bonds without any limitation whatsoever——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I was going to propose an amendment there, and at the proper time I shall propose an amendment limiting what they can be invested in.

Mr. SABATH. Well, on line 13 that is cured. It states such investment as shall be approved by the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think it is fully covered.

Mr. TILSON. But you want us to leave it entirely to the discretion of the superintendent of insurance, and it seems to me it would be safer to hedge it about with a law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], the committee will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment can not be accepted. It has to be voted on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I mean that the committee will interpose no objection to it.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up any further time, except to perfect the bill by such amendments as gentlemen may offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the committee need not be frightened at the statement of the Chair, for it is genial and kindly intended. There are several gentlemen upon this side of the House who desire to speak, and I have asked for recognition in order that time may be accorded them; but before yielding I wish to say that so far as the minority members of the District of Columbia Committee are concerned I think that is no serious objection to the purpose of this bill. It is to be conceded that there is much injustice on the part of certain insurance collectors and of certain unscrupulous and reckless concerns as against the innocent poor. In the city of Philadelphia only recently it has been necessary to close up a number of establishments that have been doing business upon the mutual plan, and very fortunately for those who had paid out money in premiums we had an insurance commissioner who arrived in time to save what there was left for the benefit of those whose money was at stake. No greater hardship, perhaps, can be conceived than that which affects the innocent subscribers to schemes of this kind, placing away week by week or month by month their hard-earned savings for the purpose of providing against illness or making provision against death. It seems to me that the committee did well in recommending the extent to which death benefits might be paid. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] a moment ago raised the question as to the extent of the death benefit. I do not know whether he objected to the limitation of $500 or not, but it is self-evident that if no limitation were fixed, in a company whose capital was not in excess of $25,000, that one large policy holder dying, might derive for the benefit of his estate the entire assets, taking them away from the small policy holders, who had gone innocently into the company to make provision against a rainy day.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The purpose of my inquiry was not to object to the limitation at all, but the way I read the bill was this: That there was no limitation at all on companies whose capital stock was only $25,000, and for that reason two or three large stockholders might come in and take all the insurance allowed by the company, whereas there is a limitation of $500 in insurance to an individual in companies where the capital stock is $100,000. I was simply making the inquiry for the purpose of getting information from the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I understand the gentleman, upon a rereading of the bill and upon the explanation of the gentleman from Kentucky, considers that the limitation of $500 was fixed so far as a capitalization of $25,000 was concerned, and where the capitalization reached to $100,000, there the death benefit might be increased.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is that the gentleman's interpretation of this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My understanding of the bill is that if the capital stock equals $100,000 a policy may be issued for an amount in excess of $500 to an individual. That is my understanding of the bill, but I call upon the gentleman from Kentucky to say whether or not that is his understanding.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer some amendments to this bill, but in view of the fact that it is so near the close of the session and the passage of the bill may be embarrassed, I shall not do so; but what I want to ask is this: A guaranty fund is provided for the protection of the policy holders in the District of Columbia. The bill is applicable to companies organized outside the District of Columbia. Now, a concern organized in New York City with a capital of $25,000 can do business in the District of Columbia without putting up an additional dollar here under this bill.

The object of a guaranty fund required by a State is to protect the policy holders of that State, and most of the States require a concern to put up guaranty funds with the insurance commissioners in addition to the capital stock, which it may have in the State of its origin.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman read this bill as indicating now that, if such a bill should pass, the insurance commissioner of the District of Columbia has an increased jurisdiction over the assets of a company coming here and doing business in the District?

Mr. SHEPPARD. He may have an increased jurisdiction, but the bill does not provide a guaranty fund for the District of Columbia policy holders alone so far as companies outside the District are concerned having a capital stock of $25,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman object to the bill on the ground that it does not provide sufficient protection to the policy holders in the District?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly; so far as the outside companies are concerned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman this—because I am in sympathy with the general purpose of the bill——

Mr. SHEPPARD. So am I.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to the phraseology of the bill we may differ, and as to the effectiveness of the bill as drawn we may differ, but how do you intend to cover the point you raise?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I would require the outside companies to put up a guaranty fund in the District of Columbia with the superintendent of insurance in addition to the capital stock they have in the States of their organization.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman in that connection, that each State presumably would have jurisdiction over the assets in that State. There must be assets in New York, or in Pennsylvania, or in Ohio, for instance, and those assets must be subject to the supervision of the insurance commissioner there. They surely would in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and I have known of instances in that Commonwealth where an actual deposit has been required to be placed in the vaults of the State as against foreign business done by the company or where an impairment of capital was suspected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly; and that is what ought to be provided in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the committee has been discussing this bill apparently upon the presumption that it is the only insurance law in the District. That is not the case. The insurance code is quite voluminous, as the gentleman knows, and this is intended to reach this situation only. There are other provisions of the code which cover the feature which the gentleman speaks of, and in addition to that there are other bills that have been before the committee, and have been reported out, that even go ahead and throw additional precautions around some of those.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My understanding is the same as that of the gentleman from Kentucky—that we are simply endeavoring to protect the local policy holders, those whose money is solicited for insurance purposes in this District. But, coming back to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], I want to ask him before he puts his question if he knows of any State in the Union where a guaranty fund is not required by the laws of the State, subject to supervision by the State insurance commissioner?

Mr. SHEPPARD. One of the few jurisdictions in the United States not requiring these companies to have guaranty funds deposited within said jurisdictions to protect the policy holders therein is the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, does not the gentleman think that this bill, so far as its purpose goes, is a great step forward toward correcting an omission which has hitherto existed in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly. And for that reason I said I would not introduce an amendment at this time, but wanted to suggest certain defects in the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I call the gentleman's attention to line 17, page 3, referring to the power of the superintendent of insurance in the District. He is known here as the "superintendent of insurance." He is to examine the assets or the securities of the companies that have been deposited, and it says in line 17:

> When he finds the capital stock or assets of any such company or association impaired to an amount less than required by the provisions hereof, he shall at once give notice of said fact to said company or association.

That would seem to indicate if he has had no power to invesigate heretofore this bill would perhaps give him the power, so that those who deposit their money in legitimate companies would at least have that measure of protection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is an additional measure of protection in this bill so far as outside companies are concerned, because the bill gives the superintendent of insurance the right to examine the capital stock of outside companies. But it does not require any guaranty fund to be deposited here with the insurance superintendent for the protection solely of the policy holders here, whereas practically every other jurisdiction in the United States has taken that step, if I am correctly advised.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a step in the right direction, anyway.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And these companies are left on exactly the same footing as the other companies. The gentleman has introduced a bill to put them all on the same footing, and I understand they are favorable to his bill, bringing out the very feature I have mentioned for all of the companies doing business in the District. But until it has been made applicable to all let us allow this company to remain on the same footing as the other.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, one more word, and then I will not take part further in this discussion. Does the gentleman believe that the capital stock should be invested altogether in real estate, and would he require no definite portion of it to be held in cash?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have some views upon that question. It has been necessary, as has been found by certain large concerns, to make a realignment on securities, and the law has made that realignment proper. It is often difficult to realize upon assets when the assets are confined to real estate only. If it were necessary for the superintendent of insurance to seize the assets and the assets consisted of real estate only, I think it would be a long time before the innocent policy holders would be able to realize anything on their share of the proceeds.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think so, too.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Railroad bonds and municipal bonds, of course, are more readily negotiated, and in the event of liquidation they could be readily applied to the estate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill makes it possible for the entire guaranty fund to be invested in real estate. It does not require even 10 per cent of it to be in cash.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is the gentleman's position, I agree with him; and I would rather not have it that way, because you can not realize speedily upon real-estate securities. You may have to wait indefinitely before a dollar could be realized to pay those who would have to be paid in the event of the settlement of the estate. I think my memory is not at fault when I recall that the gentleman objected to the use of railroad bonds as assets in a company of this kind.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is only one of the objections.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the gentleman suggested that it was not the custom of banks and financial institutions to accept railroad bonds?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Savings banks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; savings banks. In a recent address to the House I used as an illustration an investment of many millions by one institution, holding the savings of poor people, in railroad bonds, which, of course, in the last analysis, meant the construction and development of railroads throughout the country. I think it can be very safely stated to the gentleman and to the committee that large institutions indulge very freely in the investment of cash in railroad securities.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What institution was the gentleman referring to?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The institution I referred to, in this particular instance, was the Philadelphia Savings Bank, but it is only one of many institutions of the kind that do invest savings in this way.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is that institution under State regulation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The State law specifies the railroads whose bonds may be purchased in that way, does it not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no. This particular company operates under a charter granted many years ago. It publishes its statements annually. Every depositor in the company—there are no stockholders—is advised at fixed periods of the railroads in whose securities the deposits are invested, and these railroads are located in the North, East, South, and West.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is it not a fact that safeguards and limitations are in most of the States thrown around the investment of savings banks' funds in railroad bonds?

Mr. KAHN. In some States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In the most progressive States.

Mr. KAHN. I would not say the most progressive States. That is the law in some of the States of the Union.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think that shows that they are the most progressive.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman as to the elimination of real-estate security in a matter of this kind, but I question very much whether it would be advisable to eliminate railroad bonds. You might not be able to buy Federal, State, or municipal bonds.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to know what the gentleman's definition of "most progressive States" is.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. At the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I am going to offer an amendment to that part of the bill which relates to the investment of the funds. My amendment has been sent to the Clerk's desk. I suggest that perhaps this would be a proper time to have it read for information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall be glad to have it read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, in line 11, after the words "United States," strike out down to and including the word "estate" in line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"State, county, municipal bonds, and bonds of the District of Columbia, or railroad bonds; but investments in the bonds of railroads shall be limited to the bonds of those railroads which have paid dividends on their capital stocks for the 10 years previous to the date of the investment; or in improved real estate, or in mortgages on improved real estate; but no loan on real estate shall be made for an amount exceeding 50 per cent of its assessed value."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the fact that in limiting the loan to 50 per cent on the assessed value he is placing a very low limit. Real estate in this District is assessed at only two-thirds of its value, and the assessed value consequently is only 66⅔ per cent, and when you limit a loan to 50 per cent of 66⅔ per cent you cut it down to 33⅓ per cent of the actual value.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman to suggest that "'fair appraisal value" would be a better term. It is a term that is used in this connection. I suggest that it should be the fair appraisal value rather than the assessed value—50 per cent of the fair appraisal value.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Appraisal by whom?

Mr. WEEKS. The appraisal is supposed to be by some fair means, and whenever an appraisal is made it is an appraisal of the actual worth of the property. The question whether it was 50 per cent of the fair appraisal value could be easily determined by a court, if brought into litigation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the Chair tell me how much time I have remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 41 minutes left.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall consume 10 minutes. I simply want to call attention to one or two things in the bill and then to some other matters.

The proposition that we ought not to amend this bill because we are near the end of the session, and the passage of it might be interfered with, does not appeal to me. It seems to me that this House ought not to pass a bill which is obviously incomplete and inaccurate, when we can very easily amend it and express the ideas that we are all agreed upon. It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] ought to be adopted, because it clears up that proposition.

Then in line 11 it seems that some one ought to explain the meaning, or perhaps an amendment ought to be put in there so as to clear up the language. That is on page 2. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] a few moments ago suggested that the language on the following page, at line 17, was not sufficient to cover that subject. I think he was right about that. In lines 10 and 11, page 2, it says:

Which assets may be invested in United States, municipal, or railroad bonds, or in real estate.

And so forth. It does not say that they "shall" be so invested. They may be invested in that or they may be invested in something else. It seems to me that language ought to be made very definite. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] made a statement, as I understood him——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman has suggested that the word "may" be stricken out and that the word "shall" be inserted; but would not that prevent them from carrying cash? The word "may" is used so that they can carry cash if they want to.

Mr. WILLIS. I have not formulated an amendment, but some language ought to be used there to make that provision mandatory, it seems to me. We ought not to leave that to judicial interpretation.

Then on line 17, on page 3, the language is not sufficient, because it says that the superintendent shall have jurisdiction only when the capital stock is impaired to an amount less than required by the provisions of this act. It seems to me that language is not sufficiently clear, and that these matters should be cleared up.

While I have the floor, there is another matter to which I wish to refer.

In the RECORD of August 2 there are some remarks made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] that are of interest.

On page 3513 the gentleman from California inserts a certain statement taken from one of the daily papers, purporting to give language used by a representative of the Tariff Board. I will read the statement:

[From the Washington (D. C.) Herald.]

TARIFF BOARD AGENT SEES PROFIT IN SHEEP—W. C. BARNES SAYS THEY CAN BE RAISED TO PAY $1.81 PER HEAD.

OGDEN, UTAH, July 29.

W. C. Barnes, representing President Taft and the Tariff Board, in checking up the information gathered by special agents of the Government on wool and sheep industries, arrived in Ogden this morning after visiting four of the largest sheep States of the West.

His figures follow:

Cost a head to raise sheep, all expenses incident to grazing, herding, shearing, dipping, lambing, freight on wool and mutton, interest on money invested, etc., $1.50.

That is, the total expense of raising a sheep, according to this statement, is $1.50.

Mr. MADDEN. Who made that statement?

Mr. WILLIS. The statement purports to have been made by W. C. Barnes, representing President Taft. On the next page it says:

WOOL WORTH 91 CENTS.

Average clip of wool per head, 7 pounds, at an average of 13 cents per pound delivered, 91 cents.

Average price of lambs, $3; average increase being figured at about 80 per cent, placed on market, $2.40.

Total receipts, $3.31.

Total net receipts per head, $1.81.

Mr. Barnes says that there may be slight variation by States in the cost of raising sheep and in marketable value as to the wool clip, lambs, and mutton, but that the figures show the average in the territory over which he has traveled. He suggested that the cost of raising sheep might be reduced considerably by better business methods.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I should like to ask what reference this has to the bill under consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. This is general debate, and it does not have to refer to the bill under consideration.

Mr. DYER. It does not throw any light upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. DYER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DYER. The point of order is that the gentleman from Ohio is not speaking to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. OLMSTED. I suppose he means that he is pulling the wool over our eyes. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. Now, if the total cost of raising the sheep is $1.50 and the net receipts are $1.81, obviously the conclusion that is sought to be drawn is that there is a tremendous profit in sheep raising. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] went on to explain very lucidly that those statements could not be true, and I am quite in harmony with his statements. Everyone who has any practical knowledge of the sheep business knows that these supposed statements showing immense profits to the woolgrowers are false and absurd. However, I did not rise to discuss this phase of the question.

I want simply to introduce a letter into the RECORD at this time so that the Tariff Board and its position may be made perfectly clear. I called at the office of the Tariff Board yesterday to find out whether it or its representatives had made any such statement, and I have a letter here which is as follows:

THE TARIFF BOARD, TREASURY BUILDING,
Washington, August 7, 1911.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your personal call this afternoon, I beg to say that on August 1, 1911, I gave out the following statement to the Associated Press:

"No statements regarding cost or profits of sheep raising or woolgrowing have been made with the authority of the Tariff Board. Furthermore, it is impossible for anyone to make accurate statements based on the investigation of the board until the complete figures have been received and tabulated.

"In a telegram received to-day, Mr. W. C. Barnes, an agent of the board, denies emphatically responsibility for statements attributed to him."

Trusting this answers your inquiry, I am,
Very truly, yours,

HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

That makes clear the proposition that neither the Tariff Board nor any representative of it was authorized to make any such statement as this. I wanted to make this statement, otherwise it might be said that we had a report from a representative of the Tariff Board and a representative of the President showing clearly that such and such things were true. Here is an authoritative denial of that proposition. The Tariff Board has not reported, and, as we are all informed, it will not report until December, at which time we can make a real scientific and sensible revision of the tariff. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WILDER].

Mr. WILDER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we would lose quite a portion of the interesting parts of this discussion if we overlooked its amusing features. We appear to be talking about insurance, and these companies that we have been talking about are not doing an insurance business in any ordinary sense of the term. They are simply collection agencies. If you follow them to any extent, not only here but in other districts, you will find that this class of so-called insurance companies do little but collect. It is no part of their plan to pay back much, if anything. When we take into consideration the old-line, thoroughgoing fire insurance companies and go carefully into their reports, we will observe that it costs about 40 per cent for obtaining the business and administration. The first commissions are usually 15 or 20 per cent, and so the whole business from any standpoint of any average profit is something of a losing transaction.

I surmise that of all the premiums, so called, collected by the various companies covered or intended to be covered by this bill, 50 or 75 per cent, and in many instances 90 per cent—and as the gentleman just states, as high as 98 per cent—is sometimes absorbed.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILDER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I want to state that in the hearings on this bill before the District Committee the president of one of these companies stated to the committee that approximately 70 per cent of the amount collected for premiums was used in administration expenses.

Mr. WILDER. I thank the gentleman. That indicates what a huge joke it is when we are talking about insurance business. Is there anyone here who objects to surrounding with all sorts of limitations a business that is abroad taking from 70 to 98 per cent of all they collect for the collectors and owners and then giving such a mere pittance to the poor people—I do not know but I ought to have said that they were swindling associations instead of collecting associations.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILDER. For a few seconds, as I have only four minutes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman inform the committee about what per cent is required to pay the operating expenses in the standard insurance companies, like the New York Life, for instance?

Mr. WILDER. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman. I am more familiar with fire insurance, and the administration expenses of those run up, as I said, as high as 40 per cent. So those who insure can on the average receive only 60 per cent back of what they pay. If these poor people are receiving only from 2 to 30 per cent of what they pay, what a farce it is to call it insurance. We ought to coin some other term for it. So it seems to me from the very nature of this thing, taking companies, as reported, of 100 shares, at 1 cent a share, and compelling them to increase to $25,000 capitalization, that we are going some. I want to predict that if this becomes a law, the 15-cent a week concern will go out of business, because a body of men who can capitalize at $25,000 will not go into collections of 15 cents a week; and besides, the person who would submit to the indignity of 15 cents per week must be awfully poor. There is no harm in squeezing it and crushing out such business from every standpoint. I do not object to cutting it right out. We will not harm the people very much; we will only limit the activities of these collecting agencies; and I am not opposed to safeguarding them out of existence altogether. I surmise that the bill will put an end to this $1 capitalization business, for this class of people and some of these folks who are in this business could not get together much more than a dollar at the same time, and they can not be expected to pay these premiums they receive out to the beneficiaries, because they need the premiums themselves. How do you expect such people to pay out to somebody else that which they need for themselves? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he desires to continue general debate very much longer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am very anxious that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I believe I have five minutes remaining, which I should like to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], and it may be that we can have it understood that general debate shall close at a certain time. How much would the gentleman from Kentucky suggest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should say general debate close at the end of five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that general debate shall close at the expiration of five minutes, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that general debate close in five minutes, and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] have that five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to closing debate, but I do not think that is according to the rule.

Mr. MANN. It is proper in committee to close general debate by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CARLIN. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. To close general debate in five minutes' time, and that to be occupied by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill as far as it goes. It seems to me it could go a little further. The part to which I wish to call attention now is found beginning on line 17, page 3, which provides that—

When the superintendent finds the capital stock or assets of any such company or association impaired to an amount less than required by the provisions hereof he shall at once give notice of this fact to said company or association.

I propose at the proper time to offer an amendment to the effect that if he finds the capital stock impaired at all, he shall give the company notice to quit business. I do not think that a company whose capital stock is impaired ought to be permitted to do anything in the way of an insurance business. It would not be permitted in any State that has an insurance department and insurance laws, and I do not think it ought in the District of Columbia. I shall, therefore, offer an amendment providing that if the superintendent finds the capital stock impaired in any degree or the assets reduced to an amount less than the amount specified in the bill, then he shall give the company notice to make good the impairment or quit business. I have no doubt the chairman and the committee will be willing to accept such an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think the committee will be glad to agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out section 653 thereof and enacting in lieu thereof the following:

"HEALTH, ACCIDENT, AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES OR ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 653. Every corporation, joint-stock company, or association not exempt herein, transacting business in the District of Columbia, which collects premiums, dues, or assessments from its members or from holders of its certificates or policies, and which provide for the payment of indemnity on account of sickness or accident, or a benefit in case of death, shall be known as 'health, accident, and life insurance companies or associations.' Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act, have in assets or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or in both together, not less than $25,000 as a capital or guarantee fund; which assets may be invested in United States, municipal, or railroad bonds, or in real estate, or in mortgages or deeds of trust on real estate, such investments to be approved by the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia. No such health, accident, and life insurance company or association, now or hereafter transacting the business of health, accident, and life insurance, or either or all said kinds of insurance, in the District of Columbia shall issue policies or certificates providing, either singly or in aggregate, a greater accident or death benefit than $500, or a greater weekly indemnity than $20, on any one person unless such company or association have in assets or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or in both together, not less than $100,000 invested and approved as aforesaid. Every such company or association shall pay to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia a sum of money, as tax, equal to 1 per cent of all moneys received from members or policy or certificate holders within the District of Columbia, said tax to be paid on or before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of such income for the year ending December 31 next preceding; and shall also file annually with said superintendent of insurance, on or before the 1st day of March of each year, a sworn statement, on blanks furnished by said superintendent of insurance, showing its true financial condition, income, disbursements, assets, and liabilities on the 31st day of December next preceding, and such other information as said superintendent of insurance may require; and shall pay to the said collector of taxes $10 for filing such statement. Said superintendent of insurance shall have the power to examine from time to time all companies or associations described herein; and when he finds the capital stock or assets of any such company or association impaired to an amount less than required by the provisions hereof he shall at once give notice of said fact to said company or association, and unless said impairment is made good within 60 days after said notice, it shall be the duty of said superintendent to revoke or suspend the license of said company or association until such impairment shall have been made good; and any company or association that issues policies or certificates of insurance as described herein without a license from said superintendent or during a suspension thereof, as herein provided, shall be fined not less than $20 nor more than $100 per day: Provided, That if any such company or association shall feel aggrieved by the decision of said superintendent concerning the investment or impairment of its assets or capital stock, it shall have the right to appeal, within 10 days, from the decision of said superintendent to the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall prescribe rules and regulations for the hearing of said appeal, and their decision shall be final: Provided also, That when any such company or association shall have complied with the provisions contained herein, the superintendent of insurance shall issue to it a license to transact its business in the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall interfere with or abridge the rights of any fraternal beneficial association licensed to transact business under subchapter 12 of chapter 18 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia or incorporated by special act of Congress: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall apply to any relief association, not conducted for profit, composed solely of officers and enlisted men of the United States Army or Navy, or solely of employees of any other branch of the United States Government service, or solely of employees of any individual, company, firm, or corporation."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment, which was heretofore read for information, to be inserted on page 2.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would suggest to the gentleman that a committee amendment comes first, and then his.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, page 4, after the word "Columbia," insert "or any chartered trades union," and line 21, after the word "or," insert the words "any such association."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I move the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman care whether this language in line 21, page 4, "Any such association incorporated by special act of Congress," goes in?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to that, as I have said several times during this discussion, that I do not pretend to know very much about insurance, and when this was up it was submitted to the insurance commissioner and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER], and they discussed it with some members of the Senate committee; and it was acceptable all around, and I know nothing about it more than that.

Mr. MANN. Does it exempt any association that the gentleman knows of?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] thinks it ought not——

Mr. MANN. If it takes care of some existing corporation which ought to have this capital stock, I do not believe in legislating and giving that corporation a monopoly because it happens to have worked Congress some time in the past for a charter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe I would be willing to risk it and adopt the suggestion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I believe in compelling these companies to have capital stock.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It would only add to the safety of it, I think.

Mr. OLMSTED. It already exempts everything that ought to be exempted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We come first to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. MANN. This is part of the committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The words "incorporated by special act of Congress" is not an amendment.

Mr. MANN. If the words "or any such association," in line 21, ought not to be agreed to and ought to be stricken out, that would bring it down to "any chartered trades union."

Mr. OLMSTED. Would not that include "trades union"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The word "such" there carries it back to the subject of chartered trades unions.

Mr. MANN. I think not. I think the words "such association" carry it back to the original description of insurance companies or associations doing business in the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It would not go back farther than the colon there, followed by the words "Provided, however."

Mr. MANN. I am not particular about it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am very desirous of getting the best bill out of it I can.

Mr. MANN. I believe that. I believe these companies ought to have some money.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman make his motion?

Mr. MANN. There is not a motion to be made. The question is on that part of the committee amendment. It is a question of disagreeing or agreeing. I should not agree to the committee amendment on line 21, "any such association," and then strike out the words "or incorporated by special act of Congress."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. You would strike out all in line 21 except the word "union" at the beginning of it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And the words "of Congress," in line 22?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if there is no objection on the part of any other member of the District Committee, I would agree to that.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question? I will ask if you would strike that out if it would not interfere with fraternal organizations, such as the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the proviso that follows that would be taken care of.

Mr. OLMSTED. They are provided for in line 18, on page 4.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Line 18 takes care of fraternal benefit associations.

Mr. DYER. I can not understand why the gentleman should not permit us to take care of chartered trades unions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am quite sure the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] knows more about that than we do.

Mr. MANN. We take care of that.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Would these insurance companies that are organized, like trades unions, be shut out under the provision?

Mr. MANN. The term "or any chartered trades union," as used here, is intended to cover any union that has a charter from a parent organization, and is not intended to apply to a trades union that is incorporated under an act of the legislature or act of Congress. They would be authorized to do a sick-benefit business, which they ought to be authorized to do.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. You do not think it would not apply to any that have already been organized by special act? Suppose you have some that have been organized by special act?

Mr. MANN. That would not make any difference if they are fraternal benefit associations which have been organized by special act, but there are none here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the superintendent of insurance in the District was himself in some doubt about the matters to which he now calls attention.

Mr. MANN. I presume that is true; but I am speaking about the intent of the gentleman who proposed that proposition. That is the purpose of this now.

Mr. OLMSTED. Suppose we vote first on the first committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The amendment offered to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. The division of the committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. So that the vote will be taken on the words in italics, in line 20, "or any chartered trades union."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, before that is done I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question, by courtesy of whoever has the floor. Why is this provision necessary at all? It seems to complicate the entire situation. The proviso starts out by saying that "nothing herein contained shall interfere with or abridge the rights of any fraternal association," and so forth; and then if you bring in these chartered trade unions and organizations incorporated by special acts, that confuses the entire situation. If these various bodies have their rights under the law, why is it necessary to insert this proviso and thus confuse the general intent of the bill? Why not strike the whole proviso out?

Mr. MANN. The fraternal beneficial associations are given certain rights now under the District Code, but that is subject to amendment by Congress, and if we should in this act provide that no association shall do business except in a certain way, it would apply to these associations unless we except them, as this proviso does, from the operation of this act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman thinks that unless the proviso is inserted the rights now existing in the Odd Fellows and various fraternal organizations and trade unions might be limited?

Mr. MANN. That would depend upon the construction of the District Code, construing all of its parts together. But so far as this question is concerned I doubt it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I doubt whether the right of a trade union to operate its beneficial features would be affected by this act.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the first committee amendment reported, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I think those words, "for any chartered trades union"——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first committee amendment will be reported.

Mr. MANN. There are two committee amendments.

Mr. OLMSTED. Let the Clerk read one of them.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4 amend lines 20 and 21 after the word "Columbia" by inserting the words "or any chartered trades union."

Mr. LOBECK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that amendment should come in on line 18 after the words "fraternal beneficial association" after the word "association," because then it comes under the laws of the District of Columbia, under subchapter 12 of chapter 18, which regulates all fraternal associations. That amendment should come in there. Then that finishes that paragraph, and the period would come in after the words "District of Columbia." I think it would come in better there than where it now is. I make the motion, Mr. Chairman, that the words "or any chartered trades union" be inserted on line 18 after the word "association."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that that will not accomplish what the gentleman has in mind, because then it will read, "association or chartered trades union licensed to transact business under subchapter 12 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia." That will not accomplish what is desired.

Mr. OLMSTED. They are not licensed under that chapter.

Mr. LOBECK. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, and I withdraw my amendment.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first committee amendment, beginning on line 20, to insert the words, "or any chartered trades union."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, after the word "or," insert the words "any such association."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Committee will accept in lieu of that amendment one striking out any special association authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. We will have a separate vote on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky offer an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the next committee amendment, to insert the words, "any such association."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the adoption of this language is necessary: "or incorporated by special act of Congress." In reality that should come in after the words "District of Columbia." As I understand it, some of these fraternal associations have been chartered by national organizations which have subordinate lodges here in the District of Columbia. There probably are some of these organizations, also, which have been chartered by Congress that are doing business here and issuing charters to subordinate lodges throughout the United States from the District.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion there?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Even if they are chartered by special act of Congress, they ought not to have rights superior to those chartered under the general law of the District.

Mr. KAHN. No; the provisions of the code refer to fraternal beneficial organizations that are conducting their affairs as lodges here in the District of Columbia. But I fail to find anything in subchapter 12 that refers to any lodge chartered by act of Congress; and it is probable that when the insurance commissioner drafted this bill he wanted to provide for such fraternal organizations as were chartered by Congress, and that were not subject to subchapter 12 of the code.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The District Code, as I understand it, makes provision for licensing fraternal and beneficial associations to transact business in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, does the gentleman think it is desirable to give a special exception to one of those beneficial organizations that has obtained a charter from Congress, thereby invoking applications from all the organizations in the United States to obtain national charters?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know whether that is advisable. It has been done in the past.

Mr. MANN. I understand it has been done quite a few times in the past, on the sole ground that in the application it was stated that it was not possible to obtain a charter in the District, as now constituted, because the incorporators could not live here.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. MANN. And that they desired to get special privileges by reason of that fact. Now, all these fraternal organizations, I think, obtain licenses under the general provisions of the code.

Mr. KAHN. I do not know whether that is the situation or not, or whether they come under some other provision of the code. I am not aware of that.

Mr. Chairman, just one word in conclusion. I think the entire sentence would be improved if the words "or incorporated by special act of Congress" should follow the word "Columbia," in line 20, and then the words "or any chartered trades union" should end the sentence. I think that would be a better form.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, that would limit the fraternal organizations exempt from this statute to those that had incorporation by act of Congress, and nobody wants to do that.

Mr. KAHN. Of course not. I do not think transposing the language would do that. However, it is merely a suggestion, and I do not wish to press the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment, in line 20, page 4, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "or any chartered trades union or any such association."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out in line 21 the words "or incorporated by special act of Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment that I have heretofore sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "association," strike out the words down to and including the word "act" in line 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "After 90 days from the passage of this act any such company or association shall not transact business within the District of Columbia unless it shall."

Mr. DODDS. Mr. Chairman, before that amendment is voted upon I wish to offer a substitute which will take care of the provision that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes care of, and also the provision that has been discussed in relation to the capital and guaranty fund.

Under the language here the capital stock paid in may be a part of the guaranty fund, whether it is on hand or not. Under my amendment there must be $25,000 in cash on hand or in assets. Now, this cash may be made up of the paid-in capital stock or not, but it must be on hand. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commencing with the word "every," in line 6 of page 2, strike out all to the end of line 10 and substitute the following:

"Every such company or association now organized, or that may hereafter be organized, shall, at all times after the expiration of 90 days from the passage of this act, have in cash or other assets, or in both together, not less than $25,000 as a capital or guaranty fund, which cash, with other assets"——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that that is not an amendment to my amendment or a substitute for it.

Mr. DODDS. That takes the place of the language from the word "every," in line 6, down to the end of line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the point of order?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The text not being perfected, the Chair is inclined to think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment can come in after my amendment is voted on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It strikes me that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania reaches the end of the matter in better shape.

Mr. DODDS. It reaches a part of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that there is a contemplated amendment that the capital stock shall not be impaired at all.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 17, after the words "capital stock," strike out down to and including the word "impaired," near the end of line 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of any such company impaired or its assets reduced in value," so that as amended it will read as follows:

"When he finds the capital stock of any such company impaired or its assets reduced in value to amount less than required by the provision herein."

Mr. OLMSTED. That is, if the capital stock is impaired at all, the provision becomes operative, and the superintendent gives notice to the company that it must make it up or quit business.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words: "Or in capital stock fully paid up in cash, or in both together."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Connecticut what the effect of that is?

Mr. TILSON. The effect is this: If the words "capital stock fully paid up" mean anything, they only confuse the meaning of the bill. What we want is not capital stock fully paid up, which may have been dissipated, for that matter, as it may have been honestly paid up and then wasted, but what we want are assets. Capital stock is not an asset at all; it is a liability. If it has been paid up in cash and the cash is there, then the cash is an asset, but the capital stock itself is not. It seems to me that as it appears in the bill it is confusing and ought to be stricken out, instead of attempting to include it as equivalent to assets.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will be provided for in cash, provided the gentleman's amendment is adopted?

Mr. TILSON. Well, it provides for assets, which may be cash or something else. If the gentleman wishes to amend it by saying "in cash or other assets," very well.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman simply strikes out the provision for capital stock being in.

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And requires that cash or assets shall be included?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is a reason why it should not be stricken out. If they have an unimpaired capital stock of $25,000, they ought to be permitted to do business.

Mr. TILSON. Nevertheless capital stock is a liability against the company; it is not an asset at all. It does not protect anybody, and when the assets of the company are reckoned we always find the capital stock on the other side, figured not as an asset, but as a liability.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And the gentleman advocates the chartering of these companies to do business on $1 of capital stock?

Mr. TILSON. Not at all. I believe they must have the assets. It may be cash. If they have paid in $25,000 in cash and it is still there, then the cash is an asset, and I am in favor of having it there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How will it read, if the amendment is adopted?

Mr. TILSON. It will read:

Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act have in assets not less than $25,000, etc.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You come right down to the cash, practically.

Mr. TILSON. No; assets; it may be cash or something else.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that if the capital stock of $25,000 is paid up and unimpaired that there must be that much assets?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; if it has been paid up and is unimpaired, then there will be $25,000 of assets.

Mr. MANN. And that is already provided for in the bill, that it must be paid up and must be unimpaired. Now, under the gentleman's amendment, would it not be quite possible for an insurance company to be organized with $1 of capital stock if it had $25,000 of assets?

Mr. TILSON. If so, I would change that, and say that it must have at least $25,000 in capital stock, and that this must have back of it $25,000 in assets.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but that is not what the gentleman's amendment does. The gentleman admits that if under the terms of the bill it has $25,000 of capital stock paid up, and if that capital stock is unimpaired, it must have $25,000 of assets, but under the gentleman's amendment it may have $25,000 of assets and have no capital stock.

Mr. TILSON. Well, under the bill as it stands, it may have $25,000 of capital stock and no assets.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; because, as the gentleman himself said, it is not possible for the company to have $25,000 of unimpaired capital stock paid up without having that much assets in the form of cash or something else.

Mr. TILSON. That provision does not appear here, so far as the impairment is concerned.

Mr. MANN. But we have just adopted an amendment covering it, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] a moment ago.

Mr. TILSON. Does it precede this paragraph?

Mr. MANN. No; it follows it. We just adopted that a moment ago and I think it covers the case suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, if it is covered later in an amendment that the $25,000 capital stock can not be impaired, then it will amount to the same that my amendment would amount to, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, strike out "have" and insert "has."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is merely to correct what is apparently a grammatical mistake in the preparation of the bill. The company or association is referred to in line 22 in the plural and on page 4, line 7, in the singular. The adoption of this amendment will make the language conform throughout. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 11, page 2, after the word "States," insert the word "or" and strike out the comma after the word "municipal" and strike out the words "or railroads."

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this strikes out railroad bonds as an investment for these companies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise for debate?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For a question. This amendment proposes to strike out the right to have among the assets of the companies railroad bonds and make the assets Federal, State, or municipal bonds. Is that the object?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Well, State bonds are not in here, but municipal and United States bonds are mentioned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the purpose of the amendment is to strike out——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Strike out railroad bonds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman proposes to take from the officers of the company or association discretion to invest any of the proceeds of such company or association in railroad bonds?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman and the committee that this is breaking away a little from the custom of financial institutions. However, if it is thought that concerns of the kind with which we are now dealing ought to be limited, so far as the discretion of the officers is concerned, that may make a difference.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois heard the amendment read which I sent to the Clerk's desk to be read for information on this subject.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No, I did not, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I am not particular whether railroad bonds are included among the securities in which these funds may be invested, but I think that the limitation I place on the kind of railroad bonds they could invest in would be sufficient, and as the gentleman from Illinois has not heard the amendment read I suggest that before a vote is taken that it be read again for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the words "United States" strike out down to and including the word "State," in line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "State, county, municipal bonds, and bonds of the District of Columbia or railroad bonds, but investments in the bonds of railroads shall be limited to the bonds of those railroads which have paid dividends on their capital stocks for the 10 years previous to the date of the investment; or improved real estate or any mortgages on improved real estate, but no loan on real estate shall be made for an amount to exceed 50 per cent of its assessed value."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, stated about the proportional part of the value of real estate to the assessed value, I am willing to increase the percentage from 50 to 70 per cent.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this question, and that is whether or not his amendment will not preclude investments in United States bonds?

Mr. WEEKS. Not at all.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The way I heard the amendment read it would.

Mr. WEEKS. They are provided for in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, railroad bonds, having a fluctuating value as they do, it seems to me, ought not to be included as a part of the investment of companies like those we are proposing to regulate here.

Now, it is questionable whether county bonds ought to be included. There is some difficulty that very frequently arises in reference to the issuance of county bonds—that is, the legality of them—and it is a question, it is true, as to municipal bonds; but it occurs to me that railroad bonds ought not under any circumstances be included in the part of the assets of a company.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if railroad bonds be purchased under the provisions of this act and the market declines, so that their market value is much less, that would be an impairment of their assets, which they would be required to make up. That being the case, does not the gentleman think that if the railroads have paid interest for five years and these companies could get a higher rate of interest by permission to buy such bonds, they ought to be permitted to have it?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That may be partially true. There is another reason why it seems to me that we ought not to permit these assets to be invested in bonds of this character. We have realized in this country in the last few years that the assets of insurance companies, and all other organizations of that kind, have been used largely for the purpose of taking care of certain railroad and other bonds in the country, and that is a further reason why this ought not to be done.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it would be possible to finance the railroad companies of the country if no institution would purchase railroad bonds?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will agree with the gentleman that it would be impossible to finance the railroad companies under those circumstances; but I will say to my colleagues that I believe when we come to invest in the assets that are used for the purpose of accident and life insurance companies, then it ought to be made so safe that there is absolutely no chance to lose upon those investments so as to impair the assets.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but this is not investing the money of the policy holders. This applies to the original investment of the company, to the capital of the company, which they are required to maintain unimpaired. Now, if there is any company that ought to be permitted to invest in railroad bonds it is just such a company as that under such circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is a guaranty to the policy holders of these companies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 3, after the word "shall," strike out the words "have the power to"; and insert after the words, in line 16, "from time to time," the following: "and at least as often as once a year."

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, now that will read, if accepted, in this way:

Said superintendent of insurance shall examine from time to time, and at least as often as once a year, all companies—

And so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe that is a good amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the word "first" before the word "mortgages," in line 12, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, strike out the word "provide" and insert in lieu thereof the word "provides."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is simply to perfect the language of the bill. There should be no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment now which has been read for information twice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 11, after the words "United States," strike out down to and including the word "estate" in line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"State, county, municipal bonds, and bonds of the District of Columbia, or railroad bonds, but investments in the bonds of railroads shall be limited to the bonds of those railroads which have paid dividends on their capital stocks for 10 years previous to the date of the investment; or in improved real estate, or in mortgages on improved real estate, but no loan on real estate shall be made for an amount exceeding 70 per cent of its assessed value."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change that so as to read "first mortgages on real estate," in accordance with the amendment that has just been adopted.

Mr. RAKER. What per cent did the gentleman state?

Mr. WEEKS. Seventy per cent.

Mr. RAKER. I think that is too high. No man can do business with the limit fixed at 70 per cent. Make it 60 per cent.

Mr. WEEKS. Seventy per cent of two-thirds of the real value would be a little less than 50 per cent of the real value. I do not know of any State which limits the assessment to 50 per cent.

Mr. MANN. It would be less than 50 per cent.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman from Illinois is correct in his figures. It is 46 per cent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks he has fully covered that—"ten years previous" for the payment of dividends?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to insert the word "immediately" before the word "previous."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts modifies his amendment, as stated. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as so modified.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, without objection, as it will be amended by the two modifications suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 11, after the words "United States," strike out down to and including the word "estate," in line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"State, county, municipal bonds, and bonds of the District of Columbia, or railroad bonds, but investments in the bonds of railroads shall be limited to the bonds of those railroads which shall have paid dividends on their capital stocks for 10 years immediately previous to the date of the investment; or in improved real estate, or in first mortgages on improved real estate; but no loan on real estate shall be made for an amount exceeding 70 per cent of its assessed value.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman where he gets the idea that they are assessed only two-thirds of their real value here in Washington?

Mr. WEEKS. That is the fact, I believe, as was stated on the floor by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Very well. What is the purpose of leaving out deeds of trust?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think that that is the customary method of taking real-estate securities. I do not think it would be a hardship on these companies to leave out deeds of trust.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts as modified.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend page 1, line 5, by striking out the word "enacting" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "inserting."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "enacting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "inserting."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SIMS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 2495) to define and classify health, accident, and death-benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, and had instructed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill S. 2495, just reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there a demand for a separate vote on any amendment? If not, the amendments will be submitted in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF APPEAL BY DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TO SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8653, to give the District of Columbia a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in patent cases.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter any final judgment or decree of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia may be reexamined, affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error or appeal, in all cases wherein is involved the validity or infringement of any patent in which the District of Columbia, or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or a contractor doing work for the District of Columbia under a contract where said commissioners assume responsibility for infringement of patent rights, or any of them, are parties in interest, and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill is this: For a number of years concrete pavements have been constructed all over the country, and one company is claiming to have a patent on the right to make cement pavements. The Commissioners of the District asked the passage of this bill so that if, in the construction of concrete streets, they are confronted by people who say that they hold patent rights on this kind of work, the commissioners may go to the Supreme Court of the United States and test the validity of a claim to patent rights.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that the mere matter of laying cement pavement does not require a patent. All one has to do is to mix the cement and the stone and the gravel, and that covers the case. There are just as many ways of laying cement pavement as there are places in which cement pavements can be laid.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, last year I had my attention called to the matter of pavement which was being laid by the South Park commissioners of Chicago. They were then laying a pavement which was laid somewhat similar in the city of Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. A Telford pavement?

Mr. MANN. No; it was not. There was a claim that there was a patent, and the South Park commissioners were disregarding the rights of the patentee—the same thing that happened here in the city of Washington. It was desirable here to give the commissioners the right to take that case or any similar case to the Supreme Court of the United States, leaving it so that the Commissioners of the District have control of the matter, and that anyone who may desire to get a patent case to the Supreme Court of the United States can not do it by merely bringing the suit in the District of Columbia. It is only when the commissioners permit it that it can go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that putting in the language on page 2, "and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed," is very dangerous. Conferring the power in the first part of this bill is sufficient to permit the case to go to the Supreme Court. That bill is inconsistent with the existing law relating to appeals in patent cases, and to put in the provision that all laws inconsistent with this law are repealed would repeal the existing provisions of law governing appeals on patent cases, and is not necessary at all. I hope the gentleman will yield to me or that he himself will offer an amendment to strike that out of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "interest," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ANNIE M. MATTHEWS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11545) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to place the name of Annie M. Matthews on the pension roll of the police and firemen's pension fund, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the bill, H. R. 11545, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman in reference to an amendment to the bill. As I understand it, the circumstances in this case render the proposition very meritorious to give this woman the same rights which she would have, if she had technically complied with the provisions of the law, to be placed on the pension rolls, but the gentleman knows that the pension fund is not sufficient to pay all the persons on the pension rolls the full amount due to them under the law, whereas this provision would require that this pensioner should be paid the full amount that is paid to the widows or mothers of ordinary patrolmen. I ask the gentleman whether he would be willing to strike out in line 8 the language, "and pay her during her lifetime the sum of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of"; and then strike out in lines 9 and 10 "from the police and firemen's pension fund," so that it will read:

Authorized, etc., to place on the pension roll, etc., the name of Annie M. Matthews, etc., at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I think that should be done in order to put her on an equal footing with the others.

Mr. MANN. She would be just like anybody else, then, on the pension rolls.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll of the police and firemen's pension fund the name of Annie M. Matthews, mother of Hugh C. Matthews, late private, Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, and pay her, during her lifetime, the sum of $25 per month from the police and firemen's pension fund.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, then I move those amendments which I have just suggested.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out all of line 8 after the word "Columbia" and insert "at the rate of."

Page 1, line 9, strike out all after the word "month" down to the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendments will be considered together. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARLIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio, for 10 days, on account of the serious illness of his father.

To Mr. CONRY, on account of illness.

To Mr. KITCHIN, for an indefinite time, on account of serious illness in family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. MCLAUGHLIN to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies thereof, all papers filed in connection with the following bills, no adverse report having been made thereon:

William Feavel (H. R. 31506, 61st Cong., 3d sess.);

Catherine C. Estes (H. R. 30712, 61st Cong., 3d sess.);

Henry Burt (H. R. 32247, 61st Cong., 3d sess.);

Carlton M. Dodge (H. R. 32716, 61st Cong., 3d sess.); and Jeptha Wright (H. R. 32508, 61st Cong., 3d sess.).

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Wednesday, August 9, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, with a favorable recommendation, draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Mr. José Pasos Diaz, the son of President Diaz, of Nicaragua, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point (H. Doc. No. 99), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13277) to increase the limit of cost of the public building authorized to be constructed at Gettysburg, Pa., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 138), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13367) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1908, by striking out certain words from the clause authorizing a new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 134), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9048) to remit the duty on pictoral windows to be imported by the Gate of Heaven Church, South Boston, Mass., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 139), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 9, 1911.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we rejoice that Thou art Lord alike of life and of death. We thank Thee for the assurance that neither life with its joys nor death with its sorrows shall separate us from Thee, who has been our dwelling place in all generations.

For the life and services of Thy servant whom Thou hast called to Thine higher service we render Thee sincere thanks. In our deep sorrow we turn to Thee, for Thou alone canst help. Consecrate to us, we pray Thee, our loss, and graciously be near unto those to whom this sorrow is most deep.

So may God our Father, who hath loved us and hath given us eternal comfort and good hope through grace, comfort our hearts and establish them in every good word and in every good work. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, August 7, when, on request of Mr. CULLOM and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR WILLIAM P. FRYE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the Senate the death of my colleague, Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, for 30 years a distinguished Member of this body and for 15 years its President pro tempore. He died yesterday at his home in Lewiston, Me.

I fully appreciate the profound sorrow which his death has occasioned in the hearts of the Members of this body, for I have come to know through my short experience here the affectionate regard in which he was held by Members upon both sides of the Chamber.

The present, overshadowed by the gloom of death, is not the appropriate time for any extended remarks upon his distinguished public services and his eminent character, but at a proper time I shall ask that the Senate temporarily suspend its business that fitting tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

At the present time I offer the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Maine.

The resolutions (S. Res. 131) were read and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE, late a Senator from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. FRYE at his late home in Lewiston, Me.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these proceedings to the House of Representatives and request the House to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed under the second resolution Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. CULLOM, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. BACON, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. WETMORE, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. WARREN, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, and Mr. DILLINGHAM as the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to, and (at 12 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 10, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 9, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, that the world in general is beginning to appreciate and place the proper estimate on values. A little bit of selfishness is too much, while a whole lot of generosity is not enough. A little bit of war is too much, while a whole lot of peace is not enough. A little bit of hate is too much, while a whole lot of love is not enough. The world may have too much selfishness, but it can never have too much generosity; it may have too much war, but it can never have too much peace; it may have too much hate, but it can never have too much love. Hence we pray that the things which make for evil may diminish, while the things which make for righteousness may increase, that Thy kingdom may indeed come and Thy will be done in the hearts of all men, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 14) to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 1. A joint resolution to amend certain appropriation acts approved March 4, 1911.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday and the Clerk will take up the call where it rests on the call of committees.

When the Committee on Printing was called,

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina calls up the following concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 6.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the hearings held before the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission be printed as a public document, and that 3,500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, this Employers' Liability Commission have completed their report and——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this has to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that this concurrent resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois to reserve his objection——

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve the objection, but I would like to ask the gentleman if he is willing to accept an amendment to increase the number of copies from 3,500 to 16,000?

Mr. FINLEY. I did not hear the gentleman's remark.

Mr. MANN. This resolution provides for the printing of 3,500 copies of the Handbook of the American Indian.

Mr. FINLEY. That is not the bill at all.

Mr. MANN. I thought that was the resolution.

Mr. FINLEY. No; the resolution is a Senate resolution to print the report of the Employers' Liability Commission.

Mr. MANN. What is the number of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the number.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 6.

Mr. MANN. There is no printed report of it. I suppose it has just been handed in, and I reserve an objection.

Mr. FINLEY. It is only to have some printing done for the use of the House, the Senate, and the commission.

Mr. MANN. It is a privileged resolution then?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not in order to-day.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order which the gentleman makes?

Mr. MANN. That it is a privileged resolution, and privileged resolutions are not in order on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Printing be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman from South Carolina call up resolution No. 2?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understand there is resolution No. 2 on the calendar, if the gentleman wants to take it up.

Mr. MANN. That is a resolution of interest to everybody in the House.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not care to call up that resolution at present.

Mr. MANN. Then, I object to passing the committee.

Mr. FINLEY. I have nothing further at present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects to passing the Committee on Printing without prejudice. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk proceeded with the call.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to call up House concurrent resolution No. 11, with a favorable report from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the committee has been passed.

Mr. GARRETT. It has not been passed.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not know that another committee had been called by the Clerk.

Mr. MANN. The committee has been called and passed and another committee called and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions has been passed.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we return to the call of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions. There was so much confusion we could not hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent that the House return to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I may say that the House was unusually quiet while those committees were being called and everybody could hear. I would like to ask the gentleman what resolution or bills he desires to call up?

Mr. HEFLIN. I really did not intend to call up the resolution at this time. The resolution extending an invitation to foreign countries to attend the exposition to be held at San Diego, Cal., is on the calendar, and a resolution inviting foreign countries to attend the celebration of the completion of the Florida East Coast Railroad, which connects the mainland with the city of Key West, in the State of Florida.

Mr. MANN. That is for the purpose of advertising Standard Oil money, I believe?

Mr. HEFLIN. I never heard of that before. It is certainly the completion of a great engineering enterprise. I will state further to the gentleman that a moment ago, when this committee was reached, I asked the Speaker's clerk to allow it to be passed for the present. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] probably did not hear that.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question? Does the passage of this resolution involve the expenditure of any money on the part of the Government?

Mr. HEFLIN. None whatever. It is approved by the Secretary of State.

Mr. SIMS. Does it involve, directly or indirectly, the expenditure of any money?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not a cent. The resolution provides that it shall not cost the Government anything.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has his two resolutions on the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] for a special order, and I expect that will be reached in due time. In order that we may reach business of importance before the House on this calendar, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

The Clerk further proceeded with the call of committees.

Mr. ADAMSON (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I would be glad to dispose of the remaining bridge bills that were not reached on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may call them up.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK, BIG SANDY RIVER, W. VA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up first the bill (H. R. 4682) authorizing the construction of a railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Glenhayes Station, in Wayne County, W. Va. It is House Calendar No. 17.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4682) authorizing the construction of a railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Glenhayes Station, in Wayne County, W. Va.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Glenhayes Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of West Virginia, it successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or within 1 mile of the station of Glenhayes, in Wayne County, W. Va. (where the same forms the boundary line between the States of Kentucky and West Virginia), in the State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Strike out, in the title, the words "railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot."

Strike out, on page 1, line 4, the word "it" and insert in lieu thereof the word "its."

Strike out, on page 1, line 5, the word "they."

Strike out, on page 1, line 6, the words "railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or."

Strike out, on page 1, line 7, the word "foot."

Insert, on page 1, line 8, after the word "River," the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Strike out, on page 1, line 8, after the word "or," the words "within one mile of the station of."

Insert, on page 1, line 9, before the word "Glenhayes," the word "near."

Strike out, on page 1, lines 9, 10, and 11, the words "(where the same forms the boundary line between the States of Kentucky and West Virginia), in the State of West Virginia.

Insert, on page 1, line 13, after the word "waters," the words "approved March 23, 1906."

Add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Unless there is a demand for a separate vote on each one of these amendments the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the construction of a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Glenhayes Station, in Wayne County, W. Va."

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SNAKE RIVER, OREG.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take up next Calendar No. 18, the bill (H. R. 7690) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Snake River at the town of Nyssa, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7690) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Snake River at the town of Nyssa, Oreg.

Be it enacted, etc., That the county commissioners of Malheur County, State of Oregon, and the town of Nyssa, Malheur County, Oreg., their successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon and foot bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Snake River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at the town of Nyssa, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "Oregon," in line 9, page 1, the words "in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906."

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is demanded on the amendments the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up, by the same authority, the bill (H. R. 2954) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Arkansas River, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to lay that bill on the table and substitute for it the Senate bill, which is identical in terms.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill will be laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia where the Senate bill is and what is the number of it?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is Senate bill 1627.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will suspend until the Chair can announce the situation. The gentleman asks that the House bill just reported be laid on the table, and he moves the passage of the corresponding Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. He calls up the Senate bill, as he has the right to do.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House bill will lie on the table, and the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 1627) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across and over the Arkansas River, and for other purposes, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Muskogee & Fort Gibson Bridge Co., a corporation of the State of Oklahoma, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across and over the Arkansas River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the city of Muskogee, Muskogee County, Okla., in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, MINGO COUNTY, W. VA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11477) authorizing the construction of a railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Blackberry, Kentucky & West Virginia Coal and Coke Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot bridge, and approaches thereto, across Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at the point where Blackberry Creek empties into the said river, at or within 1½ miles of the station of Matewan, Mingo County, W. Va. (where the same forms the boundary line between the States of Kentucky and West Virginia), in the State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments proposed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Insert, after the word "at," on page 1, line 9, the words "a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near."

Strike out, in line 10, page 1, the words "at or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Strike out, in lines 11 and 12, page 1, and line 1, page 2, the words "where the same forms the boundary line between the States of Kentucky and West Virginia, in the State of West Virginia."

On page 2, line 3, after the word "waters," add the words "approved March 23, 1906."

Add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is demanded on some particular amendment or amendments, the Chair will put them in gross.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment.

Mr. MANN. In line 7, on page 1, I move to strike out the words "railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 7, strike out "railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think it was clearly an inadvertence on the part of the committee that they did not offer an amendment striking out those words.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend the title by striking out of it the words "railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by striking out the words "railroad, tramroad, conveyor, wagon, or foot."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6738) to authorize the St. Louis-Kansas City Electric Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the town of St. Charles, Mo.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one which I understand was introduced at the request of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to move to lay that bill on the table, because a similar one was passed yesterday.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask unanimous consent to pass it for the present, until we can be sure about that.

Mr. MANN. It was a different bill that was passed.

The SPEAKER. I do not want to have that bill passed. I prefer to have it laid on the table.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS HIWASSEE RIVER AT CHARLESTON AND CALHOUN, TENN.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7263) to authorize the counties of Bradley and McMinn, Tenn., by authority of the county court, to construct a bridge across the Hiwassee River at Charleston and Calhoun, in said county.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Bradley and McMinn, Tenn., by authority of their county courts, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Hiwassee River at the town of Charleston, in Bradley County, to the town of Calhoun, immediately across the Hiwassee River, in McMinn County, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Amend the bill as follows:

Insert, after the word "at," on page 1, line 6, the words "a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near."

Insert, after the word "River," on page 1, line 8, the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is demanded on the committee amendments the Chair will put them in gross.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice on page 1, line 7, the language reads "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the town of Charleston, in Bradley County, to the town of Calhoun." I suggest that to make the language proper it should read "from the town of Charleston to the town of Calhoun."

Mr. ADAMSON. That language is a clerical error.

Mr. MANN. Not of the committee, but of the War Department. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the first amendment by striking out the words "at or near" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "from."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 7 the words "at or near" and insert the word "from."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the other committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Georgia want this second amendment in? You already have it in at one point.

Mr. ADAMSON. No; I consider that entirely unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the second committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the second committee amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK RIVER NEAR COLONA FERRY, ILL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8146) to construct a bridge across Rock River, at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. CROIX RIVER, WIS. AND MINN.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11723) permitting the building of a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River, between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Twin City & Lake Superior Railway Co., a railway corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, its successors and assigns, to build a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River from a point on the south bank of said river in the vicinity of the section line between sections 5 and 6, township 40 north, range 17 west, Burnett County, Wis., to a point on the north bank of said river in the vicinity of the section line between sections 5 and 6, township 40 north, range 17 west, in Pine County, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1896.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless said bridge herein authorized be commenced within one year and completed within two years from and after the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Amend the bill as follows:

Insert, after the word "point," on page 1, line 7, the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

Strike out, in line 2, page 2, the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-six" and insert in lieu thereof the words "nineteen hundred and six."

Strike out, in line 5, page 2, the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia if section 2 of the bill as drawn is not entirely unnecessary?

Mr ADAMSON. I have no doubt of it, but the gentleman insisted upon putting it in. I think it is entirely unnecessary to repeat in the bill provisions that are in the general act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out section 2.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend by changing section 3 to section 2.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to change section 3 to section 2.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Georgia if he would object, after the bill is passed, to amending the title so that it would indicate the counties between which this bridge is to be built. We passed on Monday a bill with precisely the same title that this bill has, and there I offered an amendment, which was agreed to, fixing the counties, so that one can distinguish between the two bills by an examination of the titles, which means that when the index is made up to the Statutes at Large you can find the bill by the index, but if you have two bills with precisely the same title, but covering entirely different subjects, it makes it confusing.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the author of the bill, to reply to that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title by striking out the words "the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Burnett County, Wis., and Pine County, Minn."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the title.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT PRAIRIE DU CHIEN.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 850, to amend an act entitled "An act to legalize and establish a pontoon railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa," approved June 6, 1874.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 6, 1874, legalizing and declaring a lawful structure the pontoon railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, Wis., be, and is hereby, so amended as to permit its rebuilding and relocation, with pontoon draw openings in the two channels of said river, of shorter length: Provided, That the bridge shall be rebuilt in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable streams," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This is to amend an old act which was to legalize and establish a pontoon railway bridge across the Mississippi River at two places, so as to permit, as I understand, the rebuilding and relocation of the bridge at Prairie du Chien. There seems to be no other information given in reference to the matter.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is not the Senate report there?

Mr. MANN. The Senate report is not very satisfactory in so far as it gives information.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I will ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] to reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Who owns this bridge? There is nothing in the original act and nothing in this act apparently to indicate that, and I think we ought to know in reference to that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Milwaukee Railway Co. is the owner of the bridge. They have a bridge there now, and this is to authorize the construction of a new bridge. If it is constructed under the old act of 1874 they would be compelled to construct a bridge of antiquated type, and they desire to construct one under more modern plans than under the old act. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS CALUMET RIVER, IND.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2878) to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Calumet River, in the State of Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2878) to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Calumet River, in the State of Indiana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the States of Indiana and Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Calumet River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in the northeast quarter of section 3, township 36 north, range 8 west of the second principal meridian, in Lake County, in the State of Indiana, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER, ARK.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2766.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2766) to authorize the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. to construct and operate a bridge across the St. Francis River in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the States of Missouri and Arkansas, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across and over the St. Francis River in the State of Arkansas at such point in section 25, township 3 north, range 4 east, in Lee County, in said State, suitable to the interests of navigation, as may hereafter be selected by said company for crossing said river with its railway line, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice in the report of the Chief of Engineers on this bill he says:

In this connection it is deemed proper to invite attention to the fact that by an act approved February 18, 1903, Congress authorized the Memphis, Helena & Louisiana Railway Co. to build a bridge across the St. Francis River at the location specified in the bill under consideration. It is assumed that the bridge thus authorized has not been constructed. If so, the act has expired by limitation and the measure now proposed is probably intended to replace it.

I think the Chief of Engineers is subject to criticism for not knowing whether the bridge authorized by a previous act has been constructed. That is what these bills are referred to him for, for information, and he has facilities for ascertaining that fact officially throughout the country. Now, it is proposed here, without knowing, so far as the House is informed, to grant one company a right to build a bridge where previously they have granted another company at the same place the right to build a bridge. Well, I am going to assume what the Chief of Engineers did, because I have no other way of ascertaining except through Members of the House. When these bills are referred to the War Department they ought to ascertain the facts and report them to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it is true we have no definite official information, but through outside sources we understand the assumption is correct, and therefore we felt authorized to report the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEND OREILLE RIVER, WASH.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask now to take up the bill S. 144, Calendar No. 41.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 144) to legalize a bridge across the Pend Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Idaho & Washington Northern Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Idaho, its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate a bridge and approaches thereto now constructed across the Pend Oreille River, at or near where said river flows through Box Canyon in Stevens County, in the State of Washington, such maintenance and operation to be subject to, and in accordance with, the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War the bridge as built provides suitable and proper facilities for present and prospective navigation and is in all respects satisfactory to navigation interests; and if, in their judgment, any changes in said bridge are necessary to meet the aforesaid conditions, such changes shall be immediately made by the said company at its own expense: Provided further, That drawings showing the plans and location of the said bridge as built shall be filed in the War Department within 30 days of the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I question very much whether this bill ought to be passed at all. We provided in the general bridge act for certain powers and authority on the part of the Secretary of War, and provided that the applicant for a bridge shall file an application and specifications, with maps of the surrounding ground. We passed a bill two years ago, at the special session then, August 8, granting to this company, the Idaho & Washington Northern Railway, to build a bridge at this place across the river in accordance with the general bridge act. Under that act they were authorized to commence work within one year. All they had to do within the year was to file their plans and specifications and probably receive the approval of the War Department and commence the work within the year; but with an utter disregard of the law, and possibly—I do not know—but possibly to obtain better terms than they could obtain from the War Department, they proceeded to build the bridge without complying with the provisions of the law, without filing their plans and specifications with the War Department and receiving the approval of that department.

The War Department reports, under date of December 24, 1910, more than a year after the bridge has been authorized, that several months after the expiration of the time limit for commencing construction the grantee applied to the department for approval of plans for the location of the structure, which application, under the law as it stands, could not be given favorable consideration. Moreover, within the past few days, since the aforesaid application was received and denied, it has come to the knowledge of the department that the bridge has already been built, having been completed in October last, two months before the plans were submitted. Why the department was not advised of this fact before, why the grantee failed to comply with the law, is not known. The character of the bridge built is also unknown. Now, while this bill provides that the bridge must be suitable to the interests of navigation, it is a very different thing for these gentlemen to complete a bridge regardless of prior approval by the War Department, and afterwards obtain approval by Congress in the face of the law, subject to the department ordering the removal of the bridge if it is unsuitable to the interests of navigation. I think some gentleman ought to give some explanation of this flagrant disregard of the law before we pass a bill condoning the offense.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to consume much time of the House in defending this proposition. There may have been a good deal of ignorance. I do not know whether or not there was any contrariness or willful disregard of the law. It has not been made apparent, but the situation, as I understand it, is that a bridge has been built not in conformity with the law. The question is, Shall the War Department order the removal or destruction of that bridge or shall it be legalized? It appears to us that it is better to permit the owners to conform to the law, have their specifications approved, comply with the requirements of the War Department, and go on and use a legal bridge.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was read a third time, and, having been read a third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the various bills reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee were passed was laid on the table.

WATERSHED OF NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up House joint resolution 117. I was absent when the Committee on Agriculture was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to the Committee on Agriculture, on the ground that he was absent when the committee was first called.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire the title of the bill which the gentleman desires to call up?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will suspend. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] that the Committee on Agriculture has not been reached on the call.

Mr. LAMB. Thank you, sir. I was informed that it had.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire in what order these committees are being called.

The SPEAKER. They are being called seriatim from the printed list, beginning where the call rested.

Mr. GARRETT. They are called in accordance with the way the committees are named in the book of rules.

The SPEAKER. They are being called in the regular order.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Accounts was the first committee called. That was where the call began, and it goes around until we get back to the Committee on Accounts, if there is sufficient time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. They are not called alphabetically. They are called in the regular order. The Clerk will call the next committee.

IMPROVEMENT OF BLACK WARRIOR RIVER, ALA.

Mr. SPARKMAN (when the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 943, Calendar No. 35.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this is just the time to do it or not, but I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, it being on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to that. This is one of the most important bills of its kind that has been before the House for years.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering Senate bill 943.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House automatically goes into Committee of the Whole. It does not require a motion.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made that the House goes into Committee of the Whole automatically. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAGE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 943. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate bill 943, an act to improve navigation on Black Warrior River, in the State of Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object. The bill has just been reported, and I would like to have time to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 943) to improve navigation on Black Warrior River, in the State of Alabama.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of improving navigation of the Black Warrior River above Lock 17 to Cordova and as far up said river as the foot of Sanders Shoals, 5 miles above Cordova and 56.8 miles above Lock 17, and for the purpose of aiding and developing the water power at Locks 16 and 17, in cooperation with the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co. (hereinafter styled "the company"), a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of developing the water power of said river and supplying the public with same, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to change the detailed plans and specifications for the construction of Lock and Dam 17 so as to increase the height of the pool level over the dam crest of Lock 17 to a height of 63 feet above the pool level of Lock 16, so as to render unnecessary the building of Locks 18 and 19, as now proposed.

SEC. 2. That in order to enable the Secretary of War to exercise the discretion above conferred, he is hereby authorized and directed to have prepared such detailed plans and estimates as may be necessary to pass upon the construction of Lock and Dam 17, the crest of said dam to be 63 feet above the pool level of Lock and Dam 16, at the same time creating a slack-water pool submerging all shoals on the Black Warrior River to the foot of Sanders Shoals and furnishing not less than 7 feet of water at Cordova and also at the foot of Sanders Shoals, and also thereby providing for and extending navigation up the Locust Fork of the Black Warrior River as far as the pool level will reach to the mouth of Village Creek, near Palos, located in section 28, township 16, range 5 west, in Jefferson County, Ala., by extending the slack-water pool and submerging all shoals at low-water stages to a point near the mouth of said Village Creek.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to suspend operations during investigations and to enter into supplemental agreements with the present contractors for Lock and Dam 17 providing for the annulment of existing contracts or for their modification so as to cover the work required for the construction of the higher lock and dam, as he may deem most advantageous for the interests of the United States.

SEC. 4. That should the construction of dam at site 17 be found advisable the appropriations and authorizations heretofore made for the costs of locks and dams on the Warrior River shall be available for the construction of Dam 17 and such locks as may be necessary to overcome the lift between the pools created by Dams 16 and 17.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of securing the performances and obligations of the company imposed by this act the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to enter into a contract with said company for the purpose of more efficiently carrying out the stipulations and performances herein mentioned. And it shall be provided in said contract that for and in consideration of the aid to and improvement of the system of navigation of the Black Warrior River by the company from the construction and operation of its plant and works the company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to construct, maintain, own, and operate, at its own cost, in connection with Dams and Locks 16 and 17, for a period of 99 years, electrical power stations and other structures, including turbo-generator intakes, equipped with double gates and valves at a level in said dam with the turbine waterwheel penstocks, for the development of water power for industrial and other purposes, and for converting to its own use, benefit, and profit the power created with the surplus water not needed for lockage, including the right to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of said power to persons and private and municipal corporations and associations: Provided, That the company shall furnish, free of charge to the Government, at Locks 16 and 17, all power necessary for the operation of said locks, gates, and valves, and for the lighting of the Government stations and houses situated at said locks. And the said contract shall further provide for the payment by the company to the Government of an annual rental for its use of the water power at Dams and Locks 16 and 17 at the rate of $1 per annum per horsepower realized and developed from the normal flow of the river, for a period of 20 years, which rate shall be subject to readjustment by the Secretary of War at the end of that period and thereafter at the end of every 10-year period; and payment for the power created at each lock shall begin one year after the lock shall be finished and ready for transportation and power, and shall be made on the basis of a minimum of 1,200 horsepower daily per annum at Lock 16 and 3,800 horsepower daily per annum at Lock 17.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to dispense with the further reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is required.

Mr. HAY. That is what I desired. I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object. I objected before. I would like to have time enough to read the bill. Somebody certainly ought to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

And provided further, That the company shall have ingress and egress over Government lands for the construction and operation of its plants and works and the right to use Government lands at or near said locks for the erecting of power houses and appurtenances in connection therewith. It shall be provided further in the contract that the company shall transfer to the Government flowage rights over all lands that will be temporarily or permanently overflowed in connection with said improvements of Lock and Dam 17.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate bill and to have read in lieu thereof the substitute offered by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The CHAIRMAN. That question has been submitted before and objection has been made, but the Chair will submit it again.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear objection made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the Senate bill and to have the House substitute read in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the Chair that this bill was reported into the House only on the day before yesterday. A correct reprint of the bill has appeared in the document room only within the last 15 minutes, and it seems to me going a long way to avoid reading a bill of this character before Members have had a chance to examine it, and then to proceed to a discussion and vote on the bill without a chance having been given for the reading of it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that inasmuch as it is proposed to consider the House bill instead of the Senate bill, it would be proper to have the House bill read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this bill must go into conference if passed in the House, it is quite important that the Members have an opportunity to know what the differences are between the House and the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the bill is before the Members on their desks.

Mr. MANN. Yes. They can read it while the Clerk reads it; but if the Clerk does not read it, how can the Members read it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

It shall be further provided in said contract that the company, its successors and assigns, shall pay to the Government an additional rental or royalty of 50 cents per horsepower per annum for all power sold in addition to the 5,000 horsepower above mentioned for additional power created at Locks 16 and 17 by the company's storage and impounding dam, power stations, and works, to be located at the head of Sanders Shoals, on the Black Warrior River, and more particularly described as being in the center of section 23, township 14, range 6 west, in the northeast corner of Walker County, Ala., 56.3 miles above Lock 17; the Government to have free access to the company's books and power and curve load sheets for the purpose of ascertaining and calculating the amount of additional power produced and sold by the company from its storage reservoirs at said locks, it being understood that, beginning with the year 1920, the minimum rental to be paid for to the Government by the company shall be on the basis of 15,000 horsepower. And the contract shall further provide that the works herein contemplated, including the storage reservoirs, shall be commenced within one year and completed within 10 years from date of approval hereof.

SEC. 6. That in the exercise of the authority granted to the company herein or by said contract the company shall conform to such regulations as may be imposed by the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and of the property and other interests of the United States. The company shall at no time disturb the pool level made by the erection of Dam 16, nor shall the pool level of Dam 17 be drawn down below 63 feet above the crest of Dam 16, but in order to create a storage surplus for water-power purposes the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, permit flashboards or a removable crest not exceeding 3 feet in height to be installed on Dam 17 by the company, at its own expense; and at no time shall the company make any claim against the United States for failure of water power from any cause whatsoever. That the work and improvements herein provided for shall be executed under the direction and with the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, the structures provided for being always subject to the provisions and requirements of this act and to such stipulations as may be imposed by Congress or by the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and property and other interests of the United States; and to insure the performance by the company of the acts and obligations imposed upon it by said contract, the Secretary of War may require the company to execute a bond in such an amount and with such surety as he may determine to be necessary. Whenever the company shall have acquired and transferred to the United States Government all lands to be flooded and temporarily overflowed and erected power stations sufficient to supply the Government with all necessary power to light and operate said locks, so much of said bond as was required for the performance of said acts shall cease or be reduced to an amount not to exceed $50,000.

SEC. 7. That nothing shall be done in the use of the water from said dam or otherwise to interfere with or in any way impede or retard the operations of said locks or the proper and complete navigation of the river at all times, nor in any way to interfere with the use and control of the same by the United States Government or the maintenance of the water surface above the dam at the established minimum pool level; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the use of said water power and the operations of the plant and force employed in connection therewith, so far as the same applies to the operation of the locks.

SEC. 8. That all repairs, renewals, and other necessary expenditures upon the works, which the company shall be allowed to construct exclusively for the use of power generation, shall be made by the company, so that their condition shall at no time be inimical to the interests of navigation: Provided, That in case navigation interests be threatened at any time by the condition of such works, and the company shall not immediately respond to the demand of the Secretary of War for their repair, the said Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to enter upon such works and cause them to be repaired in a proper manner, and to charge the cost of such repairs against the company, and to collect the same from the company.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way interfering with the jurisdiction over and control by the United States of the navigable portion of the Warrior or Black Warrior River, and the navigation and traffic thereon, the control of which the United States hereby reserves to itself, and of the dams and locks therein to be erected for the joint purpose of navigation and water power, nor of repealing or modifying any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of navigation.

SEC. 10. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to change the detailed plans and specifications for the construction of Lock and Dam 17, on the Black Warrior River, Ala., so as to increase the height of the pool level over the dam crest of Lock 17 to a height of 63 feet above the pool level of Lock 16, so as to render unnecessary the building of Locks 18 and 19, as now authorized, and so as to provide for the extension of slack water up the Mulberry and Locust Forks of the Black Warrior River to Sanders Shoals and Nichols Shoals, respectively, and for the development of water power.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to have prepared such detailed plans and estimates as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act, and he is further authorized in his discretion to suspend operations during his investigations and to enter into supplemental agreements with the present contractors for Lock and Dam 17, providing for the annulment of existing contracts or for their modification so as to cover the work required for the construction of the higher lock and dam, as he may deem most advantageous for the interests of the United States.

"SEC. 3. Should the construction of the higher dam at site 17 be found advisable the appropriations and authorizations heretofore made for the cost of locks and dams on the Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers, Ala., shall be available for the construction of Dam 17 and such locks as may be necessary to overcome the lift between the pools created by Dams 16 and 17.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to enter into a contract with the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of carrying out the stipulations and performances herein mentioned. It shall be provided in said contract that the company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to construct, maintain, own, and operate, at its own cost, in connection with Dams and Locks 16 and 17, for a period of 50 years from the time fixed in this act for completion of the works herein authorized, electrical power stations and other structures for the development of water power for industrial and other purposes, and for converting to its own use, benefit, and profit the power developed with the surplus water not needed for lockage, including the right to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of said power: Provided, That the company shall furnish and deliver, free of charge to the Government, at Locks 16 and 17, all power necessary for the operation of said locks and for the lighting of the Government grounds and houses situated at said locks. The said contract shall further provide for the payment by the company to the Government of an annual rental for its use of the water power developed at Dams 16 and 17. For a period of 20 years the rental shall be at the rate of $1 per annum per horsepower developed, which rate shall be subject to readjustment by the Secretary of War at the end of that period and thereafter at the end of every 10-year period. Payment for the power developed at each dam shall begin one year after the locks and dam at 17 shall have been completed. Beginning with the year 1920, the minimum rental to be paid to the Government by the company shall be on the basis of 15,000 horsepower. The company shall have ingress and egress over Government lands for the construction and operation of its plants and works and the right to use Government lands at or near said locks for the erecting of power houses and appurtenances in connection therewith, subject to regulation by the Secretary of War. It shall be provided further in the contract that the company shall transfer to the Government flowage rights over all lands that will be temporarily or permanently overflowed by reason of the construction of Dam 17. The Government shall have free access to all the books of the company and all other records necessary for ascertaining and calculating the price, rates, and amount of power produced, developed, or sold by the company at said locks and at its storage reservoir. The contract shall further provide that the works herein contemplated, except the storage reservoir at or near Sanders Shoals, on the Mulberry Fork of the Black Warrior River, shall be commenced within one year and that the power-house foundations to be constructed by the company as a part of the dam shall be completed at least as soon as Dam 17. The said company is hereby authorized to construct said storage dam and reservoir at Sanders Shoals in accordance with the act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters, as amended by the act of June 23, 1910: Provided, That the construction of said dam and reservoir shall be commenced within 1 year after the completion of Dam 17, and shall be completed within 10 years from the date of approval of this act.

"SEC. 5. That in the exercise of the authority granted to the company herein or by said contract the company shall conform to such regulations as may be imposed by the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and of the property and other interests of the United States. The company shall at no time lower the pool level made by the erection of Dam 16, nor the pool level of Dam 17 below 63 feet above the crest of Dam 16, but in order to create a storage surplus for water-power purposes the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, permit flashboards or a removable crest not exceeding 3 feet in height to be installed on Dam 17 by the company, at its own expense; the United States shall not be liable to said company for any failure of water power from any cause whatsoever. The work and improvements herein provided for shall be executed under the direction and with the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. To insure the performance by the company of the acts and obligations imposed upon it by said contract, the Secretary of War may require the company to execute a bond in such an amount and with such surety as he may determine to be necessary. Whenever the company shall have acquired and transferred to the United States Government flowage rights over all lands to be flooded and temporarily or permanently overflowed and shall have erected power stations sufficient to supply the Government with all necessary power to light and operate said locks, said bond may be reduced to an amount not to exceed $50,000.

"SEC. 6. That all repairs, renewals, and other necessary expenditures upon the works, which the company shall be allowed to construct exclusively for the use of power generation, shall be made by the company, so that their condition shall at no time interfere with the interests of navigation: Provided, That whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the condition of said works endangers the interests of navigation, he shall notify the said company to repair the same, and if the company shall not immediately comply with the demand of the Secretary of War to make such repairs, he is hereby authorized and empowered to enter upon such works and cause them to be repaired; and the expense thereof shall constitute a debt against said company, its successors or assigns, and a lien upon all its property.

"SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the committee for a short time, I think I can explain this measure to the satisfaction of the House. At least I hope I may be able to do so.

The Black Warrior River is formed by the union of what is known as the Mulberry and Locust Forks, which come together 20 or 25 miles almost west of Birmingham, Ala. The Black Warrior River, the Warrior River, and the Tombigbee River, practically one and the same, have been under improvement for several years, the Government having undertaken the task of canalizing those streams by the construction of a series of locks and dams, 19 in number. The most of these have been completed. Lock 16 is now under contract and under construction. Lock 17 is under contract, but I believe no work has as yet been begun upon that lock and dam, certainly none of any consequence.

Appropriations, however, have been made for the completion of these dams and locks, including locks 16, 17, 18, and 19.

Some two years ago, however, Congress, realizing the importance of a resurvey for the purpose of extending slack water up into Mulberry and Locust Forks, 36 miles up the one to a place known as Sanders Ferry, and about 26 miles up the other to a place known as Five Mile Creek, authorized a survey which has been made, and the report thereon is now before Congress. This report recommends alternatively one dam with a lock of 14 feet lift in Mulberry Fork, and two dams in Locust Fork or a single dam 42 feet high at the site of Dam 18, either of which carries a 6-foot navigation up to Sanders Ford and about 20 miles up Locust Forks. In the meantime the company mentioned in the bill came forward with a proposition that they be permitted to develop and utilize the water power there which is going to waste. They stated that if a dam could be constructed at the site of Dam 17, 63 feet high, instead of the one 21 feet high recommended by the Government, this 63-foot dam would do away with the necessity for the construction of all the dams above, with the exception of the upper one in Locust Fork, which they thought might wait indefinitely.

To meet this suggestion on the part of the company, the bill now under consideration was introduced in and passed the Senate. Being referred to our committee, it has been reported here with the amendment just read.

Now, it is the opinion of our committee that this is a wise proposition, as it would afford the same depth and cost the Government very little more than either one of the two alternative propositions just mentioned. A dam 42 feet high at the site of Dam 18 would cost something like $1,737,000, while the 63-foot dam at 17, with two locks, would cost the Government only about $150,000 more. But if this plan is adopted, in 10, 15, or 20 years at most this $150,000 will have been paid back in rentals to the Government by the company that is proposing to develop this power.

The advantages in favor of the company's proposition are, first, the shortening of the time of construction. It has been said, and I can readily believe, that in the way we have been going on it will require 8 or 10 years to construct those dams. But if we can build one dam 63 feet high that will do away with all the rest and thus shorten, as it evidently will, the period of construction and develop the power, it seems to me it is the proper thing to do. I may add that it is estimated that this one dam can be finished in two years, thus giving the people of that section the benefit of navigation much earlier than they otherwise would have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. How much more will it cost the Government for improvement of the river in which the dam is to be erected if the dam is erected under the contract than it would cost if the contract was not entered into?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is owing to what course we pursue with reference to the new projects recommended by the engineers. If we should follow their recommendation and construct Dam 18 42 feet high, it would cost less by about $140,000 than to construct the dam 63 feet high at Lock 17. But this 63-foot dam will cost less by several hundred thousand dollars than the old project will cost. I think it would cost $300,000 more to construct the dams according to the old project than it would to construct the higher dam at site 17.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I want to state to the gentleman, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have just one more question. Does the authorization of the construction of this dam for the development of water power give any greater depth to navigation than would be otherwise obtained?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; it is the same depth as that which would be obtained under either of the later alternative propositions. The main thing in favor of this proposition is that it does away with the construction of the other dams, makes them unnecessary; also shortens the time, and will cost less to construct the one than it will to construct them all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman inform the committee, if he can, whether there is any precedent for the Government entering into a contract of this kind with a water-power company, or is this a new proposition?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman asks if it is a new proposition for the Government to enter into contracts with parties for the development of power, I will say no. But if he is asking whether it is a new proposition to bring it in in this way outside of a general river and harbor bill, perchance it may be.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want the gentleman to explain, because it has been commented upon on this side whether any bill of this kind has been presented to the House before. Is the Government now in actual business relations with a water-power company such as is proposed here?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; there has been more than one proposition similar to this before Congress. Perhaps the language or verbiage of the bill authorizing it may not be just like the verbiage here, but the substance was the same.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to say, partially in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that in the river and harbor bill passed some time since we provided for a similar arrangement at the Sault Ste. Marie, where the Secretary of War was directed to lease water power created by dams built there.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I would say further than that, that the Cumberland River project is similar to it, and Lock 4 in the Coosa River is similar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the rate per horsepower for the water used by the people under this bill?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. That was left to the Secretary of War.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is fixed here at $1. Does the gentleman think that is a proper rate?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I think that is the same rate as on the Coosa.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit one more question I think it will help the situation, as several gentlemen here have inquired about it. It is proposed, on page 12 of the bill, to give the Government free access to all the books of the company in order that it may make an inspection as to prices, and so forth. Has the committee in any previous bill gone beyond the supervision as provided in this bill to the extent that the profits of the company shall be limited, or that the rates to be charged by the company to the consumer shall be fixed? As this reads, it would appear that the contracting company has unlimited power with regard to the rates it shall charge consumers of the water.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That matter was discussed, but it was thought best not to interfere with it just at this time. I am under the impression that the Secretary of War has the right, anyway, to recommend those things. I think he has that right under the general dam act, probably.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill proposes a contract that shall exist for 50 years?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And proposes that the Government shall get out of that contract, in consideration for all of its expenditures in the work of construction, a sum fixed at the rate of $1 per annum per horsepower?

Mr. DAVIDSON. For the first 20 years, when there will be a revaluation and a rearrangement of prices, controlled by the Secretary of War, and at the end of each 10-year period thereafter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If this bill should pass, would it not be in the power of the contracting company to oppress the consumers of the water and to sustain a monopoly which would deprive users of the water along the route?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, I do not think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says that the Coosa River proposition is a precedent in point.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that similar terms were made in that instance.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There are several other instances.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that in the matter of principle this is not new.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not new, by any means.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that the minimum payment here is to be $15,000 per year?

Mr. SPARKMAN. After a certain time; yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman tell us about how much horsepower might be developed there?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is rather difficult to get at it, but the engineers tell us it will be somewhere in the neighborhood of fifteen or sixteen thousand horsepower. In other words, while it may go beyond that for a certain period of the year, perhaps as high as 25,000 horsepower, for one month or two months, they can count on only fifteen or sixteen thousand horsepower continuously.

Mr. BUTLER. I asked the question so that we may have in our minds some idea of how much revenue the Government may receive from this scheme.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. Fifteen thousand dollars per year would be about what the Government might expect in the way of return.

Mr. SPARKMAN. According to the opinion of the engineers; yes.

Mr. BUTLER. In order to secure $15,000 per year, how much will it cost the Government?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was just about to give the cost. The primary cost will be something like $140,000 more than if a dam 42 feet high were constructed, as the engineers have recommended, at the site of Dam 18; but it will cost much less than to construct all the locks and dams heretofore recommended. In other words, if we go ahead under the old project——

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that if this bill passes the Government will abandon the completion or the construction of two or three other locks or sets of locks.

Mr. SPARKMAN. About four of them; that is, it is left in their discretion to change from the old project and conform to this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course, the Government will make by that abandonment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman tell us about how much money the Government will save by abandoning those four locks?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, as I say, the Government will save several hundred thousand dollars, some $300,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman figured out how much the Government will save in the way of actual expenditures if it abandons these four locks and builds Lock 17, as proposed here?

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I said awhile ago, something like——

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman can tell us how much these three locks will cost——

Mr. SPARKMAN. I said awhile ago it was about $300,000, but my attention is called to some figures which indicate the saving will be $257,514.

Mr. BUTLER. The Government will save that much in the first instance?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Then it will take $140,000 to complete this dam, as proposed?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; the gentleman misunderstands me. I say it will cost less by $257,000 to construct this high dam than if we go ahead and construct all the others. I am not referring to the 42-foot dam at site 18. It would cost $140,000 more, or about that, to construct the 63-foot dam at 17 than it would cost to build the 42-foot dam at 18.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand, then, it will cost $140,000 more to complete this Lock 17.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. But then I understand the Government will save some money, a good deal of money, by abandoning the construction of these other locks?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; $257,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Government is not asked to abandon any locks. It is to flood with one lock where it would require four locks to raise the slack-water navigation up to that point. It simply floods it where it would require four locks. If they adopt the plan of Lock 18 and the 48-foot lift, it will cost $140,000 more to raise the dam 63 feet at Lock 17 than to raise the dam 42 feet at Lock 18. Both of those engineering features will raise the level of slack water to flood Dam 19 and the dam on Mulberry Creek and one dam in Locust Fork, and the final result will be as a matter of navigation, if the gentleman wishes to understand it, that the Government will save by that transaction nearly $1,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, that is what I have been endeavoring to learn. I understand that if Congress passes this proposed bill, it will result in a saving to the Government of a good deal of money. I understood the gentleman to say something like a million of dollars?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Something like a million dollars. The figures are here, which I will read in my time. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BUTLER. That is all I have to ask the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. What is the total cost of this improvement altogether?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. What is the total cost of all this improvement to get this 6-foot slack-water navigation, two million, three million, or four million dollars? Just in round numbers. I do not care about its being absolutely accurate.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It will cost $2,285,688 to construct all of these dams already adopted and Dam 20 in Mulberry Fork and the one in Locust Fork.

Mr. CANNON. The total improvement will, then, cost us between two and three million dollars in order to get a 6-foot slack-water navigation. How many miles of 6-foot slack-water navigation do we get?

Mr. SPARKMAN. About 46 miles above 17.

Mr. CANNON. What I am asking now is, How many miles of slack-water navigation will between two and three million dollars give us?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Say, 46 miles.

Mr. CANNON. But that has already been authorized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not all of it; no. We have only authorized of those upper dams the construction of dams at 17, 18, and 19, which would cost something like $1,400,000.

Mr. CANNON. $1,400,000. How many miles of slack water does that give?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That would give about 30 miles.

Mr. CANNON. About 30 miles. Now, then, with the addition of another million dollars proposed you would get about 16 miles more?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; say, 16 miles.

Mr. CANNON. Substantially another million dollars?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Probably it is not so much as that. It will cost something more, of course, to carry slack water of 6-foot depth this extra 16 miles.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield to me, I would like to make a single observation. We see that the Illinois & Michigan Canal, Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, and the Pennsylvania Canal have been substantially abandoned. Has the gentleman considered the question of how much it would cost if we could abandon this whole thing and make a double or a three track line of railroad down there?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, we have not considered that, because the Government has not yet entered upon the plan of building railroads.

Mr. CANNON. I see the gentleman from Indiana here, and that leads me to refer to the celebrated White Water Canal and the celebrated canal from Toledo to Evansville, which was built when I was a boy. The towpath now has a railroad on it. I just wanted to say, if the gentleman will allow me this question, as to the extraordinary cost of slack-water navigation of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000, and an additional $1,000,000 for 16 miles more, and then only getting a 6-foot depth, I suppose that would not have been possible except it was originally authorized in a great omnibus bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. We will get a 6-foot depth, with wonderful possibilities. These channels will go up into one of the finest coal fields in the country, and I risk nothing as a prophet, I think, in saying that there will be much more of commerce going down these streams when these locks and dams are completed than is going down some of the streams in this country that have cost $50,000,000 or $75,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Possibly that is correct, but there is one town in my county that has an output by railroad transportation of over 3,000,000 tons of coal annually. I believe that is more than is estimated will go through the Panama Canal the first year.

Mr. SPARKMAN. You will find that condition in a good many places. Your location is no exception along that line.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the only practical thing about this is that the Government is committed to 30 miles of slack-water navigation. It seems to me the practical thing is whether we will now commit the Government to $1,000,000 more for 16 miles farther.

And I would like in that connection, as we are making a contract with this proposed water-power company that is to run 50 years, to ask if we are bound to maintain all this improvement for 50 years under that contract in order that we may get $15,000 a year in return for the horsepower? Frankly, I am not criticizing. I am merely suggesting and asking for information more than anything else, because I am not even a respectable tyro touching the river and harbor propositions scattered throughout the country.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida who has charge of this bill, why the exclusive right is given to the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co. to virtually monopolize this power for 50 years?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am going to let some one else answer those questions, as they can do so more fully than I. But, in the first place, I would say for myself that I do not know of anyone else who wants this power, and, in the next place, in the very nature of things, if it is developed at all, it must be developed by somebody other than the Government, as the Government has not yet gone into that business.

Mr. SISSON. I am not criticizing the committee, but I would like to know why it should be given to this one company instead of a general law enacted authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive bids upon this proposition. The proposition is to stand for 50 years. I would like to ask if the committee considered whether or not it would be better to leave it open to different companies which would be organized and which would use this power to be developed by the building of this great dam?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The committee considered almost every phase of the question, but no other company offered to develop or utilize this survey.

Mr. SISSON. Did the committee investigate the proposition as to whether other people might not take advantage of this opportunity if they were given the right to do so?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Our committee did not; no.

Mr. SISSON. One other question, Mr. Chairman. Did the committee investigate the cost or the value of water power in that section?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. SISSON. What did you find that the company could sell this power for per horsepower?

Mr. SPARKMAN. They said they could sell it for $20 per horsepower.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, one other question. Did the committee investigate what it would cost the company to install this plant in order to use the maximum of water power developed?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes; but just what it is I can not state myself. I will say, however, that this matter was thrashed out before the subcommittee of which Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama was the chairman, and on those questions of detail he is better qualified to answer than I am. I am going to yield to him in a few minutes, and if the gentleman desires to renew those questions to him he can do so.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. Did your committee consider estimates as to what it would cost to build a railroad for these 16 miles or the length of additional navigation it would give?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No. There was no investigation as to that, so far as I know, because the Government is not committed to the building of railroads.

Mr. CULLOP. Could not a railroad be built for much less than the amount that the proposed improvement of this river would cost?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I fancy it could be.

Mr. CULLOP. It would not be giving much in the way of navigation with a depth of only 6 feet.

Mr. SPARKMAN. But the Government is not building railroads.

Mr. CULLOP. No; and the Government ought not to improve rivers for private enterprises and private companies.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is not proposed to improve the river for private purposes. The primary purpose here is navigation, pure and simple, and the building of these locks and dams, or this one dam with its two locks, would improve navigation very much.

Mr. CULLOP. But necessarily there could not be much navigation in this matter; and if the coal is there, of which the gentleman speaks, a company that would develop the coal would readily build a railroad to carry that coal to market, just as they do elsewhere throughout the country.

Now, one other question: What reservation has been made, or what limitation has been made, to the charges to the public when this company gets its monopoly, as is proposed in this bill, in the distribution of its power?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Why, there is no limitation, so far as the bill is concerned.

Mr. CULLOP. That is, so far as this law is concerned, they can charge anything to the public that they want?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The large coal fields there and the large amount of coal to be mined is going to exercise a limiting influence upon the charges for the power.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman may think that, but he is erroneous in that opinion. Water power can be produced so cheaply, at so little expense to a company that produces it, that it can drive out the coal business entirely. So there ought to be a limitation in this bill, if it passes, fixing the maximum charge for power developed and sold there. The difference between the cost of the production of horsepower by water and by coal is very wide, and this company, by any law that Congress passes, ought not to be authorized to charge extortionate rates of its patrons.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is a matter for Congress to determine. There is no limitation in this bill.

Mr. CULLOP. That is the objection to the bill, and if it goes through in this way there will be no limit in its charges.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yielded to the gentleman for a question. I did not yield for a speech. I will be very glad to try to answer any questions that the gentleman asks.

Mr. CULLOP. I am only making suggestions along with the question. Here is a bill that gives this company the power simply to plunder its consumers, and we are giving it a monopoly. That ought not to be done by public legislation. The expense of this 16 miles is out of all proportion. If it is to develop coal fields, a railroad will do that, and do it much more satisfactorily, so it can be used the year round.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield any further for a speech, because the gentleman can make a speech in his own time.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. For a question.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, a question has arisen as to the availability of canals. I will ask the gentleman if he knows that one of the oldest canals in the United States, that of the Lehigh Coal Navigation Co., is now being opened for just the purpose that he names? Knowing something of this locality about Birmingham, does the gentleman also believe with me that this canal will probably carry as much tonnage as the River Rhine? I believe that it will if properly opened and kept open.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I fancy the gentleman is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I am satisfied, after looking at this matter and after hearing the gentleman's statement, that the Government may save some money by this proposition. The improvement, however, could be made, could it not, without reference to the creation of what is known as a monopoly? Could not this improvement be made and the subject of the sale of the water power be left open to the Government?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It certainly could.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of course, the House can do as it pleases—anything about that.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the real object in legislating in favor of conferring upon this one water company this exclusive privilege?

Mr. SPARKMAN. There was so much confusion around me that I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. BUTLER. What real good can the Government get out of this legislation, if we require the Government to make one contract only, with this one water-power company? Can we not make the improvement and save a lot of money by it, and then leave open to the future the question of what company or what organization shall have the water power?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, certainly; that could be done if it was thought advisable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in regard to this bill and how it happens to be before this Congress. The canalization of the Warrior, Black Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers is a matter that has been before Congress now for a long time—since 1870. The purpose is to go from the Gulf of Mexico into the Warrior coal fields of Alabama, where there is said to be coal enough to last 850 years.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I shall have to decline to be interrupted until I finish what I have to say. Then I shall be happy to answer any question I am capable of answering that the distinguished gentleman can ask; but this happens to be the first time that I have asked this House to listen to me for 15 minutes. [Applause.]

I do not care to be interrupted until I have had at least 15 or 20 minutes to make a clear statement, if I am capable of it, as to the situation before this House. [Applause.] When I cease, if I find I am incapable of doing it, I will be glad for the gentleman to ask any question he desires, and I will endeavor to answer his questions, if I can, and if I can not, I will be satisfied to take my seat. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the facts are these: The Mobile, Tombigbee, Warrior, and the Black Warrior River system has been undertaken for improvement by the Government of the United States for more than 30 years. At this time the legislation is simply this: They have authorized the engineers to contract for the completion of slack water up to Mulberry Fork and Locust Fork, which are at the head of the Black Warrior River.

In order to complete that navigation, 5 locks have been authorized and the money is ready for payment—Locks 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19. Lock 15 is now nearly finished. Lock 16 is on the way to completion. Lock 17 has been contracted for. Locks 18 and 19 have been authorized, and the money has been appropriated for their completion, but no contracts have been awarded.

But the engineers have discovered, upon the return of a survey and estimate ordered in 1909, that slack water can be continued up the Mulberry and Locust Forks, and these forks enter into the heart of the coal region. Upon that report your engineers and the board of review took the whole matter under consideration and suggested that the best plan, perhaps, would be to raise Lock 18 from a 14-foot lift to a 48-foot lift, which would enable them to flood Lock 19 and also to flood the additional lock in Mulberry Fork and one additional lock in Locust Fork, which is required to carry navigation up into the coal fields.

The board of review considered that it was not advisable, so far as the present information extended, to build the second lock in Locust Fork. When this proposition was being considered, a company organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co., acquired from the State of Alabama, under authority of an act of Congress, the right to erect a dam in Mulberry Fork above the point of navigation for the purpose of developing water power. That is why the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co. is to-day a factor in this bill. They have the authority of the State and the right to erect a dam above the point of navigation in Mulberry Fork.

They sent their own engineers out to look into the situation, engineers from the city of New York—able, well informed, thoroughly expert—as good as there are in the world, and who report that it would not be feasible or advisable to generate power above the point of navigation on Mulberry Fork alone. They investigated further, and found that if you would raise the lift of the lock at 17 from 21 feet, as now authorized, to 63 feet, it would enable water power to be developed in the Black Warrior River at Dams 16 and 17 in paying quantities.

Now, your committee and I, as the representative in part of the people of Alabama and of the United States, do not want to see this power wasted. Therefore the engineers report and advise raising the dam at Lock 17 from 21 feet to 63 feet, and in this way to do away with the building of Locks and Dams 18, 19, and two additional locks, one in Mulberry Fork and one in Locust Fork, and at the same time create the equal slack-water navigation at the head of the river system.

As to the cost and purely as an engineering proposition, I will go into details directly. Upon investigation the engineers concluded and advise that it would save time and money to do all the work at Lock 17, instead of building four separate locks and dams, and accomplish the same result for navigation. One of the reasons why it would save time and one incident in the matter of cost is that it would require the building of a railroad 10 miles long from Lock 17 to Lock 18 to transport the materials necessary to build this lock, on account of the nature of the country and the lack of any other mode of transportation in that part of the Black Warrior River. In other words, it would involve an item of cost of $100,000 for a railroad to be able to reach Lock 18.

The present contractor, in order to reach Lock 17, has expended $70,000 for a railroad to transport his materials and to equip his plant and to haul what is necessary to carry out the work of construction. The Government has already authorized the building of Locks 17, 18, and 19. When the report came in from the local engineers that it was necessary in order to reach the Warrior coal fields of Alabama to extend slack water by the erection of two more locks, which would cost in the neighborhood of $750,000 additional, the engineers decided and advise that it is good engineering to build one lock at 17, with a lift of 63 feet, instead of building one lock at 17, another at 18, another at 19, another in Mulberry Fork, and still another in Locust Fork. A citizen of Georgia has the contract for Lock 17, as now authorized, with a 21-foot lift. He has commenced work on his contract. He has equities, your committee thinks and the War Department agrees, if any changes are to be made at Lock 17.

This bill, when it came from the Senate, had in effect an agreement in the first clause of the bill that made cooperation between this power company and the United States a part of this navigation project. The subcommittee and the House committee did not like that partnership, and eliminated it from the bill. They eliminated it in such shape that the engineers now are authorized to complete, as a matter of navigation alone, the raising of Dam 17 to 63 feet in order to improve the river, so as to carry slack water to the coal fields of our State. They find that they can do that at less cost than building Lock 17 to the height of 21 feet and the other four locks each 14 feet. As estimated from the reports on the proposition, they will complete it for nearly $1,000,000 less than it will cost to carry out the present plan now authorized but not fully contracted for.

I have the figures and would like to know if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is here. I would like to give them to him, as he seemed to be anxious to have the figures a short while ago.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Let us hear the figures.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The three locks and dams on Black Warrior River, for which appropriations have been made or authorized, are estimated to cost as follows:

No. 17 (21-foot lift)	$547,243
No. 18 (14-foot lift)	449,453
No. 19 (14-foot lift)	501,550
Total cost of works now authorized	1,498,246

The cost of certain additional locks and dams extending slack water to Sanders Ferry, on the Mulberry Fork, and to Nichols Shoals, on the Locust Fork, is estimated as follows:

One on Mulberry Fork (14-foot lift)	$431,109
One on Locust Fork (14-foot lift)	356,313
Total cost of these proposed works	787,422
Total cost of low dams authorized and proposed	2,285,668

These low dams, however, are not now recommended. In lieu thereof the engineers recommend:

One 63-foot lift dam at the site of No. 17, replacing all the works indicated above, at an estimated cost for construction of	$1,878,154
Estimated cost of flowage rights	150,000
Total cost of Dam No. 17 (63-foot lift)	2,028,154
The estimated saving in first cost of one high dam in lieu of five low dams extending slack water to the same points on the forks is therefore	$257,514
The saving in operating expenses effected by adopting the project for one high dam rather than the one contemplating five low dams is estimated to be at least $20,000 a year; the capital represented by this annual saving of $20,000 (reckoned at 3 per cent) is	666,666
The total saving of the high-dam project over the low-dam project, considering navigation alone, is, therefore, approximately	1,000,000

A new, a better, and a more economical plan has been found than that now authorized. Your engineers have done their duty and have brought this matter to the attention of Congress and of your committee, and the committee has taken days to work out this proposition. A subcommittee was appointed, and, with the exception of its chairman, is composed of as strong men as you have in this House—the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY].

I say to you frankly that after 14 years' service in this House I never saw a harder, stronger fight by individual men expressing individual opinions in working out this proposition and in preparing this bill so as to eliminate the objectionable features as it came from the Senate of the United States. [Applause.] The estimated saving in first cost—you have not heard a word about water power yet—in raising Dam 17 to 63 feet in lieu of five low dams leaves a clear saving, as an engineering proposition, of $257,514 to raise that lock at 17 from 21 feet to 63 feet lift without considering water power at all, the additional saving of $600,000 and upward is in operating expenses and maintenance. This is what your committee asks you to do under the recommendation of the engineers of the War Department, who say it will not only save money but it will save time—several years' time—in the completion of river navigation to the Warrior coal fields. Does not any ordinary man know it will take less time to build one lock, if we build it 63 feet high, than it will to build five locks at great distances from each other, with difficult transportation for materials and all things necessary in the erection of locks and dams on rivers far away from railroads or other means of transportation. In addition, these are what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] would call flat, bottom rates.

Whenever you run five locks instead of one it costs $5,000 a year for each additional lock, a large and important item of cost in all the years to come. I might say for all the ages yet to come, for it will be during the life of this great Government, which intends to live and to lead all the nations of all the world until the day of judgment. [Applause.] The saving in operating expenses alone by having one dam instead of five is estimated to be at least $20,000 a year. Taking it at $20,000 a year, the capital represented in this annual saving, reckoned at 3 per cent, is $666,666. This amounts to nearly $1,000,000 saved, without regard to water power. Unless authority is given by this Congress to develop and use the power at Locks 16 and 17 on the Warrior River, this water power is dead. Unless Lock No. 17 is raised to 63 feet and the present project for four low dams is abandoned, this splendid water power will remain undeveloped and will run to rack and waste forever. I do not want to see it stopped. It should be preserved; it must be preserved.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Conceding everything the gentleman contends for in the matter of cost and saving to the Government by this change of plan, and conceding everything that he argues for in the matter of navigation, which is highly commendable and in which I agree with him, will the gentleman give his version of the relationship of the Government of the United States as it appears in this bill to the private company that proposes to utilize the power thus created by Government expenditure?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will endeavor to do it, but the gentleman's question raises in my mind an exceedingly broad proposition, not covered, if you will study the bill that you have been called upon to consider, because we have so arranged that legislation that it does not touch the broad question the gentleman asks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will try to answer the gentleman, but you must let——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to change the question or ask another.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] may proceed until he concludes his remarks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am obtruding upon the gentleman's time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman to ask me a question, and I would be glad to be permitted to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed to a conclusion. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for his courtesy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman concluded his answer to my question? If he has, I would like to ask him another.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Proceed with your question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a broad question here, that of the relationship of a private corporation with the Government of the United States—the entering into an agreement on certain terms to be lived up to by both parties—that may or may not be supported by precedent. At any rate, there is something for the Government to watch——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Now, do not make a speech, but ask a question, please, and I will try to answer it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted the gentleman's version of the effect of such an agreement in the matter of its monopolistic tendency, so far as the company obtaining the concession is concerned. This affects the Government and the consumers of the power which it is proposed to distribute.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I think that so far as this bill is concerned the gentleman is dreaming, or, peradventure, he hath gone hunting like the priests of Baal once did in a great discussion. I am not ready to go into the question the gentleman has put to me, but I will endeavor to tell him what there is in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, I will be more specific. Will the gentleman tell me, in view of precedents, if $1 per annum per horsepower is sufficient for the Government to charge the company to whom it makes this concession?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I do not know, but I think it is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that 50 years is too long a period of time to grant this concession to one company?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I do not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman to whom it is proposed to sell the power which is created by the Government and which shall be at the disposal of this private corporation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The gentleman could ask me any other question that is a mere matter of prophecy and I could answer it just as well. Nobody knows who they will sell it to. Nobody knows to-day whether the company is going to accept the terms put in by the House committee or not. The bill as it came from the Senate is radically changed by the House committee. The gentlemen representing the power company are not altogether pleased with what has been done by the House committee, and I do not care whether they are or not. This bill authorizes the Secretary of War and his engineers to contract with that company along certain lines. It further authorizes them, if that company does not contract according to those lines, to go on and put the foundation for the development of power at Dams 16 and 17, and dispose of it as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] hereafter may see fit, inasmuch as it leaves it to Congress to decide, and nobody can control it save Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to see industries developed there, but I ask if this company is actually organized and doing business to-day?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I do not know what the gentleman means by "doing business." If the gentleman means has it employed anyone to lay brick and mortar or anything else that is necessary to make the dam, I say no. If the gentleman means have they drawn plans for that purpose, I say no; and I assert that this bill expressly says that they can not do it until the engineers approve whatever plans they have got to make.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This bill plans a return of $15,000 a year from the company.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I wish the gentleman would inform himself better before he states that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman if any of this power will be sold to the city of Birmingham, for instance, or whether any of this power will be sold to manufacturers or others elsewhere along the line? And I would like to ask whether it is in the mind of the gentleman that there will be an industrial development along this river, and along the rivers running into it, that will mean the creation of new industries that will give employment to labor?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. It is my opinion—though I can not say that, because I have great respect for my opinions and I never make one upon an uncertainty—but it is my impression that these parties intend to sell some of that power in Birmingham, and some of it to other enterprises between Birmingham and that particular point, wherever it is located.

I have no idea whatever how they intend to use it, but will say the company is organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, and the State has given them a right—which the State has a right to do—to erect a dam above navigation, in order to run their water power.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of War, through the engineers, to permit this company, if it chooses to do so, to come and do the things required under this bill and get the water power developed at Lock No. 17 and Lock No. 16, and to pay $1 a horsepower therefor. When the bill came from the Senate it read: "$1 for each horsepower generated by the normal flow of the river and 50 cents for each horsepower generated by the storage dam of the company." That was deemed to be too little, and your committee saw proper to raise it to $1 a horsepower all around, and fix the minimum on the basis of 15,000 horsepower per annum; which is enough, in my judgment, to pay for the horsepower they will get at Locks Nos. 16 and 17, which is all that we have to do with.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman one question in conclusion?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I hope the gentleman will ask a question, and one only, in conclusion. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that it would influence me very much, in acting upon this bill, if I knew that the interests of commerce in the vicinity of this proposed improvement were to be increased and that the power to be generated would operate for the growth of industries all along the line; especially if it would mean that in that splendid valley of which the gentleman from Alabama has the right to be proud there would be new smokestacks of factories, where thousands of people would secure employment as the result of the improvement.

Mr. MANN. And then they would close them up with a tariff bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The picture which the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests would be the substance of my hope as the result of that improvement. But whether it accomplishes that result or not, I am confident that the power ought not to be allowed to be destroyed, and we therefore provide that the Government shall furnish in the dam the foundations for water power, and hereafter utilize it as the Government pleases, but so far as we are concerned, not to go to sleep with it and let this water power go to waste.

The proposition in the bill means a navigation proposition that will save a four years' delay at least in opening up the rivers to the coal fields and save the Government a million dollars in money.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. With pleasure.

Mr. MADDEN. How far is the site of Dam No. 17 from Birmingham?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The site of Dam No. 17 from Birmingham is between 27 and 30 miles. It is nearer 27 than 30 miles, as I am informed.

Mr. MADDEN. It would be possible, would it not, for the contracting company to carry all the power created by its dam to Birmingham and there find a ready sale for it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. My impression is that that is what they are doing it for.

Mr. MADDEN. The question that I wish to ask is this: Does the gentleman from Alabama think a dollar a horsepower per annum is a sufficient compensation for the privilege that it is proposed to give this company?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I do under this particular contract, because the company is given nothing else; that is, the Government is giving nothing else. The Government is doing that which it intends to do at a cost of a million dollars more than if it does that which it is now asked to do. The power company will come in and pay the flowage rights. And when we raise that dam to 63 feet high it has been estimated that the flowage damages will come to about $150,000. I think they will come nearer to $400,000. The power company must pay all the flowage damages under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the Government of the United States contribute anything whatever toward the development of this water power?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. It builds the 63-foot dam and whatever locks it may find necessary in connection with said Lock 17. I think, instead of having one lift of 63 feet, they will have two lifts or locks of 31½ feet each. The only rights the company gets is to put up flashboards 3 feet high at the top of the dam, and they pay all the flowage rights.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think that $5 a horsepower would be nearer an equitable price than $1?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I do not, because I have not the benefit of the information the gentleman from Illinois may have. I have that of the engineers who have been studying the question, and they say the value of a horsepower throughout the South is $20, and we thought 5 per cent was enough for the company to pay.

Mr. MADDEN. But if they carry it up to Birmingham they will be able to sell it perhaps at $30 a horsepower.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. You could not pass in our committee a provision for $5 a horsepower. It was difficult to get it through at $1 a horsepower and make the minimum 15,000 horsepower. Five dollars a horsepower would not be acceptable.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my friend from Alabama tell me how much money this company is going to invest for the development of the water power there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Two million five hundred thousand dollars, and the dam will cost $1,500,000. We have nothing to do with the dam. I want to say that the $1,500,000 is outside of the $2,500,000, so that in all they will invest about $4,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish me to understand that the company to whom this right is given is to spend $4,000,000 out of its own treasury for the development of water power?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Yes; at their dam above navigation and at Locks 17 and 16, where the proposition is that it will be about equally divided in the power developed. There will be 15,000 or 16,000 horsepower at these two locks, and 14,000 and 15,000 horsepower at their dam above navigation. About half of this power only will be primary power.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, as a matter of fact, they develop 30,000 horsepower?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Yes; but not that much primary power—not more than 15,000 or 16,000 primary horsepower at both the Dams 16 and 17 and the dam above the point of navigation.

Mr. MADDEN. And instead of giving a dollar a horsepower per annum they are getting it for 50 cents?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. No; because it is $1 a horsepower for all horsepower developed within the range of navigation at Locks 16 and 17. The United States has no claim on the power to be developed at the dam above navigation.

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking these questions for information. Does the development of this water power, by reason of the construction of this dam, interfere with any private rights for which the Government may be responsible between where this water power is built and sections above or below?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will endeavor to answer the gentleman frankly. For more than three months this bill has been in the Senate, and for that whole time it has been advertised by the press throughout the State of Alabama. For some weeks it has been in the House, and that has been advertised throughout the State of Alabama. It is pretty well known in Alabama that I am a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Every step that has been taken day by day by this committee has been reported by the press, yet not one man, woman, child, or corporation has written me a line or telegraphed me a line; and if there had been a child there that was weeping or a woman who was crying on account of this bill, I would have heard of it long ago. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Just one more question. I wish to ask if, by reason of the overflow of the adjacent land as a result of the construction of this dam and the creation of this water power, the Government of the United States will be in anywise responsible for damages?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Not under this bill, because the company pays for the flowage rights and gives a bond with such security as the Secretary of War shall demand to cover that before anything is done. Every right is protected by this bill in the interests of the United States.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Alabama aware that owing to the proximity of coal in the immediate vicinity of this dam the cost of horsepower will always be limited by the low price of coal, and that the company having these water rights can not get the excessive rates that some gentlemen seem to fear?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I am aware of that, and I thank the gentleman for the statement. If I had been let alone, I would have stated it; but I forgot it, and I forgot the most important thing I had to say. I am glad to owe another obligation to the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will endeavor to answer the gentleman if I can.

Mr. SWITZER. Just a question for information.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I do not know that I have the information.

Mr. SWITZER. Is there any protection provided in this bill for the prospective patrons or consumers of this water power as to the rate of compensation they will have to pay this private company for the power?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The rental after the first 20 years is left entirely to the Secretary of War and the engineers. If you mean to ask whether this bill proposes a limit of price upon the property of others, we have not cared to touch that question.

Mr. SWITZER. Is there any maximum limitation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. We have not cared to touch that question. That is too big a question to go into in this way.

Mr. BOWMAN. May I suggest to the gentleman that the rate which the residents of Birmingham and that surrounding district will have to pay for power will be regulated by the low price of coal, and that these gentlemen will only be able to get for that power a relatively low rate in view of the low price of coal.

Mr. SHERLEY. What rate can they get?

Mr. BOWMAN. They can buy an excellent grade of slack there for from 40 to 50 cents a ton at the mine; and if that is not low enough for power, what more do you want? The mines are idle at that, at times five days out of the week. The coal is right in the immediate vicinity, not 5 miles away.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I agree entirely with the gentleman, and I will say further that in my judgment coal will be cheap enough when these Warrior coal fields are opened to drive the water-power companies out of business. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman answer one question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I can not yield.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes, the gentleman can. Is the gentleman willing to accept an amendment making it 30 years instead of 50 years?

Mr. SHERLEY. How about making it 20 years instead of 30?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The Senate bill came over here fixing it at a hundred years, and we would not stand for that. The general dam law provides a limitation of 50 years, and we abide by that. I would be unwilling to see the bill amended for less than 50 years. That is the law now for all under the provisions of the general dam act. The committee sees no reason to require any special law for the proposition reducing or changing the general policy to all of 50 years. So 50 years is the limit desired by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition. I was under the impression that the Chair had recognized somebody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I listened to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] as well as I could, but I did not understand either of them to explain the differences between the Senate bill and the House proposition.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will be very glad to do it.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The first clause of the Senate bill provided for cooperation between the General Government and the power company. We eliminated that and authorized the engineers to change the plans and adopt a 63-foot lift at Lock 17 for the purpose of making navigation and running slack water up Mulberry Fork and Locust Fork to the point where it would be carried, and for the purpose of developing power independent of the company.

Mr. MANN. Did not both bills do that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. We did not think so. The Senate bill, as we read the bill, provided for this to be done, with the condition that this company have the contract. We did not want that. We wanted this navigation whether there was power developed there or not. The power was a matter entirely incidental with us. Navigation was our sole concern, but we wanted to preserve the power if it could be preserved.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, he is probably so familiar with the situation there that he thinks he is explaining it to those who are not familiar with it, but I will have to confess that I do not yet understand even that one difference, and I will be very frank with the gentleman. This bill has been reported only very recently. It was only obtainable this morning. It is a long bill, and I have not yet been able myself to examine the bill to ascertain the difference between the Senate bill and the House substitute.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. In the first two amendments the House eliminated that feature I speak of. In the first and second sections of the Senate bill the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co. are mentioned. In the House substitute you will find that it is not mentioned until section 4 of the bill. In other words, sections 1, 2, and 3 of the House bill provide for the navigation change at Lock 17, without mentioning the company. Section 4 authorizes the engineers to make a contract with a certain company—the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co.—and if that contract is not made, they are authorized to go on and carry on the work as a navigation feature, in the interest of economy and in the interest of navigation.

Mr. MANN. It is not the reason that I am trying to get at, but the facts.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Well, the gentleman will find a little further on that the Senate bill authorized 99 years. We struck that out and made it 50 years.

Mr MANN. These first three sections that the gentleman speaks of in the House substitute are new?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. We strike out a great deal.

Mr. MANN. Are the first three sections of the House substitute entirely different from the first three sections of the Senate bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Sections 1 and 2 are very different from sections 1 and 2 of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Do they cover the same thing or do they cover other matters?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. We think we left out the provision I am speaking of, and that is that there should be any cooperation between the Government and the power company, which we thought was contained in section 1 of the Senate bill. If I do not answer the gentleman in that way, I can not answer his inquiry.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman can not answer me, nobody can; and I am sure the gentleman can.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. What we struck out is after the word "that," in line 3, page 1, of the Senate bill, as follows:

For the purpose of improving navigation of the Black Warrior River above Lock 17 to Cordova and as far up said river as the foot of Sanders Shoals, 5 miles above Cordova and 56.8 miles above Lock 17, and for the purpose of aiding and developing the water power at Locks 16 and 17, in cooperation with the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co. (hereinafter styled "the company"), a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of developing the water power of said river and supplying the public with same.

We struck that out entirely and commenced—

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, etc.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will permit, is not it in fact the intention to change the plan so as to really cooperate with this company?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. No.

Mr. MANN. You leave that out, but is not it the intention?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. We hope that they will develop water power there, but this change is not made for the purpose of making any contract with the company further than we hope that it will be made.

Mr. MANN. I know; but this proposes to make a change. Is not that it——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. No; the purpose of making the change, as I understand and believe it, as far as my wish in this transaction is concerned and my efforts are directed, is purely for navigation and to save three or four years' time in the completion of slack-water navigation on the Warrior River.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but if this was not to have water power the gentleman would not have the change made in the expectation——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I certainly would. I said so originally, and I would say that to the gentleman in answer to that question if he asked it a dozen times.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would make the change, anyhow?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I would, and do exactly what the engineers think ought to be done there in the interest of navigation.

Mr. MANN. Would not that dam create considerable water power?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. No, sir; water power can only be created, as I understand it—I may be entirely mistaken—by putting in your dam, in the first place, to generate water power and then other machinery, how much I am not familiar enough to even answer the questions put as clearly as the gentleman from Illinois can put them if he wants to.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the creation of the dam is the creation of water power.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The beginning of the creation only.

Mr. MANN. The creation of the water power, but the utilization of the water power——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. You know what the beginning of wisdom is?

Mr. MANN (continuing). Utilization of the water power and converting it to electric power requires machinery, and when you create a dam that has water flowing over it you create water power.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I must answer the gentleman exactly as I answered the gentleman just now——

Mr. MANN. It is not the details I am after, of course, but the question of principle.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I understand; and we tried to reach the question of principle.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's proposition is to have water power controlled by a private company, probably water power created by the General Government, and there comes up the question of the policy of the Government first, whether the Government itself ought to carry on the work of creating a power and then the control and sale of the power itself, or whether if it does not do that——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Is the gentleman asking me a question? If he is, I must tell him it is too much involved for me even to follow him and he must put his question more plainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not understand, probably, that I have the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Why, I thought the gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. MANN. I may wish to ask the gentleman a question, because if I wanted any information about the bill I would appeal to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I would never willingly, on my own accord, take the floor.

Mr. MANN. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for the information he has furnished. If the Government creates water power, or has control of it, and does not choose to create and control and sell the water power itself, then the question arises, first, whether in giving the right to some one else to control the water power it ought to sell the right to the highes bidder on even terms, and, secondly, whether it ought to control the price that may be charged for the power created partly through the effort and expenditure of money by the Government. Now, that is not a question that merely involves this place. At the last Congress we defeated a bill in the House where a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass a bill, and a majority of the House voted against the proposition, where the entire expenditure of money was to be made by a private corporation. And we were not willing to adopt the policy at that time of permitting a private corporation to construct a water power and have control itself over the power and the price that should be paid for it. Now, that case was stronger in the interests of the private corporation than this case is, because here much of the expenditure of money is to be made by the General Government itself. If this power ought to be sold, I do not undertake to say whether the Government ought to create the power and sell it, or, where the Government in part creates the power, it ought to sell the privilege of utilizing all the power.

But if the general right to control the power is sold, as is the right, in fact, inferred by this bill—though it is called simply a gift—I suppose, if it is to be sold, it ought to be sold, it seems to me, to the highest bidder, with a minimum rate fixed in the bill. I would fix, if I were to pass a bill of this sort and was in control of it, a minimum rate, at least as high as the rate fixed in this bill, and then see whether some one would not pay more. Here is a proposition which involves a large expenditure by the Government, where it is proposed there shall be paid back to the Government, or paid to the Government, $15,000 a year as a minimum. How much water power will be created, I say, no one is prepared to inform the House. I believe the gentleman said that possibly 25,000 horsepower, and the gentleman from Washington privately says that the Government engineers estimate it at 16,000 horsepower. Probably none of these estimates has been very carefully made. Has anyone estimated what it will cost this company to construct this part of the work and utilize this power?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think I stated a while ago that the engineers say that about 16,000 horsepower can be relied upon the year round.

Mr. MANN. Yes. I just made that statement, but no one has figured that out carefully, I say. Can the gentleman from Florida give us an estimate of the cost that this company will be put to in carrying out its part if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is very difficult, but the construction of that one dam there is to cost one million and a half of dollars.

Mr. MANN. That does not answer the question at all. We are accustomed in this country to estimate the cost of installing plants in connection with the use of water power. It is not difficult to obtain such information. If this plant is to cost one million and a half or two million of dollars, with an estimated water power of 25,000 horsepower, to be sold at even $20 a horsepower, that would make half a million dollars a year.

No one would say that the Government ought to give to some company the power to receive half a million dollars a year for the expenditure of a million and a half or two million dollars in connection with some expenditure for the Government. After a water power is created and the electrical machinery installed, the cost of operation is practically nothing. We either ought to know what the development is to cost or else we ought to retain control either over the charge which we are to make for the use of our expenditure or else control over the charge which the company is to make to the individuals who consume their power.

I have heard a good deal in this House and elsewhere about the conservation of natural resources, but I have not heard anyone yet say that we ought to give away without control the power that the General Government has over the water powers of the country. On your side of the House as well as on this side there was great disagreement to the proposition that the General Government ought to yield its control over water powers without a consideration, and yet here is a proposition to give to a company for 50 years, and for 20 of those years at the rate of $1 a horsepower, a horsepower estimated to be from 16,000 to 25,000, at a merely nominal rate, and without any control over the charge which shall be made by that company to its patrons. It is said that this canal is being constructed for the purpose of carrying coal, and for reaching an undeveloped coal field. One can readily see how a power company, with its own power to sell, will not be inclined to help the carrying of coal in competition with it if it can prevent it, and we ought to retain in somebody the power to control the rate, at least, within some reasonable limitation, which may be charged by this company to its patrons.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman submit to a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. What is the opinion of the gentleman as to whether this bill, if it is passed, would establish a precedent for the Government charging for water power incidentally created in connection with an improvement of a navigational character or the improvement of navigable streams?

Mr. MANN. I take it that this bill does not necessarily involve the question of the Government charging where it grants the right to construct a dam across a navigable stream not connected with river and harbor improvements made by the Government; and no one has ever questioned, I think, the right of the Government to make a charge for the use of water power which it may have created in connection with work which it has carried on for many years. If I recall rightly, the Government has leased or sold water power created on the Cumberland River through dams that were constructed by the Government many years ago. I think that is the case. I would rather have some Member on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors inform me if it is not the case.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There are several precedents for just such a thing as this.

Mr. SIMS. As I understand this, this is a project in part authorized as an improvement of a navigable stream?

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, the authorization of this stream has not only already been made, but a large share of the improvement has been made, and it is proposed now to make a change in the plans of the improvement so as to permit a company, in connection with the change of plan, to construct a dam with a fall of 63 feet, or something like that.

Mr. SIMS. Which does not interfere with the original plan for navigation purposes?

Mr. MANN. It interferes entirely with the original plans, but I take absolutely the judgment of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in that respect—that it does not make any less valuable the navigable rights of the stream or hinder in any way their utilization. That new plan, if changed, will be just as valuable to the navigation interests as the old one.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, it does not interfere with it for purposes of navigation?

Mr. MANN. No; I understand it does not interfere with it for purposes of navigation.

Mr. SIMS. What is the gentleman's idea as to making a 50-year franchise?

Mr. MANN. The 50-year franchise matter, I suppose, so far as the Congress is concerned, largely came from the suggestion of Mr. Roosevelt when he was President of the United States. Personally, I never have favored it. Personally, I would much prefer to give an indefinite franchise to a corporation, retaining control over the rights of the Government to cut the corporation out if it wanted to, or to change its rates in the same manner as that whereby we have control in the District of Columbia over the public-utility corporations of this District. We have no fixed franchise——

Mr. SPARKMAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MANN. In a moment. We have no fixed franchise for the street railways or for the other public utilities in the District of Columbia, but we have control of them, and occasionally, whenever we feel desirous to do so, we exercise that control. No company can afford to lay out a large sum of money in the construction of this plant unless it has reasonable assurance that it can continue in operation long enough to make some money out of the business. But notwithstanding that, I do not believe the General Government ought to give to a private corporation the right to fix its own charges without any control. We do not even do it in the case of bridges.

The gentleman from Kansas, here, on unanimous consent day, started out to offer an amendment on a bridge bill providing that the Secretary of War should have the right to fix the tolls for the use of the bridge. I called his attention to the general bridge act, which the House passed some years ago, which gives to the Secretary of War the right to fix the tolls of any kind, even for passage over a bridge built under an act of Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wanted to suggest to the gentleman that the power to amend, alter, or repeal this act, which is reserved here, will exercise, in my judgment, quite a wholesome influence over that company—in the matter of charters, for instance.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the power to alter, amend, or repeal is a very desirable thing in this bill. When we passed the general dam act, if I recall correctly, we put in a provision reserving the power to alter, amend, or repeal, and a further provision that if altered, amended, or repealed, the Government should not be held responsible for any damage to the company by reason of the change in the law. The power to alter, amend, or repeal may carry with it the liability to pay for the damage that would be caused if to-day you passed the bill giving this company the power to construct these works, reserving the right to repeal, and they construct the works, and to-morrow you repeal. In that case you may find that under the Constitution of the United States the right to repeal may exist, but the right to take private property without compensation does not exist even by repeal.

Mr. SPARKMAN. When the gentleman refers to the power reserved in the general dam act to alter, amend, or repeal, I suppose he refers to section 7. That goes on to say:

> The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be constructed in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof.

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is just what I called attention to. I drew that section myself.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield just for a moment on the question of price, I observe here on page 11, line 16, a rental period of 20 years. After that the price can be changed by the Government. Does not the gentleman believe that the Government therein has the power to regulate the price to be charged—at which the power shall be sold—and that if it is not reasonable the Government can advance the price accordingly and thereby oblige them to do what is right?

Mr. MANN. Plainly not. It is so plain that the gentleman himself, when he reads his question, will see that it hardly requires an answer. The power of the General Government to fix the rate which this company shall pay the Government does not in any way give the General Government the power to fix the rate at which the company shall sell its power to consumers. On the contrary, the power of the General Government to fix the rate which shall be paid to the General Government may lead the General Government to fix the rate, without any power to prevent the company from simply adding on ten times as much to its consumers.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BOWMAN. If the Government raises the rate to a price equal to that at which they can produce power with coal, does not that thereby put them out of business?

Mr. MANN. The Government might raise the rate and put them out of business possibly, in which case they would bring an injunction and go ahead just the same.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, the trouble with all of the provisions in the bill giving the Government control is that it puts all of the inertia of government in favor of the man getting the concession, and none of it in favor of the Government itself. If you want really to make companies responsible to the Government let the period that they are to exercise the right be fixed, and let it be a short period, and then provide that they must get affirmative action by the Government in regranting the privilege given. [Applause.] Then the burden is put on them. Otherwise you have the condition which we have seen here in the District of Columbia. The reference of the gentleman is very pertinent to the city railways. Every street railway in Washington is subject to the control of the Government theoretically, but there is not one of them that has been actually subject to control by the Government since I have been a Member of Congress, because the entire inertia of government is put in favor of the railway companies, and it is very easy to get some one at some time somewhere to block anything looking toward remedial legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I was in the city council of Chicago for four years when there was an active contest by companies for the control of the street railways in that city. For years it had been the practice under the law to grant franchises for the terms for which they could grant them—20 years—and then the companies would come in for an extension on this street or on that street, or some other street, meeting the growth of the city, and obtain a franchise for 20 years for the new street which would not coincide with the original term of the trunk line down town.

While I was in the council we commenced a fight against the renewal of a franchise, against the granting of extension lines for a longer period than the parent line had. That fight culminated after I went out of the city council, but in its culmination it resulted in a great victory for the people of the city of Chicago. For whereas under the old system the street railways of Chicago charging as they did a 5-cent fare, and not at that time giving universal transfers, kept all the profits which they made, while to-day the city of Chicago receives 55 per cent of the receipts of the railway after the payment of operating expenses and the bonds. The owners of the property receive 45 per cent, as against 55 per cent taken by the city of Chicago; that is, where there were franchises of 20 years. Originally everybody considered that it was a favor for these people to expend their money constructing these lines, but in the course of 20 years, which is a much less period than 50 years, it became proper and desirable to take away some of the exorbitant profits that were being reaped by the persons who held the franchises.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. What I wish to say is this: While the limitation of 50 years is affected no doubt in a legal sense by the power to alter, amend, and repeal, will not the moral effect of it be that Congress will not dare to repeal it to the injury of the stock and bond holders, the value of which has been created by this act of Congress giving them 50 years? Does it not after all prove the correctness of what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] says, that when you undertake to repeal a law, and the initiative is taken by Congress against the owners of the stocks and bonds who claim they are innocent holders, because they bought them innocently, will not you run up against the same difficulty that we have had in the District of Columbia for many years?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the case of the Chicago franchises the gentleman speaks about, was not there a limitation as to the amount that should go into the coffers of the company?

Mr. MANN. No; I think not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The provision on page 12 in this bill, line 10, gives the Government free access to the books of the company. For what purpose is that?

Mr. MANN. To ascertain the amount of horsepower they use, I take it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under that right reserved to the Government they can examine the books as to the profits of the company, whether it makes 6 per cent, to which amount profits of corporations have been limited in certain States, or whether it makes 50 per cent; but the Government can not exercise any right over the profits here, no matter what it may discover by an examination of the books.

Mr. MANN. I think it is perfectly plain.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that the examination of the books goes a little further than that. They can ascertain by examination of the records the amount of water power produced, so the Government will know how much revenue it is entitled to, and then it goes further than that. The bill provides that they may ascertain the amount of water power produced, not only at this dam but at the reservoir above the dam, which is to be constructed by the company, and to ascertain the price at which the company is selling.

And so, in addition to ascertaining the amount of the revenue that the Government is entitled to, to enable the Secretary of War at the end of this 20-year period, and at the end of every 10-year period subsequent thereto, to fix a just rate different from the one provided in the bill for the first 20 years. I will say further that I think the bill ought to provide that the Government, through some official, and I would say the Secretary of War, have the right to fix the charges which the company can make to its consumers. I believe that ought to be a provision of the law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman answer me this quetsion? Suppose we were dealing now with a large corporation, national in its extent—for instance, the United States Steel Corporation or the so-called Sugar Trust—and it should be ascertained that the profits were exorbitant, that they were in excess of 6 per cent, would not the gentleman think there ought to be some limitation by law upon those profits?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, what is the difference in principle between fixing the limitation of profits of a large corporation like the United States Steel Corporation and of this company which runs free as to profits? This company has the help of the Government, and proposes to develop water power with the Government's assistance, and sell it at any price it sees fit.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not think this company, or any other company that is permitted by virtue of authority granted by the Federal Government to develop and sell power, ought to be permitted to charge whatever it sees fit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, the gentleman agrees that there should be an amendment to this bill fixing a limitation upon the profits of a company which has this decided advantage of the assistance of the Government in its enterprise?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think the bill would be much better if there were a provision in it by virtue of which some official of the Federal Government could regulate the charges this company could make to its consumers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think that is in harmony with the public opinion of the day in regard to all these corporation-regulation questions.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. If I understand what the gentleman has said, for some time, he is in favor of an amendment that authorizes the Government, through the Secretary of War, to fix the rate. Individually, I am with the gentleman to that effect.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I received a copy of this bill only this morning. I have not had a chance to read it. It is a long bill. When it was being read by the Clerk of the House, I did not read it, but then talked with a gentleman who knew about the matter and who explained what it was. Hence I have had no chance to prepare an amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will add, with the permission of the gentleman, that that provision was not inserted because it was a very great big proposition and this was an emergency bill, and we did not think, as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that it was proper to insert such a proposition in a bill of this nature.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is called an emergency bill by the Democratic caucus or not. That is a question which does not concern——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Not by the Democratic caucus, but that comes from the engineers, who say unless it is passed at this session of Congress they will not carry out the provisions of the bill, but will go on and build Lock 18, and go on with the scheme they have already started in that direction.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt whatever that they will wait until the action of Congress in reference to this matter, whether it is at this session or two sessions from now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that they will not wait. I am not so much interested in this bill so far as the horsepower is concerned, because we have several horsepower projects on the Coosa River as close to Birmingham as this.

We have a very close coal supply. For nearly 15 years with my colleagues I have endeavored to improve the navigation of this river. The plans have been agreed upon, the money appropriated, and the plans authorized, and, as far as I am concerned, I will not consent to the engineers delaying the improvement of this river for navigation purposes. Now, I expect to vote for this bill because the engineers say that it will cost something between $200,000 or $300,000 less to improve navigation by adopting this plan than it would by following out the old plan, but I certainly will not vote for any delay on this matter, because, if the Congress does not want to adopt this proposition and does not think it is advisable or feasible, I for one will certainly insist that the engineers in the department go on with the old plan and complete the work. I do not consider it a proposition of very great value to the constituency that I represent, because we have unusually cheap coal and we have the escaping gases from the coke ovens that are being used for power purposes now, and I believe can be used for power purposes cheaper than water power, and on the Coosa River there are two projects that have already been authorized by the Government to increase electric power there. I just wanted to say to my friend he is mistaken if he thinks that this question of developing navigation is going to be delayed. It will not be delayed, so far as I am concerned, because I am very much interested in the completion of navigation on that river, and am not nearly as much interested in the question of the developing of this power.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it would have been very unfortunate for this company if the reciprocity bill had been passed at the last session of Congress. There would not have been any extra session to pass it now; hence it would have been carried out, according to my friend from Alabama——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so.

Mr. MANN. I have not had——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. And the State of Alabama would have lost the power.

Mr. MANN. I have not had the experience of either of the gentlemen from Alabama, but I know from my experience that while a matter of this sort is pending before Congress, reported from a committee, that the War Department will not act until it has been disposed of.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will allow me to make a statement there, I desire to say that the contract for the lock and dam at 17, where this 63-foot dam is to be constructed, has already been let, and the contractor has expended about $70,000 already in the prosecution of that contract, so that if Congress fails to act, it is unquestionable that the engineers will not delay the construction of the lock and dam.

Mr. MANN. It is immaterial to me whether the engineers delay or not; it is quite certain if a large water power is to be lost, so that much energy, instead of being conserved, is to be destroyed, that the engineers will wait, and that if the water power ought not to be conserved, probably they will not wait. I am not to be persuaded that because gentlemen wait until their time has gone by when they should have presented their projects before Congress at the proper time that they should come here now and say: We must have the bill as we have it, regardless of its merits, because if we do not get it now we lose all chance of getting it in the future. If we ought to control the price and the rate at which this water power is sold, we ought to control it. We have a commission to which we have given power to control all the railroad rates of the country, all the express rates of the country, all the telegraph rates, and practically all the telephone rates of the country. We have not passed a bill in years giving special privileges that we did not reserve the right of the General Government in some way to control it, and yet here is a proposition to give away power, partly created by the Government, with no control over the rate which shall be charged for its use.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I ask the gentleman a question there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Has Congress ever enacted a law fixing an annual rental for the use of water power, to flow to the National Government for the profit of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. MANN. Congress practically did that in the general dam act which passed at the last session of Congress, and I think the gentleman took an interest in that and is familiar with it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But this is the first bill in which a specific charge is made against a project in the way of an annual rental for the benefit of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. MANN. I will not undertake to say it is as to an annual rental or not. We have passed a number of bills where the rental was provided for.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If that is the case, then this is a tremendously important matter.

Mr. MANN. It is. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is a serious matter that the Federal Government should go into the State of Alabama and mulct its natural resources for the benefit of the Federal Treasury. The Federal Government has an interest in keeping this water open to navigation, but when it goes into my State and converts the natural resources of that State into a source of profit for the Federal Treasury, that is a revolutionary departure from all former procedure on the part of the Federal Government in reference to these matters. And it most deeply and vitally affects particularly all the States of the West. I would like to have a few months' time to think over a matter like this. I am not particularly interested in the rate in this bill, but I am immensely concerned in the principle involved, in the effort made by the Federal Government to go into a sovereign State and take its natural resources and convert them into a source of profit for the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman about another matter. The bill says:

> The said company is hereby authorized to construct said storage dam and reservoir at Sanders Shoals in accordance with the act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters.

Why does it not provide that the company authorized shall not only construct, but maintain and operate this dam in accordance with the general dam act?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It was the thought of the committee that the words "in accordance with the provisions of the general dam act" would cover all the provisions of that act. I will state to the gentleman, without divulging any secrets unnecessarily, that the suggestion was made to the committee that the words ought to be "in accordance with and subject to the limitations of the general dam act."

Mr. MANN. I take it, then, that the gentleman on the committee would have no objection to inserting after the word "construct" the words "maintain and operate"?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Of course, I am not authorized to speak for the committee. Personally I would have no objection myself. This particular matter was submitted to the engineer department, and they believed "in accordance with the provisions of the general dam act" carried with it all the limitations and all the restrictions of that act. That was their opinion, and for that reason this other was not put in.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that some time ago, after the passage of these general bills, I prepared forms of bills in connection with the War Department, and all of us concluded that it was necessary to use not only "construct" but the words "maintain and operate," so that the construction, maintenance, and operation should be under the general dam act. They might be anyhow, for that matter.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi request recognition?

Mr. SHERLEY. If he does not, I do.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to know anything about the details of this project, but I have some very firm views in regard to the policy of the United States in granting power rights in connection with navigable streams, and I am not willing to remain silent during the consideration of this bill. Let me suggest to the House two propositions. The first is that the term provided in this bill for the life of the contract is too long. Fifty years in the future is too long a period for any legislative body to wisely provide conditions for. Secondly, it is of no great practical value to name a less number of years if you put all of the burden upon the Government for changing the condition of the contract at the expiration of that time. As I said a while ago in interrupting the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], under the terms of this bill at the end of 20 years the War Department must affirmatively take action in order to change the rate that is charged of $1 per horsepower.

Now, all of us who have had the slightest experience with corporations subject to regulations by the Federal Government know the difficulty that is experienced in getting action looking to putting upon them regulations more onerous than existing ones. It is practically impossible for the Congress of the United States to legislate effectively even as to the street railways of the District of Columbia; and yet if the franchises of those railways ended at a particular time and their property was subject to conversion by the Federal Government, they would be coming here asking action by the Federal Government, and the condition of inertia would be removed. If this bill is to pass, it should have provisions in it stipulating for a shorter term, and after the expiration of the term the failure to agree with the Government upon new terms should cause the rights of the company to cease and another provision made for the taking over and disposition of the property that may have been placed there by such company. But to say that this House, upon the short notice that it has had, should pass this bill granting a 50-year franchise is to seek at our hands more than I for one am willing to grant. [Applause.]

I yield now to the gentleman.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thought he desired to ask some questions. But before I take my seat I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] whether he would be willing either to accept amendments in the line I have suggested, or, better still—because it is almost impossible for any man, no matter what his skill may be, to accurately write out his amendments on the floor of the House in a matter of this kind—to recommit the bill for amendment in that respect.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. In my judgment, the enterprise could not be financed with a limit fixed at less than 50 years. The bill came from the Senate with a provision fixing the limit at 99 years, on the theory that it was necessary that 99 years should be granted in order to finance this proposition. My own judgment was that a 99-year period was too much. The committee agreed with me, and agreed to a 50-year term. That, I think, is a very reasonable limit for financing this matter, which involves the expenditure of $4,000,000 in the State of Alabama. That is what that corporation would have to pay out.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's opinion is that 50 years is the shortest practicable period?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Yes; in which it could be financed.

Mr. SHERLEY. To that I will say that we are constantly, in our city, selling franchises for our streets for a much shorter term. But does not the gentleman think that, instead of leaving it to his opinion or to my opinion as to the length of time necessary in order to have the work undertaken, the Government can very well undertake to try a shorter period, and instead of naming an individual company, follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and leave it to the highest bidder? I know that there are several companies of very large capitalization in my State—and I am sure there are in other States—companies that are anxiously looking for opportunities for the development of water power of this character; and, against the judgment of the gentleman from Alabama, I simply submit my own, that the Government could very readily get bids upon a proposition containing a much shorter limit than 50 years.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. My opinion was not volunteered, I will say to the gentleman. The gentleman asked my opinion, and I gave it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly. I am not complaining because the gentleman gave it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman let me say one word more?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. That opinion was very thoroughly discussed in our committee, and the committee unanimously agreed upon a 50-year limit. It is not my opinion alone; it is also the opinion of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I take no exception to the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky, but I will say this, that Kentucky is more developed than Alabama is. Kentucky is an older State. It has more population; it has more money; it can finance propositions more readily. But the proposition mentioned by the gentleman from Kentucky, as to developing cities with street railroads, is a very different proposition from the development of water power in this section of country that I have endeavored to describe to this House; a section of country that you can not reach to build locks; a section of country that you have no room to go there and build a dam; a section of country that has to make concessions to capital in order to interest it in using its money in the development of the water power in that particular section.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I should like to say further to the gentleman that I myself am interested in the navigation more than anything else, and the matter of this water-power company is purely an incident with me. I do not care whether this company carries out this contract or not. If it does not, then in the next Congress it is my idea that we can put it up to the highest bidder.

Mr. SIMS. Then let us put the bill over.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. To attempt now to follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and make a bill here for the purpose of putting it out to the highest bidder is to do something which up to this period in the history of Congress has never been done. It is done in cities. I do not know that it has ever been done in States, and I submit it has never been done by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, his proposition, translated, is this: We will pass this bill. If it proves that the terms we have imposed upon the company are so onerous that the company will not accept them, then we can legislate again; but if, on the other hand, the terms that we have made are so favorable that they should never have been granted, then the Congress of the United States has given away its power. I do not mean in any sense to underestimate the opinion of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or the individual opinion of the gentleman, but if there has been one marked advance in dealing with matters of this kind in the last 20 years it has been the shortening of the term of contracts and fuller control retained by the Nation, the States, and municipalities. I am not willing to accept either the gentleman's judgment, or the judgment of any dozen or two dozen men, as to this matter, when it can be put to the test of actual trial by offering it for bids in the open market. Neither am I impressed with the argument of the lack of wealth in the State of Alabama. Had anybody else undertaken to say about that great State what the gentleman has just said, he would have been the first to rise in defense of her resources and her ability properly to provide for all present and future needs. But even with the conditions as bad as he believes or states, it still remains that these matters of water power are not dependent on local capitalization. To-day the capital of all America is seeking opportunity for investment in profitable water-power sites, and so the question of the condition of Alabama is immaterial in this case.

Neither am I impressed with the argument that the gentleman is more concerned with the navigability of the river than with the use of the water power. If that be true, then I suggest that the solution of this whole matter can readily be found by striking out all provisions in the bill relating to the sale of the water power. But what you are asking of us is that we as legislators here shall agree to a bill that does give a long lease of the use of the water power to be created.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the limitation of 50 years was taken from the general dam act. As stated by the gentleman from Alabama, this bill, as it came from the Senate, provided a limit of 99 years. Both the subcommittee and the full committee thought——

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not very much impressed by the contractual terms that are sent to us from the other end of the Capitol. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. But we have a law on the subject already, and we relegate this company to the terms of the general dam act. We make that applicable to the construction and operation of this work.

Mr. SHERLEY. All I can say is that every man is entitled to his own view, and I respect him. But I do not believe that there is a common council in my State that would dare in this day and generation to propose to give a 50-year contract for any purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. That may be true, and very properly so, because improvements usually placed in a city are of such nature that they can be easily taken out; but you put a

$1,500,000 dam across a stream of water, and it is not very easily removed.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's argument is not quite accurate. There is no more investment of a character difficult to realize on in the building of such a dam than there is in the building of the line and the laying of the rails of a street-railway company.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. This is not exactly in the shape of a question, I will say to the gentleman, but rather in the way of an explanation which his language calls for. I never would interrupt anybody who had anything to say about the State of Alabama if they said what I said. I spoke the truth, and I think Alabama can stand the truth, and I am not afraid to meet the truth. I only told what everybody knows and what those in and out of the State of Alabama know is the truth.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have such an affection for Alabama that I could not help but think even better of the gentleman's State than his statement seems to warrant me in believing. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. One more suggestion: The State of Alabama has given the water-power rights to this water company at the head of this stream. The State of Alabama in her policy has already disposed of her rights. The policy of the State of Alabama and of her legislature and the construction of the law by her judges is that the General Government has no power over the water power of a State, and she has already given to this particular company the right to create a water power upon this stream above navigation.

Mr. SHERLEY. That was the responsibility of the State of Alabama. She has seen fit to exercise it in her wisdom, but we can not escape our responsibility because of her action. Neither am I willing to accept in its entirety the statement made by the gentleman from Colorado. For my part, I believe that those things that belong to the Nation belong to the Nation, notwithstanding they are in the confines of a State. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. So do I; I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I believe that the responsibility is upon this House this day. I am not willing to vote for this franchise for this length of time. Were I able on the floor, in the heat of debate, in the consideration of this measure, to offer amendments properly safeguarding the bill, I would gladly do so, because I dislike very much to delay the work, and I dislike to do anything that may be against the wishes of the gentleman from Alabama; but on this matter I feel deeply enough to feel obligated in the present condition of this bill to use what influence I may have against its present passage. I will now yield the floor unless some gentleman wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. BOWMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOWMAN. I wholly agree with the general proposition that the gentleman has stated, but it does seem to me—and I will say by the way that I knew nothing about this proposition until it was presented to the House this morning—as an engineer it presents peculiar conditions to me outside of those that would be controlled by a railway. Here is a corporation that has certain rights above the limits of navigation where it controls about 14,000 horsepower. They propose to expend $4,000,000 in that work. They desire to add to this 15,000 horsepower which the United States Government can get and save an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars. It does seem to me, in view of the fact that in 20 years the Government can get control by advancing the rates to such a limit as to oblige the company to do what is right, and if there is such a feeling in that district, that the rates are unreasonable—if they are oppressing the community—the Government can advance the rates unless they be reduced to a reasonable figure; but it does seem to me that this great force of nature going to waste should be used. It does not seem to me that technicalities of law should interfere with the development of that section of the country.

Mr. SHERLEY. In reply to what the gentleman has said, I think there has been no attempt to indulge in technicalities of the law. Neither do I believe that America is subject to the indictment of having been too slow in the development of her resources. If the Federal Government has made any mistake in the past, it has been in being too quick under the specious pleas of people who were able to carry weight in granting such privileges. I do not think that the development of water power in Alabama is so pressing that we can afford to set the precedent of issuing 50-year leases in the use of water power hereafter.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. It is now 4 o'clock. I think it is safe to say that we will be here a week from to-day. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky and the other gentlemen who are specially urging this bill believe that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] would expedite and possibly secure the passage of the bill if he and the others interested would let it go over until Members have a chance to prepare amendments to it, which amendments in the main probably would be acceptable to those who are urging the bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I can say to the gentleman this, that if the House is opposed to this bill as it is written, but is not opposed to the development of power there on such conditions as the House itself may hereafter think desirable, that can be accomplished without voting against this bill by simply striking out all except the first three sections; and I want to submit this suggestion if the gentleman from Kentucky will indulge me——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not think that he can do that this afternoon?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not know what can be done this afternoon.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows he could not amend the bill by striking out all except the first three sections this afternoon. It would be so much simpler to strike out the enacting clause that I think the committee would do that if it is pressed this afternoon.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Let me call the gentleman's attention to what will be the result of that, and here is the interest that I have in mind: If the bill is defeated, the lock at 17 is going to be constructed under the contract as already made, and there will be no further possibility of water-power development there; the gentleman may rest assured of that. The engineers have so stated in their report. They say:

> If Congress fails to act on Senate bill No. 943 at the present session, or local interests fail to comply promptly with the terms of any cooperation authorized by Congress, it is recommended that the improvement of the Black Warrior River and the proposed extension of this improvement up the Mulberry and Locust Forks be provided for in accordance with the plan which contemplates the use of a 42-foot dam at No. 18, at an additional cost of $292,152.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is now discussing the merits of the bill, and I am trying to get at a legislative proposition. I was not born yesterday in legislation, and I do not think I am quite a sucker. I know the gentleman does not take me for one. If this bill had only one section with one word in it and it should be passed as a substitute for the Senate bill, we all know perfectly well that we would be called upon to vote for a conference report in the end, in the closing minutes of a session, when it would go through like greased lightning. Let the House have a chance to consider it and amend it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Why has not the House a chance to consider it and amend it now?

Mr. MANN. Why, Members of the House have not had a chance to even read the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], as I promised to, and then I shall not detain the committee longer.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me merely because he stated that his position differed from mine, which statement on his part seemed to meet with the approval of the House, and I simply wanted to call his attention to the fact that we grant railways of this country rights of way from ocean to ocean without charging a single cent for that invaluable privilege. The Government pours hundreds of millions of dollars into the channels and harbors of the rivers and streams and bays of this country without a cent of charge to those using those streams and harbors, and I fail to see the difference in principle or the justice in muleting an individual or a corporation merely because he or it proposes to develop and use a water-power site.

We are spending millions of dollars, for instance, to build dams in the Ohio River, and we do not propose to make any extra charge to those who use the surface of that stream for transportation purposes; and I object, above all things, to making it a source of Federal profit instead of a source of profit to the State.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the State has given to this company what rights it has, given them over without charge and without price, and so has every other State? Every proposition that comes here of this sort comes with a franchise from the State which the State has given away.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman that is the State's negligence and the State's lookout. I would rather give this company that river forever for nothing than to recognize the principle that the Federal Government can go out into my State and make the water-power sites and plants of that State a source of Federal taxation, thereby depriving the State of taxation upon its own resources.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will yield. The gentleman is mistaken when he said this was an entirely new departure. The Federal Government now charges at a number of dams where water power is created an annual rental to corporations that use the water power. In the last river and harbor bill which was passed the right to construct dams down on the Coosa River, in Alabama, carried with it a condition that the company to which this right was granted should pay an annual rental to the Government of $1 per horsepower for the use of the water. This is not the first case of that kind. That precedent has already been established, and I am one who is very thankful that the precedent has been established.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I asked that very question and did not get the impression that the precedent had been established heretofore, and if it has I do not concede the soundness of the precedent.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, it has been established, and the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky appeals very strongly to me, if he will indulge me further. In the last session of Congress I had the privilege and took the opportunity to oppose a bill that proposed to grant a tremendous water power, the greatest that ever had been produced on the face of the earth, to a corporation for 99 years. That limitation was put in after the State had granted to that corporation all the rights the State had to grant, a charter right without any limit whatever. The committee put in a 99-year limitation. I took the position on this floor then that no corporation ought to be chartered by the Government or granted any privilege to do anything beyond the limit of 50 years. I am delighted to know that the gentleman from Kentucky says now that even that is too long. I think it would be wicked in this Government to give away these water powers which are just now being developed in this country. No man can tell what their extent will be. The engineers say that at this particular point they can develop twenty to twenty-five thousand horsepower with the present status of electrical science and the development of mechanical science to-day, but who can say what will be the possibility 10 years from now, when instead of 15,000 it may be 500,000 horsepower can be developed there? And when that comes, when the water power of this country has passed away from Federal control and has been given away, as the States have given it away, to corporations, no gentleman here doubts there will be some gentleman's agreement among all these water-power corporations which will enable them to dictate the terms upon which every wheel in this country will move, unless the strong arm of the Federal Government is interposed to put a limitation upon the extent of the right, or, better still and in addition still, the right is preserved in the Federal Government to say what the selling charge may be. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question. I am thoroughly in accord with his position that the Federal Government ought not to give to a corporation a long period of lease and let it have the power to charge exorbitant rates to the consumer. Now, what provision is there in this bill that safeguards the public that uses this water power that the Government generously bestows upon this corporation for 50 years? Is there any protection to the people?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In the first place, the Government does not generously bestow it upon a corporation for 50 years. It rents it to a corporation at an annual rental, which is subject to a readjustment at every 10-year period. In my opinion, and this is not the first time I have expressed it—I mean by that that I did not wait until I got on the floor of the House to do so—no corporation, not because it is a corporation, but the same would apply to an individual as well, ought to have the privilege of developing this power without being subject to regulation by the Federal authority as to the selling charges of the power produced.

Mr. JAMES. And yet there is no provision of that sort in this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] said a moment ago he would be very willing to accept an amendment which would incorporate such a provision.

Mr. JAMES. It is unfortunate that that amendment was not put in the bill before it came on the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman can not get into any quarrel with me over that proposition.

Mr. JAMES. I am not seeking to do that.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] if it is not true that the St. Lawrence Development Co. in the bill in the last Congress were to pay so much per horsepower either to the State of New York or the National Government?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They were to pay what I thought was a ridiculously small compensation to the State of New York, but none to the Federal Government. And let me state here that that corporation through its representatives stated to the committee that under no circumstances would they accept the franchise and undertake the work unless they were given a perpetual right, or, in other words, if there was any limitation put upon the perpetual right which had been granted by the State of New York. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in spite of that declaration, put in a limitation of 99 years, and they then agreed to accept that. When it came on the floor of the House it was under suspension of the rules and was not subject to amendment. I opposed the bill because I wanted it limited to 50 years. They had insisted that they could not finance it even if we put the 99-year limitation in. After the House defeated the bill because it did not contain the 50-year limitation, I was informed, and I think reliably so, that that corporation was willing and anxious to accept the franchise with a 50-year limitation in it.

Mr. AUSTIN. That called for an expenditure of $40,000,000, did it not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes. They are willing to take it for 50 years and to expend $40,000,000 in development work.

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to enter into a discussion of this proposition myself. My own constituency are the ones that are interested in it, if anybody is interested in this proposition. We have on the west of us the Warrior River, with this water power; we have on the east of us the Coosa River, a very much larger river, with five distinct water powers that are better than this, or most of them are. The development of one of them is now being started, and will furnish a great deal more horsepower than will be developed on the Warrior River, and is a very much better horsepower for our people for this reason: The Warrior River comes down between two high banks of rock. There is a tremendous flow of water in the winter time and a very small flow of water in the summer time.

This project has been investigated before, and all the engineers whom I have ever heard of that have investigated it have reported that it was not feasible or practical as a development for power, so far as the river itself is concerned; that the only way you can develop continuous power on that river, a power with which you can run street cars and engines and electric-light plants—is for whoever develops it to go back into the mountains and build great dams in order to hold the supply of water to turn loose in the summer time, to use when the stream runs dry. On the other hand, the development on the Coosa River, the engineers' reports show, is a more uniform, continuous supply of water than in any other stream in America. And they are developing that power, where there will be only 50 miles of wire needed to bring it into Birmingham.

On the other hand, we have great coke ovens there that are pouring their smoke up into the heavens. That surplus smoke and that surplus heat is being used by some of these companies and can be used for electrical power any day. There are more possibilities for competition in Birmingham for electrical power than anywhere in America that I know of, and I think the question involved in this bill is the question as to whether the men who intend to finance it should invest their money in the enterprise, and not as to whether my constituents are being badly treated or not. I stand for it that my constituents are not afraid for you to give those men their 50 years in which to make their money out of it.

We have five competing water powers on the Coosa River; other water powers on the Tennessee River. We have every great coke oven in the district of Birmingham pouring its smoke into the skies, ready to make if utilized cheaper power and cheaper lights and cheaper heat than you can make out of this water power on the Warrior River.

Now, I will say to you that I did not introduce this bill, and the only interest I have in it is the question of the improvement of navigation. As to the 50-year limit, gentlemen on this floor talk as though the committee were trying to get this Congress to accept something new, to grant some special right. Why, you gentlemen yourselves wrote into the general law of the land, I think, in a bill offered by the gentleman from Illinois, if I am not mistaken, the same proposition—the general dam act, requiring that in all these dams for electrical power the period shall be 50 years.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] is entitled to that credit, but I wrote the original act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It came from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. MANN. It did.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And you thought the time ought to be 50 years, and this House ratified it, and you put it on the statute books; and yet you are criticizing this bill, which simply ratifies your general dam act, as if it were going out of the way and accomplishing something unusual. It is nothing but the general law, the law of the land to-day. The law of the land in reference to the development of water power is the law that you must go to and develop your power under when questions of navigation are not involved. Suppose that the Government was not involved in navigation in this stream and that there was no navigation to be promoted. These men would not have to come here for a special bill. They would take the general law that you put on the statute books, and under that law they would create this development which this bill provides for. Is there any harm in a bill that simply writes on the statute books what you said was good for all of the people in the United States? That is all there is in this proposition.

Now, as to what my friend from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] said, I want to call his attention to one proposition. I agree with him fully that the Government of the United States has no right to tax the untaxed waters of the States. Those waters belong to the States and to the people of the States, and the Government of the United States, the former President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, in my judgment has no right to levy one dollar of taxation for the use of these waters, either for mill purposes or electrical purposes or any other purposes.

That is not the question involved here. The question involved in this case is a different one, and to that I wish to call the attention of my friend from Colorado. Here is a case where the Government of the United States is not proposing to charge for the use of the water.

The Government of the United States, by the investment of its own money, has created power. That power belongs to it. It proposes to build a dam. That dam belongs to the Government of the United States. When the water goes over that dam the Government of the United States can put it through a turbine wheel and use the power created to generate electricity, to operate the dam, and to light the houses of the employees along the banks. Having that power, in my judgment it has a right to sell that power. Not that the Government of the United States has a right to build a dam to create power for sale; but when the Government of the United States builds a dam for navigation purposes, within the power of the Constitution, if there is additional power created by that dam, incidental to the expenditure of the money used in the building of the dam, I say the Government of the United States does not have to let the water run over the top of the dam and go to waste, but that the Government of the United States may sell the power for such price as it thinks fair and reasonable.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Conceding what the gentleman says to be true, I look at this case as merely an adaptation of the principle that has been established in conservation, to fit the particular circumstances. Out in my State the Government does not claim to own the waters in the streams, because they are nonnavigable streams. We do not have to come to Congress to get permission to build bridges and dams, because the State owns those streams; but the Government says to us, "We own the lands bordering on the streams that are desirable for water-power sites, and we will charge you a rental for the use of those lands upon which to locate your dams and power plants, which will be equivalent to a charge for the use of the water."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman's case is not in point with this.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; but it is all a part of the new doctrine that the State virtually owns these waters and has a right to tax their use.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. I agree with the gentleman from Colorado in what he asserts. I say that the Government of the United States has no right to tax the running water, and it would have no right to build a dam for the purpose of creating power. But mark you, gentlemen, this question is not an undetermined one. The Government of the United States by past legislation has already committed itself to making this river navigable up to this point, and has authorized the engineers to go ahead. It is not a new proposition. If you defeat this bill, you do not stop the navigation. You do not stop the project which has been authorized. It is on the statute books. A part of the money has been appropriated, and in your sundry civil bill, along with your other improvements, when the money already appropriated is exhausted, you will have to bring in sufficient money to complete the navigation project. There is not anything new involved there. The one proposition here is that the Government engineers have favored a change of plan. They favor building one dam instead of the four dams that are authorized. They say that that one dam will cost between $200,000 and $300,000 less to the Government of the United States than the building of the four dams already authorized would cost. Now, is there any gentleman here who wants to defeat a bill that will cost the Government $300,000 less than what it has already committed itself to do?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the principle of the bill, and by way of preface to the question I shall ask I wish to make a statement to render the question intelligible.

Some 50 years ago the General Government permitted a bridge company near Pittsburgh to cross the Monongahela River. Latterly, in the interests of navigation, it was found necessary to pass an act of Congress to have the bridge taken down.

The act of Congress provided that compensation should be made to the bridge company for the value of the physical structure. A controversy arose and the case went to the Supreme Court, and that court held that the limitation of the compensation to the value of the physical structure was unconstitutional, and that the Government must pay the bridge company the value of the physical structure and also the value of its franchise, or of its privilege to make profits through the bridge.

In the act just now proposed I find the clause reserving to the Government the right to alter and amend, but I should like to feel that if in the interest of navigation the Government should find it necessary to take down the dam to which the power plant is being annexed it would not have to pay the power plant the franchise value or capitalization of the profits it might be making out of the privilege given it by the Government, as in the Monongahela case.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is simple. The gentleman realizes that this is not a similar case to the bridge case that he speaks of. The bridge was built by a private party, and this dam here is going to be built by the Government.

Mr. LEWIS. The plant for the utilization of the power under this bill is to be built by a private company.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. All the plant consists of is the right of the company to run a 3-foot board across the top of the dam and get 3 feet more of water than the dam furnishes for navigation and the right to draw that water down to the face of the dam.

Mr. LEWIS. But the privilege conferred by the bill is to take power from this dam for 50 years and sell it, and that would be regarded as a franchise privilege protected by the Constitution of the United States under the decision I have referred to. If I invite a guest into my house to stay for a season and then find that I have to shorten his stay, I should dislike the prospect of being brought into court, perhaps, to pay him for the value of the privilege that I have had to withdraw.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from Maryland that the whole proposition is simply this: You do not have to build this dam; you do not have to give the company these rights. If you do give it these rights to put up this additional work and to pay half a million dollars, as it contracts to do, for purchasing this overflowed land, it certainly ought to have a reasonable time to get its money back. Of course, the Government is not going to pull down the dam. If it pulled down the dam it would destroy the navigation. There can be no purpose in pulling it down. The Government has the right to amend this proposition, under its regulation, as it sees fit. The whole proposition before this House in no way violates the general law. Here is a company that is authorized under the general law of Alabama, and it has got to obey those laws. Alabama is prepared to take care of its own citizens and the company that must eventually compete with five other dam-power companies, and all the power that goes up in the smoke of the furnaces.

I am responsible to my constituency. Do gentlemen on this floor think that I am favoring a bill that is going to injure the rights of my constituents or my State? You fixed this 50-year limit in your general dam bill. Now, the real and only question that is involved in this proposition is, if you want to beat this bill under the law you have already authorized, the Government engineers have got to go to work and build four more dams. That is a question for you to decide. Congress has enacted the law. They have got to build four more dams to make the river navigable up to the point where they want it navigable. The engineers, not the Congress, not the committee—the engineers say it will cost $200,000 or $300,000 more than if you adopt this plan.

Now, as to the price that this company is to pay for it. That was not fixed by this committee; that is fixed by the general regulations of the War Department that they charge in every case. It is the general regulation that they are applying to everybody else and which they have said in the War Department is a fair amount to charge for a horsepower.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much does the Government of the United States spend for the construction of this dam?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Up to this time nothing.

Mr. MADDEN. How much will they expend? That is what I want to know.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. For each dam?

Mr. MADDEN. For the 63-foot dam.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. For the Dams No. 17, No. 18, and No. 19, $1,498,246.

Now, there are two other dams that will cost $787,422. The total cost of all the dams is $2,285,669. The Dam No. 17, with the 63-foot lift, will cost $2,028,154, leaving a balance in favor of the Government on the cost of $257,514.

Mr. MADDEN. $15,000 a year on an investment of two million and a half would be less than three-quarters of 1 per cent on the money invested.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. But that investment has nothing to do with the water power. That is an investment you make anyway, in order to make navigation in that river up to these coal fields.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to say that the Government was charging what it did charge because of the investment made in the construction of the dam.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My friend from Illinois did not understand me. Here is what I say. I say this new proposition saves the Government outright $250,000 in round figures.

Mr. MADDEN. Did not the gentleman say this in answer to the question of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] that the question involved here was not similar to the one involved in the Colorado proposition, which the gentleman stated, and that the charge made by the Government was not a charge for the water, but a charge for the investment which it made in the construction of the dam?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I said that, but I did not apply it to the $15,000. If the gentleman will listen just a minute, he will learn that the Government will save, in order to make the Warrior River navigable, by the adoption of this new proposition, $250,000 in the beginning. It will get a rental value of $15,000 in addition from now until the contract expires from these people, that it will not get at all if you do not adopt this plan. Otherwise, it will let that power go over those four dams and accomplish nothing.

Mr. Chairman, there is another question that I want the gentlemen on this side of the House to understand. You will surely build these four dams, because I say to you candidly if this bill is defeated, I shall insist, so far as I am concerned, that the engineers go ahead with their present work and finish that navigation, because that is what I want.

I am not concerned about this power. We have plenty of power from other sources, but if you defeat this bill and require them to build four dams instead of one, you are going to put a continual charge on the Government of the United States, according to the reports of the engineers, of $6,000 each year from now on until eternity for each additional dam.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. For each one of these dams?

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if he thinks it is quite a fair argument to say to the House that unless we pass a bill giving a franchise to a corporation for half a century, with no limitation upon the amount that they shall charge the consumer for this power, an insistence is going to be made that certain work shall go on which will involve an expenditure of $200,000 or $300,000 out of the Treasury more than would be expended if we give away this right, to which we do not agree; that unless we turn the people over to the insatiate maw of this monopoly, which we are unwilling to do, he is going to insist that $300,000 or $400,000 more shall be expended. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Kentucky has just come out of a successful campaign for Senator, where a play to the gallery has purchased votes, but I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that to claim that one company controlling one water power is a monopoly, to answer me with that proposition that I am pleading for a monopoly, when I have just stated to him that there are five water powers in use, and that the smoke that comes out of these coke ovens is the power to produce electricity, for him to say these things is not a fair proposition to put to me. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in reply to the gentleman's statement that I just came out of a successful campaign in Kentucky where an appeal to the galleries purchased votes, that I should have expected a statement more considerate of the people of Kentucky, among whom the gentleman was born, than a statement such as he made reflecting upon them. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well——

Mr. JAMES. And, in addition, I may say that Kentuckians are just as intelligent as Alabamians and they are just as little susceptible to the influence of playing to the galleries as any people in this Republic. It does not intimidate me any for the argument to be made here by the gentleman from Alabama that because I am unwilling to give a half a century franchise to a corporation in Birmingham, Ala., with an unlimited right to fix charges upon the consumers, to say that I am playing to the gallery. If that is playing to the galleries, the sooner the gentleman from Alabama commences playing to the gallery the sweeter the applause of the gallery will be to the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, I have never learned to play to the gallery. [Applause.] I do not know how to do it, and I want to say this, my answer to the gentleman a moment ago was provoked by what he said. I do not think it was justified, and I wish now, in justice to him and myself, to withdraw what I said. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Then, in like justice to the gentleman from Alabama, I withdraw what I said. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one word. We say sometimes in the heat of argument things between friends that we ought not to say, and I want to say that this franchise of 50 years is now the general law of the land, not fixed by this bill, and I do say it is fair for me to insist that the law that Congress has adopted should be carried out. I do say it is fair for me to insist before the War Department that the improvement of this river should go on, and go on at once, and I think it is perfectly fair for me to call to your attention that here are four dams that will cost $6,000 each year to maintain; that if you bring it down to one it will only cost $6,000 a year to maintain that one. Now, if you defeat this bill you lose $15,000 in rentals, you lose $250,000 in the additional cost of the improvements, and you put an additional charge of $18,000 a year in perpetuity on the Government. Now, that is all I have to say; that is all there is in the proposition. [Applause.] I believe it is in the interest of the Government for you to build one dam, as this bill provides for, instead of four, as the law now on the statute books will compel you to build should you defeat the present proposition.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAGE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 943) to improve navigation on the Black Warrior River in the State of Alabama and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions (S. Res. 131):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM PIERCE FRYE, late a Senator from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. FRYE at his late home in Lewiston, Me.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these proceedings to the House of Representatives and request the House to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

In compliance with the foregoing the Vice President appointed as said committee Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. CULLOM, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. BACON, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. WETMORE, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. WARREN, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, and Mr. DILLINGHAM.

DEATH OF SENATOR WILLIAM P. FRYE.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that the delegation from the State of Maine and the House of Representatives learn officially, by a message from the Senate, of the death of the distinguished Senator from our State. At a later day I will ask the House to set apart a time to commemorate by proper exercises his life, character, and public services. At the present time I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 273.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, a Senator of the United States from the State of Maine for 30 years and for 10 years a Member of this House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of 16 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HINDS, Mr. MCGILLICUDDY, Mr. GOULD, Mr. GUERNSEY, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, Mr. MANN, Mr. CANNON, Mr. CULLOP, Gen. SHERWOOD, Mr. NYE, Mr. COX of Indiana, Mr. PETERS, Mr. LAWRENCE, Mr. REILLY, and Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the additional resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, August 10, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending legislation in regard to old Federal building and site in Houston, Tex., advising its retention by the Government (H. Also, petition of Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Cal., favoring immediate legislation regulating tolls for use of Panama Canal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: Resolutions of the Switchmen's Union of America, requesting Congress to pass legislation to have cast a bronze tablet or bust commemorating the work of the late Edward A. Moseley while secretary to the Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on the Library.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 10, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 6747. An act to reenact an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across St. Croix River, and to extend the time for commencing and completing the said structure, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 144. An act to legalize a bridge across the Pend Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash.;

S. 850. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to legalize and establish a pontoon railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa," approved June 6, 1874;

S. 1627. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across and over the Arkansas River, and for other purposes;

S. 2766. An act to authorize the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. to construct and operate a bridge across the St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes; and

S. 2878. An act to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Calumet River, in the State of Indiana.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2495) to define and classify health, accident, and death benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 4682. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Glenhayes Station, in Wayne County, W. Va.;

H. R. 7690. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Snake River at the town of Nyssa, Oreg.;

H. R. 8146. An act to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois;

H. R. 8653. An act to give the District of Columbia a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in patent cases;

H. R. 11477. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va.;

H. R. 11545. An act to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to place the name of Annie M. Matthews on the pension roll of the police and firemen's pension fund; and

H. R. 11723. An act permitting the building of a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River between Burnett County, Wis., and Pine County, Minn.

The message also transmitted resolutions of the House on the death of Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, late a Senator from the State of Maine, and announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. HINDS, Mr. MCGILLICUDDY, Mr. GOULD, Mr. GUERNSEY, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, Mr. MANN, Mr. CANNON, Mr. CULLOP, Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. NYE, Mr. COX of Indiana, Mr. PETERS, Mr. LAWRENCE, Mr. REILLY, and Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) to amend certain appropriation acts approved March 4, 1911, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

DEATH OF SENATOR WILLIAM P. FRYE.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MARITIME ASSOCIATION OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK, 78 Broad Street, New York, August 9, 1911.

Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit below resolutions adopted by the board of directors of this association at a regular monthly meeting held this day, viz:

"Whereas the board of directors of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York has learned with deep regret of the death of Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, senior Senator from the State of Maine; and

"Whereas, representing as he did for many years a constituency occupying an important position in the shipping and commercial world, Senator FRYE from the outset of his career became an ardent champion of the shipping interests of our country, rendering such service as to place these interests under lasting obligations to his memory: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this board realizes that in his death our association has lost a valued friend, who invariably aided in the furtherance of measures advocated by our organization; that the maritime and commercial interests have suffered an irreparable loss, and that in the councils of Congress, where his varied and expert knowledge in all affairs pertaining to shipping was ever at their disposal, he will be sadly missed, and that the country at large is deprived of the services of an honored statesman, whose voice was ever on the side of right and whose career is worthy of emulation; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the family of the deceased and to the Vice President of the United States."

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM SIMMONS,
President pro tempore.

Attest:

C. LYNN BUNDY.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Assembly of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In assembly, February 27, 1911. Mr. Brooks offered for the consideration of the house a resolution in the words following:

Whereas the election of a President of the United States every four years tends to unsettle the economic and commercial conditions of the country for a year preceding and succeeding such election; and

Whereas the Presidents of the United States with few exceptions have been renominated necessitating the devotion of much of their time to political campaigning for reelection: Be it therefore

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to submit to the legislatures of the several States for ratification a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution extending the term of the President of the United States to the period of six years, and further amending the Constitution so that no President can serve more than one term; and be it further

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the speaker of the assembly and the lieutenant governor transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the Vice President copies of this resolution.

July 19, 1911. The senate returned the concurrent resolution in relation to extending the term of the President of the United States with a message that they have concurred in the passage of the same without amendment.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Albany, ss:

I, Daniel D. Frisbie, speaker of the Assembly of the State of New York, do hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing resolution with the original thereof contained in the original documentary copy of the journal of proceedings of the assembly of February 27 and July 19, so far as it relates to the proceedings had and taken by the assembly on said dates with reference to said resolution and that the foregoing is a correct transcript of said proceedings and of said resolution and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this —— day of August, 1911.

DANIEL D. FRISBIE, Speaker.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Assembly of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

State of New York, in Assembly, Albany, July 12, 1911. Mr. A. J. Levy offered for the consideration of the house a resolution in the words following:

"Whereas it is, and always has been, a fundamental principle of our Government that the rights of its citizens shall not be impaired at home or abroad because of religious belief; and

"Whereas our Government concludes its treaties for the equal protection of all classes of its citizens without regard to its religious belief; and

"Whereas our Government, on the 18th day of December, 1832, at St. Petersburg, concluded a treaty with Russia, in which it was provided that the inhabitants of our respective States 'shall be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts whatsoever of said territory in order to attend to their affairs, and they shall enjoy to that effect the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce'; and

"Whereas the Government of Russia has violated the aforesaid treaty by construing the aforegoing provision to mean that American citizens of Jewish faith are subject in Russia to the same class restrictions that Russia imposes upon Russian inhabitants of Jewish faith to sojourn and reside in Russia in order to attend to their affairs and to enjoy to that effect the same security and protection as non-Jewish native Russians, and by refusing to honor American passports issued to American citizens of Jewish faith; and

"Whereas Hon. HENRY M. GOLDFOGLE, Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, and Hon. FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON have each introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States a joint resolution calling for the abrogation of the aforementioned treaty between the United States of America and Russia because of the foregoing: Therefore be it

"Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Representatives in Congress from this State be requested to vote in favor of a joint resolution to terminate the aforementioned treaty between the United States of America and Russia because of unjust and unwarranted discrimination by the latter country against persons of the Jewish faith; and be it further

"Resolved, That the president of the senate and the speaker of the assembly transmit a copy of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States."

In senate, July 17, 1911. Concurred in without amendment. By order of the senate, Patrick E. McCabe, clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Albany, ss:

I, Daniel D. Frisbie, speaker of the Assembly of the State of New York, do hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing resolution with the original thereof contained in the original documentary copy of the journal of proceedings of the assembly of July 12 and 17, 1911, so far as it relates to the proceedings had and taken by the assembly on said dates with reference to said resolution, and that the foregoing is a correct transcript of said proceedings and of said resolution and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this —— day of July, 1911.

DANIEL D. FRISBIE, Speaker.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a memorial of Local Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Wallingford, Conn., and a memorial of the John Mitchell Literary Club, of Wallingford, Conn., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NIXON presented a memorial of the Grattan Club, of Goldfield, Nev., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES presented memorials of Green Lake Post, No. 112, of Seattle; of Silas Casey Post, No. 74, of Friday Harbor; and of J. J. Lewis Post, No. 34, all of the Department of Washington, Grand Army of the Republic, in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of a monument at Vicksburg in honor of the Confederate soldiers, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Bird City and McDonald, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Johnston Sunday rest bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 2882) granting an increase of pension to Tillman H. Elrod, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the board of supervisors of Madera County, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made to exterminate the ground squirrels and other rodents in that county, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

THE CITRUS-FRUIT INDUSTRY IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I present telegraphic memorials from many citrus-fruit organizations of California, protesting against placing lemons on the free list and praying that they be given an opportunity of being heard in relation to the subject matter. There is approximately $166,000,000 invested in the citrus-fruit industry, and 150,000 citizens of the United States and residents of the State of California are directly dependent on that industry for a livelihood. Without congressional consideration this great industry will be destroyed. On account of the number of telegrams, I do not ask that they be printed in the RECORD, but will request that the list of signers which I send to the clerk's desk follow my statement.

There being no objection, the memorials were ordered to lie on the table, and the list of signers was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

California Fruit Growers' Exchange, Los Angeles, Cal.; Claremont Citrus Association, Claremont, Cal.; Indian Hill Citrus Association, North Pomona, Cal.; Pasadena Board of Trade, Pasadena, Cal.; Laverne Growers' Association, Lordsburg, Cal.; Pomona Fruit Growers' Exchange, Pomona, Cal.; San Antonio Fruit Exchange, Pomona, Cal.; Santa Paula Citrus Association, Santa Paula, Cal.; Alhambra Orange Growers' Association, Alhambra, Cal.; Placentia Orange Growers' Association, Fullerton, Cal.; Charles C. THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report adversely the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton. (S. Rept. 133.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, indefinite postponement will be the action thereon. Is that the course suggested by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I want to have it go on the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have some objection to the order suggested by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the request of the Senator from Utah the bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that it should go to the calendar; and I ask unanimous consent that the bill just reported be made the unfinished business.

Mr. OVERMAN. The unfinished business for to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the unfinished business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a point of order. Can that be done except by unanimous consent? The bill having been reported this morning, can we consider it even to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can not be made the unfinished business until after it is taken up if objection is made.

Mr. HEYBURN. In order that the RECORD may not show an anomalous condition, there is no such motion in order as to make any measure the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No motion was made. It was a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. We can not make it the unfinished business by motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No such motion is in order; certainly not. The bill will be placed on the calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

CITY OF CRAWFORD, NEBR.

Mr. BROWN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12051) for the relief of the city of Crawford, in the State of Nebraska, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It grants to the city of Crawford, Nebr., a right of way across the military reservation of Fort Robinson, Nebr., at such location as may be determined by the city of Crawford and approved by the Secretary of War, to construct and maintain a pipe line for the purpose of carrying water from a point beyond the said military reservation across the reservation and to the city of Crawford. But the entire cost of construction and maintenance shall be paid by the city of Crawford; and the pipe shall be covered and the surface restored to its present condition by and at the expense of the city of Crawford.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 6098. A bill to authorize the Campbell Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River from a point in Dunklin County, Mo., to a point in Clay County, Ark. (Rept. No. 131); and

H. R. 11021. A bill to authorize the Levitte Land & Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in Drew County, Ark. (Rept. No. 132).

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT LOGAN, MINN.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7693) to authorize the town of Logan, Aitkin County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn., and I submit a report (No. 129) thereon.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE AT PINE BLUFF, ARK.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11022) to authorize the bridge directors of Jefferson County bridge district to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 130) thereon.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

A bill (S. 3192) granting an increase of pension to William Boyce (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 3193) granting an increase of pension to Myron H. Isbell (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 3194) to revise section 985 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAYLOR:

A bill (S. 3195) for the relief of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Murfreesboro, Tenn.; and

A bill (S. 3196) for the relief of the trustees of Soule College, successors of Soule Female College, of Murfreesboro, Tenn.; to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM. At the request of Gen. King, of Louisiana, I introduce a bill, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The bill (S. 3197) to establish a commission; to create a national interstate highway system; to effect preliminary surveys of seven national interstate highways and the establishment of said highways. Said highways to be constructed from Washington, the Capital of the United States, respectively, to Portland, Me.; to Niagara Falls, N. Y.; to Seattle, Wash.; to San Francisco, Cal.; to Los Angeles, Cal.; to Austin, Tex.; and to Miami, Fla.; and for which surveys and maps, profiles, and estimates of the same, for the use of the Congress of the United States, the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized, to be expended out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, said national interstate highways to be trunk-line highways, to which branch highways and good roads can be established throughout the country, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3198) to increase the limit of cost of the public building authorized to be constructed at Gettysburg, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CULLOM:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) to amend the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, providing for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. CLAPP:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 52) directing the Secretary of the Navy to commission a warship to convey the remains of Theodore Ruggles Timby from the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., to the city of Washington, D. C., on the 12th of October, 1911, for burial in the city of Washington; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOSEPHINE M. BUCK.

On motion of Mr. BORAH, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Josephine M. Buck, S. 1957, Sixty-second Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

TRAVELING EXPENSES OF SENATE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BRADLEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 132), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That there shall be paid to the officers and employees of the Senate borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of July, 1911, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the sum of $125 each, for traveling expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, the same to be immediately available.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On August 10, 1911:

S. 1149. An act permitting the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota;

S. 2732. An act to authorize the Providence, Warren & Bristol Railroad Co., and its lessee, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., or either of them, to construct a bridge across the Palmers or Warren River, in the State of Rhode Island; and

S. 2768. An act to authorize the St. Louis-Kansas City Electric Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the town of Weldon Springs Landing, Mo.

HEALTH, ACCIDENT, AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2495) to define and classify health, accident, and death benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "enacting" and to insert "inserting"; on page 2, line 3, to strike out "provide" and to insert "provides"; on page 2, line 6, after "associations," to strike out "Every such company or association shall, within 90 days from the passage of this act" and to insert "After 90 days from the passage of this act no such company or association shall transact business within the District of Columbia unless it shall"; on page 2, line 11, after the words "United States," to strike out "municipal, or railroad bonds, or in real estate, or in mortgages or deeds of trust on real estate" and to insert "State, county, municipal bonds, and bonds of the District of Columbia, or railroad bonds; but investments in the bonds of railroads shall be limited to the bonds of those railroads which have paid dividends on their capital stocks for the 10 years immediately previous to the date of the investment; or in improved real estate, or in first mortgages on improved real estate; but no loan on real estate shall be made for an amount exceeding 70 per cent of its assessed value"; on page 2, line 12, before "mortgages," to insert "first"; on page 2, line 22, to strike out "have" and insert "has"; on page 3, line 15, after the word "shall," to strike out "have the power to," and after the words "time to time" insert "and at least as often as once a year"; and on page 3, line 17, after "capital stock," to strike out "or assets of any such company or association impaired" and insert "of any such company impaired or its assets reduced in value."

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 4682. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Glenhayes Station, in Wayne County, W. Va.;

H. R. 7690. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Snake River at the town of Nyssa, Oreg.;

H. R. 8146. An act to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois;

H. R. 11477. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va.; and

H. R. 11723. An act permitting the building of a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River between Burnett County, Wis., and Pine County, Minn.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 8653. An act to give the District of Columbia a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in patent cases; and

H. R. 11545. An act to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to place the name of Annie M. Matthews on the pension roll of the police and firemen's pension fund.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 854. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think that bill ought to pass without extended discussion. I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 854.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BURTON. I call for a yea-and-nay vote on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], and vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when Mr. PENROSE's name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote the same way I would vote on this question. Therefore, when my name is called, I shall vote. I merely announce the pair now.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. He not being present, I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). According to the announcement previously made, I will vote. I vote "yea." But I again announce my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is absent, and therefore I withold my vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. My colleague [Mr. LEA] is absent from the city on account of illness in his family

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—40.

So the motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall be as brief in stating the case made by this bill as it is possible for me to be. The bill is before the Senate upon a favorable report by the Committee on Finance. It was introduced early in the present session, and I assume that every Senator knows, in a general way, its scope and purpose.

In 1907 there prevailed throughout the United States what has come to be known as a financial panic, or, as still better known, a bankers' panic. It was believed by very many people that the panic could have been averted, or at least very much minimized, if the United States had had a reasonable and effective financial or banking system; and an imperative demand arose for some immediate reform in our banking system. The demand resulted in the passage of what is known as an emergency bill in 1908, in which certain additions were made to our law respecting the issuance of national currency and the operation of national banks. I think it was assumed and understood by everybody at that time that that bill was passed only for the purpose of providing for an emergency that might ensue before Congress had the opportunity to pass a well-considered and comprehensive law upon the subject. Therefore, as a part of the bill, what is known as the National Monetary Commission was established. It was established with the thought on the part of Congress, I am sure, and I know upon the part of the country at large, that within a reasonable time the distinguished men who became a part of the Monetary Commission should make known their views to Congress, so that it might adopt such legislation as would have a tendency to prevent panics in the future. Three years and two or three months have elapsed since the Monetary Commission was organized and began its work, and still there is no report from it, and Congress has done nothing, and naturally will do nothing, upon the subject until the commission shall report.

The commission has traveled all over the United States, and some of its members, at least, have traveled all over Europe in the quest for information. I do not intend to disparage the work of the commission; I do not in the least intend to criticize the methods it has employed, but I shall presently present a reason which is sufficient for me to indicate that the time has come when it should cease its labors and give to Congress the result of its investigations.

I agree to the wisdom of the commission. I agree that Congress appropriately selected the commission to furnish the information upon the subject; but nearly three years and a half have passed, and in the meantime the commission—which, I think I may say without offense, is largely composed of men, distinguished as they are, who have not contributed very much to the formation of any plan which may come from the commission—has spent something like $230,000, and still there is no evidence that Congress is to shortly receive the benefits of its investigation.

The commission has collected a series of monographs upon financial matters, all of which, I think, are interesting and most of which are curious, but not a tithe of which will ever be read by any Member of Congress and not a tithe of which are necessary in determining the problem which the American people have now to solve. I do not object to the selection of literature upon financial propositions. Some day or other we will avail ourselves of these 40 or more monographs, which have been written by persons selected by the commission and which have been paid for out of the treasury of the commission. I only say that they have done enough to fully inform themselves of all that is to be known with regard to this important subject.

I have here a detailed account of the work of the commission. I will not at this moment read even the titles of these monographs. I simply repeat that they are about 40 in number, and they cost the commission $86,861.92; and some of this money was paid to men who already were drawing full salaries from the Government on account of the occupation of other positions. While this may be a small matter, the only thing in which I criticize the commission is the extravagance that is manifest in the report of its expenses—$86,861.92, and of that there was paid to Mr. A. Piatt Andrew, who, as I understand, is a valuable clerk or employee of the Treasury Department, $8,366.66. I could mention other payments of somewhat like character, but I will not do so at this moment.

The commission has, in addition to the preparation of these original pamphlets or monographs, collected a library relating to financial subjects, a thing very proper for the commission to have done, and undoubtedly the Members of Congress will in the days to come reap great advantage from their studies in this library; but there is one peculiar thing about it. It paid for the purchase of books $4,545.86, and it has paid for the services of a librarian to take care of those $4,545.86 worth of books, $4,249.84. I can not think that the Congress of the United States will approve that; and I am told, although I may not be right with respect to it—and I will be corrected, I am sure, if I am wrong—that the gentleman to whom the $4,249.84 was paid as librarian is also or was also an employee of the Government, and in some form or other drawing additional compensation from our Treasury.

I ask, Mr. President, that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I hold in my hand, transmitting, in response to a House resolution of May 8, 1911, a statement of expenditures on account of the National Monetary Commission from June 5, 1908, to March 31, 1911, be printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request will be complied with.

The letter referred to is as follows:

EXPENSES OF THE NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to House resolution of May 8, 1911, statement of expenditures on account of the National Monetary Commission from June 5, 1908, to March 31, 1911. May 16, 1911.—Referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 12, 1911.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: By direction of the President, and in reply to the rsolution of the House of Representatives of May 8, 1911, calling for a detailed statement showing the moneys paid out on account of the National Monetary Commission created by act of Congress of May 30, 1908, I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement of the expenditures of the commission from June 5, 1908, to March 31, 1911, prepared from accounts rendered to and filed in this department.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

Statement of expenditures on account of the National Monetary Commission from June 5, 1908, to Mar. 31, 1911, as shown by the accounts of R. B. Nixon, disbursing clerk of the commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. I commend Senators who are well acquainted in Washington to the list of employees and their salaries only because it will be found that many—I will withdraw that word and say some of these employees, and the principal ones of them—are also, or were also, holding other positions in the Government and drawing other compensation than the compensation given to them by the commission. The salaries of employees aggregate $29,791.82.

I beg that the Senate will also note the traveling expenses which have been paid out for members of the commission and employees of the commission. It is an uncomfortable thing to analyze this statement, and I do not intend to do so unless it shall become necessary by suggestions which are made hereafter; but it is sufficient to say that the entire traveling expenses of the commission, with its employees, to March 31, 1911, were $35,412.34. A little computation will show you that at $6 per day allowance for traveling expenses these expenses would have maintained one man in constant travel—on such travel as is customary in making such investigations—for a little more than 16 years; and a little further computation will show that it would have maintained 10 men a year and three-fifths of a year. I do not assert that a single penny has been paid out for expenses that were not incurred. I only say that the commission, having had three years and a half in which to do its work, in which to meet an emergency, in which to prepare or suggest legislation intended to prevent panics, ought now to make its report and ought to relieve the Treasury of the United States from these enormous burdens.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator if the statement from which he appears to be reading shows where the commission went from time to time and what, if any, information they got at the several places that cost the Government something over $30,000?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know. The commission, or a part of the commission, visited Europe in these three years, and for aught I know it may be intending to visit Europe again. It visited New York upon several occasions, and it held a protracted meeting during one hot period at Narragansett Pier, a very delightful place in which to compose one's thoughts upon the subject of finance. But it has a perfect right to do it, and I have no doubt it held a meeting at a convenient place.

But we have fallen into habits of extravagance. We can not overcome them here. It seems that no part of the Government can overcome the tendency to extravagant payment for what we accomplish, and even if these payments are all justifiable, there is no defense for allowing the system to proceed further.

At the present time all of the Members of the Senate know how this commission is composed. There are some very excellent men upon it who are doing very good work, and who have done very good work, but it is perfectly well known that the majority of the commission at this time is not devoting its labor or its energies to the work of the commission. It is perfectly well known that it is not expected in the future that they will do so. It is perfectly well known that it is now simply a convenient place for those who have lost the favor of their constituents in political affairs, and I do not think that we ought to continue it any longer.

As originally organized it had a high object in view. I believe it has accomplished that object. I expect the report of the commission will be a notable contribution to the literature upon this great and important subject. But do not let us open ourselves to the reproach of continuing this commission indefinitely.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. DIXON. In discussing the traveling expenses, I merely wish to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether the expenses of the colored barber, who was taken on the European trip, are included in the $36,000?

Mr. CUMMINS. Unfortunately, I am not able to answer that question, although I have no doubt they are. The expenses of the European trip are not itemized. The law does not require the commission to itemize the expenses. There is a most extraordinary provision in the act of 1908 for the payment of money out of the Treasury that can be found, I fancy, within the annals of Congress. There is no itemization required. They are paid solely upon the certificate of the chairman of the commission. But it is stated here merely in the words: "Travel of commission in Europe, $19,250.18."

We do not know, as far as the report is concerned, who of the commission visited Europe or how many of the employees that crowd the rooms of the commission and also almost crowd the corridors of the Senate Office Building accompanied the commission abroad.

The salaries are not so high up to this time, because until recently most of the members of the commission were also Members of Congress, and so long as they were Members of Congress they were not entitled to additional salary. But there are two former Members of Congress, each of whom has drawn $15,562.50, and the total drawn by the members of the commission, which I regard as very moderate and temperate in view of some of the other expenses, is $43,750.50.

Senators, I brought this bill forward because I believe we ought to put an end to the commission and require the result of its deliberations. If we intend to pass any law that shall guard the people of this country from the disasters of panic, we ought to begin to consider that law. We ought not to wait indefinitely in order to shield our financial system from dangers which are said to confront it every moment.

I feel that this commission can report at the time indicated in my bill, which is on the first day of the next regular session of Congress, and I feel that after it has made its report, and after its monographs and libraries are put into the possession of Congress, where both ought to be, Congress will have all the information it can secure from this source to enable it to legislate intelligently and patriotically with respect to a revision of our banking system.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am quite in sympathy with the expression of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I think it is time that we should have an early report from the National Monetary Commission. Our whole banking system is confessedly weak, probably the weakest that is possessed by any country which boasts a high civilization. Those who have been urging banking reform have impressed upon us this consideration. The honorable chairman of the Monetary Commission declared in the Senate some years ago that the United States had the worst banking system in the civilized world.

Already we have some indication of what the report of the Monetary Commission will be, in the shape of a feeler intended to take the sense of public opinion upon the matters under consideration by this commission. In view of the pronunciamento which has gone out to the business world and which has formed the basis of a propaganda that is being urged in every banking center in the country, it strikes me that it might be well to amend the bill offered by the Senator from Iowa by providing that, in addition to the report which this commission is doubtless now prepared to make, the commission should report upon an alternative proposal, involving the security of bank depositors and protection against bank panics, not by organizing a great central institution for that purpose, but by strengthening the individual banks themselves in regard to their capital and reserves, associating them into associations bounded by State lines in which State banks can participate, and then federalizing these various State associations by organizing a national banking board, composed partly of bankers from different sections of the country, selected by these associations, and in part appointed by the President of the United States, with a view to giving such a board powers of examination, powers of publicity, powers of recommendation to the President and the Congress, under which Congress, with this board of able advisers, may be able from time to time so to amend the laws as by a gradual process of evolution to perfect our entire banking system.

With the permission of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] I will draw an amendment calling upon the commission specifically for its views as to the advisability, first, of establishing some proportion between the capital of the bank and the obligations to its depositors which it assumes, a proportion not now established by law, for a bank of trifling capital can assume obligations of enormous proportions; also, as to the advisability of strengthening the reserves of the individual banks, the country banks, nominally required by law to maintain a reserve of 15 per cent, but actually permitted by the law to deposit 9 of the 15 per cent in the banks of the reserve cities and the central reserve cities, there to be used not for the legitimate purposes of banking, which is the exchange of commodities and property, but for promotion and speculation.

Reserves are also required of the reserve city banks to the extent of 25 per cent, but they are permitted to transfer one-half of that—12½ per cent—to the banks of three or four great central reserve cities, New York taking almost all of it, thus depriving the depositors of the funds absolutely necessary to meet the current demands of their checks, and transferring these large funds to New York to be used for promotion and speculation.

I should like the views of the Monetary Commission upon those two specific questions—the strengthening of bank capital and the strengthening of the reserves of the individual banks. Then, as opposed to this system of centralization—the absolute ignoring of the States, the creation of a central organization, with 16 branches in 16 so-called zones, regardless of State lines—I would substitute, and I should like the views of the commission upon the suggestion, local associations in the various States, composed not only of the national banks in those States, but composed of the State banks engaged in interstate commerce as well, requiring of the State banks the observance of the same rules regarding investigation, publicity, and protection in the shape of capital and reserves to their depositors as is required of national banks, requiring that as a condition of membership in the association, which will be of vast benefit to them, and imposing other conditions also, under the great interstate-commerce power of the Constitution, which, recognizing interstate exchange as a part of interstate commerce, can be exercised in the regulation of State banks engaged in interstate exchange just as extensively as it can be in the regulation of State railway companies engaged in interstate transportation.

I should like their views as to the terms of such an association, what it should cover. Could it not safely cover an insurance or a guaranty of bank deposits? Such an association having control over, and powers of examination and investigation of, the constituent members, could easily exercise such vigilance as to prevent any individual bank from imperiling itself by injudicious loans, and therefore having the power to prevent injudicious loans, injudicious investments of the depositors' funds; it would certainly be a reasonable requirement that it should insure those depositors against loss, for it means simply the insurance of the associated banks as to the depositors of each individual bank, each one of which is a constituent member of the association.

The financial history of the country shows that notwithstanding the numerous panics destructive of credit, destructive of exchange, paralyzing State and interstate commerce, the loss to depositors upon the wind up of these institutions is infinitesimally small. If so, under a perfected system of banking, where an association is organized under national law, bringing together the State and the national banks of that State into association for mutual protection and for the protection of their depositors, is it not fair to suppose that the actual loss in every wind up will be infinitesimally smaller than it has been in the past?

The risk, then, being little and the opportunity to the association itself of preventing loss being large, there is no reason why the insurance of bank depositors should not go into practical operation and effect. The result would be that we would have no panics. Just as soon as an individual bank is in peril, just as soon as the run of depositors is precipitated, just that moment the allied forces of all the banks of the State, bound together in this protective association, can summon their reserves and apply them at the point of danger, just as a government can summon its military reserves to the point of danger and of attack.

Mr. President, it may be inquired how shall we bring these associations together so that they will act in a national way and not purely within State lines? It seems to me easy in economics to follow the Federal system of government as an example. That system is followed in all kinds of organizations in this country. We find all the beneficial organizations of the country organizing local leagues and then State leagues and then national leagues. We find this true of the architects' associations, of the art societies, of the musical societies, of the charitable organizations, of city planning organizations, and all the various humanitarian movements which characterize the day. Why should we not follow the example of our Federal Government in the organization of our banking system, maintaining the State as the economic zone or unit, as it is the basic unit of our Government, and after organizing under national law, associations in each State of all commercial banks, both national and State, within its boundaries, federalizing the banking associations of all the States for national purposes? That organization could be effected, as I have stated, by the selection of a national banking board, composed partly of representatives selected by the various State associations and partly of representatives selected by the President. Whilst I would have at the start that board commence with small powers, we know that by the process of evolution and as experience guided our action its powers would be gradually enlarged and its usefulness extended.

I will not go, Mr. President, into minute details regarding this matter. Regarding the issue of bank notes, regarding the issue of emergency currency, the system proposed by Mr. Aldrich declares for the merger of all the powers of issue of all the banks of the country in this great central institution. I would have the powers of issue of the banks of each individual State merged in the banking association made up of the banks of that State. I would not centralize the power at Washington, however correct theoretically the system might be, for the reason that in these days of combination and monopoly there is great danger that such powers will fall into the hands of the great banking interests, whose increasing power is viewed with apprehension, which, combining at one great center the control of the wealth of the country in banks, in the great industrial trusts, and in the railroads, is running almost the entire economic system of the country, and that, too, not in the interest of the honest maintenance of exchange between States, between communities and individuals, not for the great public function for which these corporations were organized, however private they may be, but with a view to swelling the fortunes of individuals and increasing their powers over their fellow men and over the Government under which they were created.

However strong the system advanced by Mr. Aldrich may be in theory, I would not accept it to-day because of these conditions. If later on by a process of evolution, commencing at the bottom with the States and not at the top with the National Government, we crown the entire edifice to which I have referred by a central bank acting in cooperation with these associations in the various States, that is a thing for the future—to be worked out slowly and gradually.

The system to which I refer and which I urge does not necessarily lead to the ultimate organization of a central bank nationally, and yet it is not inconsistent with it in the end. When the economic system of this country is adjusted to freedom of opportunity to all we may, by the process of evolution—a slow and gradual process—conclude that the wise thing is to crown this great edifice that performs so important a function in interstate and national exchange by the creation of a central bank.

Mr. President, the plan that is urged by the former Senator from Rhode Island will not, in my judgment, receive the approval of the American people; and yet it would be a great mistake if all legislation should fail. The President was right, in a recent speech in New York, in saying that the banking question is the most important question before the people of the United States to-day, far surpassing in importance the tariff question. We are now addressing ourselves to great economic questions, through the adjustment of which the entire country may be put into industrial and commercial disturbance; and it is of the highest importance, whilst we are passing through these economic changes, that our banking system at least should be perfect, for the test of the stability of our commercial condition will be found at the doors of a bank when the depositors of that bank, panic stricken, demand their money, and when failure to respond may involve the banks of an entire community and ultimately the banks of the entire country, thus locking up both State and interstate exchange at a time when other economic disturbances are existing. It is therefore incumbent upon those who oppose the Aldrich plan to present an alternative.

I have in my feeble way presented this matter, but I trust that the minds of those who are opposed to that plan will be fertile with suggestions, and I trust that these various suggestions will be presented to the Monetary Commission and that they will fairly consider them with the experts at their command, and will point out their advantages and their weaknesses. In this way, and in this way only, can we get fair consideration of the entire question, for if the people become fairly impressed with the necessity for a change in the banking system, unless the whole matter is thoroughly thought out and exploited beforehand, they may go from worse to worse instead of from worse to better.

Mr. President, we want this thing thought out, not by those who have been the friends of privilege, of combination, and of monopoly, but by that great body of progressive thought in the country which has been engaged in considering the abuses that afflict us and the remedies for those abuses. Thus far the progressive thought of the country has not been fastened upon an alternative plan unless it be the mind of Mr. Bryan, who for years has given more attention to such subjects than any other public man on the progressive side. I do not say that all his views are correct, but one thing is sure, and that is, that he has given serious thought to these questions, and that his suggestions are worthy of consideration. His suggestion regarding a bank guaranty, hooted at throughout the country, has been accepted by several States and is perfectly capable of safe solution, if we can only bring the banks of the various States together by some form of national association for the protection of themselves and the protection of their depositors.

I will ask, therefore, the Senator from Iowa to indulge me whilst I draw an amendment calling upon the commission for its views as to the suggestions which I have made. I have no doubt that their consideration of them will be fair and that their report upon them will be of value. I will append to my remarks certain views prepared by me for the press in response to many inquiries. The matter referred to is as follows:

BANKING REFORM.

VIEWS OF MR. NEWLANDS.

"Logical national legislation on the banking question involves, in my mind, the recognition of interstate exchange as a branch of interstate commerce by taking hold of and regulating the State banks engaged in interstate exchange, just as we take hold of purely State railroads that are engaged in interstate transportation. The purpose of the legislation being to prevent paralysis of interstate exchange through constantly recurring bank panics, any legislation which leaves the State banks out of consideration as factors in the maintenance of an unimpaired interstate exchange is sadly lacking, for the State banks to-day equal the national banks in the extent of their capital, deposits, and credits. They are all engaged in interstate exchange, and constitute links in the general banking system of the country; and just as the strength of a chain is that of its weakest link, so it may be claimed that the strength of our banking system is affected by the condition of its weakest bank, and that all banks, both national and State, must be regulated by the National Government in the interest of interstate commerce.

"STRENGTHENING THE INDIVIDUAL BANKS.

"I would first strengthen the individual banks by requiring of them a certain relation of capital and reserves to their obligations. As it is the national banking act prescribes no proportion between the capital of a bank and the amount of deposits it can receive. The capital of a bank constitutes the margin of security upon which depositors rely. Sound banking requires that it should equal 20 per cent of the bank's obligations. I would not at first, however, attempt to reach this limit, but would simply provide that every bank should maintain a capital and surplus equal to 20 per cent of its deposit obligations.

"As to reserves, sound banking requires that a bank should keep on hand at least 20 per cent of its deposit obligations in order to meet the current checks of its depositors.

"The national banking act requires 25 per cent reserve in central reserve cities, of which all must be kept in cash; a reserve of 25 per cent in reserve cities, of which one-half can be deposited in central reserve city banks; and 15 per cent in the country banks, of which nine-fifteenths, or three-fifths, can be deposited in reserve city and central reserve city banks.

"I would not, at present, increase these reserves, but I would diminish the proportion of the reserves which the country banks can deposit in other banks at the rate of one-fifteenth annually until such permitted deposits in other banks reach five-fifteenths, or one-third, of the total reserve; and there I would stop for the present.

"I would also diminish the proportion which the reserve city banks can deposit in the central reserve city banks at the rate of one twenty-fifth annually until such permitted deposits in central reserve city banks reach five twenty-fifths, or one-fifth, of the total reserves instead of one-half, as at present.

"THE STATE BANKS.

"I would require the same capital and reserves of State banks engaged in interstate exchange as are required of national banks; but the question is whether this shall be made coercive or persuasive. I have no doubt of the power of the National Government to compel State banks, as instrumentalities of interstate commerce, to comply with its regulations as to capital and reserves; but as this is a comparatively new contention and may arouse opposition to any general measure which contains it, it might be well to make it merely persuasive by providing that State banks may become members of the national reserve association, hereafter referred to, upon complying with the requirements of the national banking act as to capital and reserves and as to examination and inspection by the National Government.

"UNIONIZING BANKS FOR PROTECTION OF DEPOSITORS AND FOR PREVENTION OF BANK PANICS.

"The next step would be to unionize the banks for preventing bank panics and the interruption of interstate exchange by enabling them to summon their reserves to any point of danger, just as the Government concentrates its troops at the point of attack.

"The Aldrich plan centralizes these at Washington by the creation of a reserve association of America, embracing in its membership as stockholders all the national banks and dividing the country, regardless of State lines, into 16 subdivisions or zones, in the most prominent commercial city of which is located a branch of the reserve association.

"There are two objections to this—one, that it practically creates a central bank, concerning which there will be a great difference of opinion between the two political parties, and the other that with the concentration of the money power of the country now existing such central bank would fall under the control of such power, and that the perversion of the proper function of banking from that of advancing exchange to that of promotion and speculation would continue. Even if the Aldrich plan be theoretically and economically sound, I regard it as utterly impracticable at present, because of the balance of the political parties, each controlling a part of the Government, and because of the universal distrust of certain powerful banking groups, to give it the sanction of law. Nor do I think that the reasoning regarding a central bank which would apply to similar institutions in England, France, and Germany can be applied to America, a union of 46 States, most of which in area and population will sometime rival those great countries.

"It must be recollected also that in those countries the national power is absolute over commerce in its entirety, whilst in our country the National Government is absolute only in interstate and foreign commerce, the State commerce being under the jurisdiction of the respective States. As, therefore, commerce itself under our system of government is divided into two parts—one part under the control of the States and the other part under the control of the union of States, or the Nation—it is desirable that in the exercise of the regulating power we should have regard to the States as the units or subdivisions with reference to which the national power is to be exercised; and we should endeavor to bring about cooperation and harmony between the individual States on the one hand and the union of States on the other in the regulation of our commerce.

"I would therefore organize under national law a reserve association in each State, to be formed by the national banks of each State; membership in which I would grant also to State banks engaged in interstate commerce, as all except the savings banks are, upon compliance with such requirements as to capital, reserve, investigation, and correction as exist with reference to national banks.

"I would provide that such reserve association should have the power to examine the individual banks composing its membership and to exercise a certain degree of corrective power over them, and that it should have the power to insure the depositors of each individual bank composing its membership. Some speedy method should be provided for immediately taking over the assets and paying the depositors of any failing bank. I would give to such State reserve associations such of the powers, rights, and privileges given by the Aldrich plan to the proposed central reserve association as may be deemed desirable. In other words, I would endeavor to create in each sovereign State a financial center for that State, holding a position with reference to the State similar to that which New York holds to the United States.

"As the banks of some of the smaller or weaker States might not be strong enough to form reserve associations under this plan, I would grant them the privilege, if they so desired, of joining a reserve association organized in an adjoining State.

"I would turn over to such reserve associations all the note-issuing functions of the individual banks constituting its membership, including the issuing of emergency currency.

"FEDERALIZING THE ASSOCIATION.

"I would then federalize these State reserve associations through the organization of a national banking board, of which a certain proportion of the members should be selected by the national reserve associations under some plan that would promote proper geographical distribution, the National Government, through the President, with the aid and confirmation of the Senate, to name the other members. I would make the Secretary of the Treasury the chairman of such commission and the Comptroller of the Currency its secretary.

"I would not, in the first instance, give such commission large powers, but would invest it with powers of examination, correction of evil practices, and recommendation to the President and to Congress. I would expect the national banking commission, by a process of evolution, to gradually increase in its powers as the result of experience in administration and legislation, and I would expect it to perfect a system of cooperation with the banking commissions of the respective States.

"NOTE-ISSUING FUNCTIONS.

"I do not understand that Mr. Aldrich's plan provides for any additional currency, unless it be emergency currency. It simply provides that all the existing note-issuing functions of the national banks shall be turned over to the reserve association of America, of which the national banks are constituent members. The national-bank notes during the past 10 years have increased from about $300,000,000 to over $600,000,000 as the result of the increase of the percentage of the bond security available for note issue and also as the result of the increased amount of United States bonds. The national banks also have the power to issue emergency currency to the extent of $500,000,000, the retirement of which is forced by a gradually increasing interest rate or tax.

"None of the latter is now extant. Under the Aldrich plan, therefore, the National Reserve Association would have the power to keep outstanding the present issue of national-bank notes of over $600,000,000, and I think a similar provision should be made that the National Reserve Association of each State should take over the note-issuing functions of its constituent members. I would see no present necessity for changing the character of this issue. I would allow it to be gradually retired by the payment of the bonds themselves or by refunding such bonds into national bonds similar to the Panama Canal issue, bearing a rate of interest of about 3 per cent and without the note-issuing privilege.

"I do not think we need seriously concern ourselves in the near future regarding either an asset-secured currency or a bond-secured currency, or a national currency. The country is now firmly established on the deposit and check system, under which banks are permitted to give credit to their customers on their books aggregating, on the average, more than five times the amount of cash which the banks have on hand. The borrower turns his loan into a deposit and checks against his deposit, and his checks constitute a currency admirably adapted to the requirements of the country, the checks remaining out long enough to close the particular exchange or sale or transaction and then being retired. Under this method $1,000,000,000 of cash in the banks as reserves is given an efficiency of $5,000,000,000 through the loan and deposit system in the national banks, and a similar amount in the State banks, so that during the past 10 years, as the result of a constantly increasing volume of gold which has been drawn into the banks as their cash reserves, we have had an increase of bank loans and corresponding bank deposits from about five billion to ten billion dollars, or in other words and increase of 100 per cent in the credit facilities of the banks, whilst the population has increased only about 20 per cent. This accounts in great part for the extraordinary rise in prices which has taken place, and which has seriously disarranged the relations of debtor to creditor, of employee to employer, and of consumer to producer. An era of constantly increasing prices is almost as bad as an era of constantly falling prices, and both are caused by variation in the value of the medium of exchange as the result of the quantitative theory.

"If stability in the value of the medium of exchange is desirable, it is clear, all other things being equal, that as the number of basic dollars increase the number of paper representatives should diminish, and paper representatives should only be availed of in order to tide over the time when there is a diminution in the production of basic dollars and a danger of a fall of values through contraction. It is clear, therefore, that at no period in the history of the world has there been so little need of the issue of paper money as at present, for the number of our basic gold dollars has vastly increased in quantity, in much greater proportion than the population, and the loan and deposit system has opened up such a vast area of credits as to do away with the need of so-called credit money. Indeed, the only occasions upon which credit money is needed at all under existing conditions is when a bank panic comes and depositors withdraw from the banks the actual dollars which stand at the base of the loan and deposit system. Then an emergency arises which necessitates some substitute in the shape of paper money which can be used as legal tender, and can be paid out as a substitute for the basic money."

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. It will require only a few minutes, I think, and then we will come back into legislative session.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he intends to push the bill to a vote to-day?

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope to reach a vote upon the bill to-day, but I have said to the Senator from Illinois, who desires that an executive session shall be held, that I have no objection to it, hoping we will again reenter legislative session the moment the work of the executive session has been finished.

Mr. CULLOM. I will move that the Senate go into legislative session again. Several Senators desire to speak on the bill which has been up.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BORAH in the chair). The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 14) to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. Con. Res. 6) providing for the printing of the hearings before the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, House bill 6098 is a bill to permit the construction of a bridge across the St. Francis River in my State. It has been favorably reported by the Commerce Committee, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I make a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the bill which was under consideration before the executive session now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill, as the Chair understands, is now before the Senate; but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. REED. It is a formal matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a bridge bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want the bill which the Senate has been considering displaced, that is all. I have no objection to the passage of the bill referred to by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill which the Senate has been considering will not be displaced.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the present order of business.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order to arrive at it I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the bill now under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6098) to authorize the Campbell Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River from a point in Dunklin County, Mo., to a point in Clay County, Ark.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW BRIDGE.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11021) to authorize the Levitte Land & Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in Drew County, Ark.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the echoes of misdeeds and political mistakes sometimes come back to us in a way to challenge our attention. If there ever was a political mistake from both a partisan standpoint and a national standpoint, it was the enactment of the law of which the sections under consideration are a part. Senators who were present when that dramatic scene occurred at midnight on the 30th day of May, 1908, the closing day of the session, will never forget it. In my experience of more than eight years in this body I have not seen its equal, when the parliamentary law that governs this body was disregarded and pushed aside in order that a measure might be pushed through with a parliamentary insolence that I have not seen equaled in my life, when a Member had addressed the Chair and had been recognized, notwithstanding which the roll call proceeded under an arbitrary demand of Senators who had forgotten their reason, who had gone mad with their success of the hour. I hope it will never occur again; as long as I am in the body I hope never to see it. And this is the result of it. We are now called upon to deal with the result of that action. It is difficult to deal with it or to discuss it in conservative terms. The commission that was appointed under such conditions as these—and, mark you—

SEC. 19. That a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of sections 17 and 18—

Those are two of the sections which by the pending bill are proposed to be repealed—of this act, and to pay the necessary expenses of the commission and its members, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"A sum." If you will turn back in the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, you will find that sharp criticism was urged against such vicious legislation, and that it was swept aside in that hour of triumph, when a coterie of men had succeeded in laying the foundation for passing that iniquitous piece of legislation. With them in that hour it was not reason; it was boastful impulse. The question with them was not, "Is this conservative legislation?" but it was, "Can we do it?" Yes; ride over the opposition.

We have an example of the same spirit in the report that comes before us in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. Here is the echo of it. This is in response to those words "a sum sufficient"—not in the usual language, "There is hereby appropriated the sum of so many thousand, or hundreds of thousands, or millions of dollars," but there was no limit placed upon it. In the arrogance of that hour they did not dream that there was any power that could ever limit or even criticize them; but the hour has outlived the men who did it, who were responsible for it; and the facts and the conditions stand as a monument of that legislation. I have never yet regained my equanimity because of the outrage of that hour.

I am respectful of all men in public debate or private speech, but men's public acts may be and must be challenged when it is necessary to weigh them. We come now to the day of accounting for this legislation, and I am going to be very brief in my remarks, because a question of this kind does not need extended argument to point out its demerits.

I will not read you these items; I will only refer to them as a justification for every word of opposition that was spoken in debate at the time of the enactment of that law; I will only refer to them as a justification of every vote that was cast against it when this measure was forced through Congress in the midnight hour, after, I think, 62 hours of session, and perhaps more. Men had become almost frenzied because of the conditions that surrounded them. Let me read you just a line or two from the RECORD. After the insertion of a long paper that was read, and when the vote was imminent, this is what occurred—I read from page 7259 of the RECORD of May 30, 1908:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the roll be called.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Now, note this—

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. Aldrich responded to his name.

That was after I had addressed the Chair.

Mr. HEYBURN. I addressed the Chair before the commencement of the roll call.

I am reading from the RECORD of the proceedings of this body. That statement is in the RECORD.

Mr. ALDRICH. The roll call can not be suspended.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not ask that it be suspended. It was started with undue haste. I was addressing the Chair.

Then other Senators said, "Let the roll call go on," and after an appeal and a controversy as to moral rights, which were within the only rule that this Senate knows, they rode over the rights of a Senator, called the roll, and adopted the conference report. On page—and I commend it to the attention of Senators who may be interested to know what did occur afterwards—on page 7261 of the RECORD of May 30, 1908, the Senator from Idaho did express himself upon this question. I will leave that language to stand by reference.

I hope that the Senator in charge of this bill will press it to final passage and terminate this chapter of bad government, this chapter of statutory mistake, which has resulted in the waste of the public money and the accomplishment of no good purpose. I think that Congress is sane enough in the midday hours to correct the mistake that it made in the midnight hours. We have an imaginary library in charge of a real librarian; we have the monographs upon imaginary financial situations by men who were they in any other place for consideration would be termed "grafters," the double salaries of men who were favorites selected to earn the double salaries, and to earn them by signing their vouchers, for that is all they did.

I have gone through more or as much of this literature perhaps as any Member of this body. I have read through their weary, dreary length these articles supposed to be upon the finances of the world, the countries of the earth. They convey no more information of value in legislating upon this question than do the Arabian Nights. The thing to do is as soon as possible to get rid of this mistake by abolishing the commission, paying the bills we have to pay, and forgetting the incident.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to offer an amendment. I will have it ready in a moment.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think this——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to speak?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to offer an amendment. I will inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether he wishes to address the Senate?

Mr. BURTON. I shall expect to make some remarks, perhaps at considerable length.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will take my time, then, in preparing my amendment, and will yield to the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS subsequently said: I have prepared the amendment to which I previously alluded, and I ask that it be read and ordered to be printed.

The amendment was read and ordered to be printed, as follows:

It is proposed to add the following section:

"SEC. 3. That the National Monetary Commission is also directed to report for the consideration of Congress its views upon the following questions:

"First. The advisability of preventing national banks from depositing any portion of their reserves required by law in other banks.

"Second. The advisability of requiring national banks to maintain a capital and surplus bearing a fixed proportion to their deposit obligations, and if advisable what such proportion shall be.

"Third. The feasibility and advisability of organizing, under national law, associations of the national banks in each of the respective States for mutual protection and the protection of depositors against bank panics, and including State banks engaged in interstate exchange in the membership of such associations upon complying with the requirements of the national-banking act as to capital, reserves, investigation, reports, and publicity, such associations to have the power to insure the depositors of their constituent banks and in connection therewith the power to examine such banks.

"Fourth. The advisability of bringing into federation such associations through a national banking board fairly representative of the different sections of the United States, part to be selected by such associations and part by the President of the United States, such board to have as its chairman the Secretary of the Treasury and as its secretary the Comptroller of the Currency, such board to have powers of examination and correction over such associations and their constituent banks, and of recommendation to the President and Congress."

"Fifth. Such other suggestions as may be applicable to the federation of national and State banks for mutual protection and protection of depositors against bank panics under the foregoing plan of legislation."

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not clearly understand whether the Senator from Nevada now offers the amendment or whether he merely gives notice of his intention to offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understood the Senator from Nevada asked to have the amendment read and printed, to be offered later.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think this is a fit occasion to review the work of the Monetary Commission and also to present to the Senate some views upon the problems relating to banking and currency, which are now before the country.

I am opposed to the passage of this bill. Its enactment casts a certain degree of discredit upon the commission, but there is a more important objection to its passage, and that rests upon the fact that the commission can not complete its work by the time prescribed, the 5th of next December, nor indeed do I believe its work can be finished during the coming winter.

I have no apology to offer for a certain degree of looseness and extravagance in the expenses of the commission, especially in paying salaries to members after the expiration of their terms in Congress. In the beginning I think there was justification for that. The bill creating the Monetary Commission passed on the 30th of May, 1908. On the 3d of March following an amendment to the bill creating the commission was incorporated in the general deficiency bill. That amendment provided that those who had been appointed upon the commission should continue to receive salaries whether Members of Congress or not. It was passed to provide salaries for three persons, one Member of the Senate and two Members of the House.

The Member of the Senate whose term had expired had served long in the Senate and in the Cabinet, and though somewhat advanced in years, was an expert on monetary questions. Two Members of the House were also provided for, one of them Mr. Overstreet, who was the author of the financial act of 1900, one of the most valuable contributions to our monetary legislation. Another Member who was retained on the salary list had no special experience in problems of banking or currency, but gave his time almost constantly for two years after March 3, 1909, to the consideration of the difficult questions before the commission.

The services in the House and Senate of a somewhat larger number of members of the commission were terminated in 1911, but these were retained, and in addition three men, not previously members of the commission, were appointed, and salaries were provided for them.

In my investigation of this subject I am unable to find who was responsible for those three appointments. It seems to me their selection and the payment of salaries to them was not in accordance with the law, which is as follows:

That the members of the National Monetary Commission, who were appointed on the 30th day of May, 1908, under the provisions of section 17 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, shall continue to constitute the National Monetary Commission until the final report of said commission shall be made to Congress; and said National Monetary Commission are authorized to pay to such of its members as are not at the time in the public service and receiving a salary from the Government, a salary equal to that to which said members would be entitled if they were Members of the Senate or House of Representatives.

It will be noted that this statute explicitly states that the members of the National Monetary Commission who were appointed on the 30th day of May, 1908, shall constitute the National Monetary Commission until the final report of said commission shall be made to Congress.

The object of this statute is clear. It is to retain upon the commission those who had participated in its deliberations from the beginning and who had gained the experience which is to be derived from a year's service. But what justification can be found for the appointment on March 4, 1911, of three new men whose terms in Congress expired on that date I am unable to determine.

I have prepared an amendment to this bill which provides that the salaries of all members of the commission not now Members of the House or Senate shall cease; also that the commission shall file a report on or before the 10th day of January next. But when the question is raised of abolishing the commission entirely, I desire to say that in my judgment such action would be a serious mistake.

First, it is claimed that their work can be finished by the 5th of December. My experience upon that body leads me to the conviction that a report of any permanent value can not be made by that date. Those who have had experience on commissions and committees of Congress will agree with me that it is difficult to assemble members for a sufficient time before the meeting of Congress to enable them to complete a report. It has always been true that a certain number do not return until within a few days before the convening of Congress.

I have in mind the report of the National Waterways Commission. It had been the intention to file our report at the very beginning of the session following our appointment, but in considering all the varied subjects before us it was found necessary to postpone that report until the middle of January. Before that time it would have been impossible to formulate our views and place them in such condition as to justify a report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Culberson	Newlands	Smoot
Bourne	Cullom	Nixon	Swanson
Bradley	Cummins	Oliver	Taylor
Brandegee	Curtis	Page	Thornton
Bryan	Fletcher	Paynter	Townsend
Burnham	Heyburn	Perkins	Warren
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Poindexter	Watson
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Wetmore
Chilton	Jones	Reed	Williams
Clapp	La Follette	Root	Works
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Shively
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the Monetary Commission met in the autumn of 1908, after having conducted investigations both by subcommittees and by the full commission during the preceding summer. It was hoped that a report might be made then, but no satisfactory conclusion was reached. Again in 1909 and in 1910 the effort to make a report proved unsuccessful.

After the adjournment of this session it is not probable that the members will gather again until November, and the magnitude and the importance of the questions to be decided and reported upon are such that a final report, one satisfactory to the members themselves and one which shall aid in solving these very difficult questions now before the country, I anf confident can not be made at the beginning of the next session.

What should be done is this: Abolish the salaries of those who are no longer Members of this body or of the House, thus relieving the commission from the accusation of extravagance, and continue it for the purpose of making such recommendations as may be desirable in solving the problems relating to banking and currency.

I desire to say that I believe in the performance of this class of work by commissions. More and more the Members of the House and the Senate are becoming generalizers. There is such a great mass of public business before us that it is impossible either in Committee of the Whole of the House or Senate, or even in the committee rooms, to reach a satisfactory and judicious solution of certain great problems which are now before the country.

Two forms are suggested for these commissions—one composed of men who are not Members of Congress. This I do not believe in, for a commission consisting of men without legislative experience, though thoroughly posted on the subjects under investigation, often lacks that familiarity with the practical phases of legislation which is essential to accomplishing results in Congress.

Again, especially in the case of questions relating to banking and currency, it has been found that so great a contrariety of opinion exists among the bankers of the country and among students of the subject that it is absolutely impossible for them to reach any conclusion.

The second form of commission is composed of Members of the House and Senate. In that form of organization I am a cordial believer. They are in touch with legislation; they are in touch with the people; they understand the limitations which hinder the enactment of laws; and when they have considered subjects and made recommendations they are here to support these recommendations on the floor of the House and the Senate. Of course, it is desirable that they should bring to their assistance the very best experts in the branches which they are considering and utilize their advice in any recommendations which they may make.

Many of the most salutary laws have been proposed, if not formulated, by commissions of this body or the House, who were chosen with a view to giving more careful attention to the subject under consideration than could be given by the Members of Congress in House or Senate or by the committees thereof.

In the history of legislation in England and in France it appears that great progress has been made in promoting the welfare of the people through the agency of commissions. On this subject I wish to read a few words from a recent work of great value by Prof. Redlich, of the University of Vienna, who has recently written a history of the procedure of the House of Commons. He says:

> It will easily be believed that, with such an equipment, special committees have for hundreds of years been able to collect most valuable material for the promotion of legislation, to digest it and place it at the disposal of the House. The importance of parliamentary committees in this particular direction has, however, been materially lessened during the nineteenth century by the growing popularity of royal commissions as means for conducting inquiries. Though Members of both Houses of Parliament take a prominent part in the work of such commissions, they are not appointed by Parliament, but by the Government. Almost all the great reforms of the nineteenth century in internal administration, taxation, education, labor protection, and other social questions, have been based on the full investigations made by royal commissions, often continued over a space of many years, and on their reports, which with the evidence collected are laid before Parliament. A royal commission has many advantages over a parliamentary committee. It can, while a parliamentary committee can not, prolong its work beyond the limits of a session, if necessary, even for years; and it is possible to appoint scientific experts as members, so as to secure a completely impartial treatment of the subject. The consequence is that commissions have largely superseded parliamentary committees when elaborate inquiries have to be made.

I am unwilling to go as far in this connection as has the honorable Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who, in several speeches here, has advocated that both legislative and executive functions be intrusted to commissions; but I do feel that in gathering information and in investigating and explaining important subjects they perform a most useful function.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator refer me to a case where I ever urged the turning over to a commission or board of a legislative function?

Mr. BURTON. The expenditure of a certain amount per year on rivers and harbors and the selection of projects to be improved is certainly the exercise of a legislative function.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator contend that the expenditure of a sum is a legislative function when the expenditure of that sum has been authorized by law?

Mr. BURTON. It is most decidedly so, as I look upon it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would call that an executive function.

Mr. BURTON. It would be the entire abrogation of the right of the legislative body to make selections to thus place it in the hands of a commission.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me—I of course do not wish to divert his discussion to other matters; but I think, if he will examine carefully the bills to which he has referred, he will find that I have never yet sought to turn over to any board or commission the legislative power and that wherever I sought the employment of experts in connection with any great constructive work or the appointment of experts in reference to exercising the power of regulation I have sought to put in the law the rule under which such a board shall act.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it was merely an incidental remark. I think it clear, however, that so radical a change in the manner of designating public works to be undertaken is intrusting legislative powers and duties to a commission. At any rate, the plan contemplates turning over to such a body a lump sum of money and authorizing them to use their discretion in its expenditure here, there, or anywhere, and it bestows upon them, also, an executive function.

The objection is sometimes made that a commission of the nature I have advocated usurps legislative powers. It does nothing of the kind. Its powers are bounded by the rights conferred upon it, namely, to secure information and to make recommendations. The House or the Senate may accept or reject those recommendations in part or in toto. The final responsibility for the adoption of legislation rests exclusively with the Congress whether commissions are appointed or not.

On this monetary problem, Mr. President, I maintain there is an especial reason for the appointment of a commission, because of the complicated nature of the subject and the necessity for accompanying any proposed legislation by a campaign of education. The correct solution of our currency problem requires more than any other question the full benefit of expert opinion and mature consideration.

I recognize that the delay of the commission in making its report has been unfortunate. In explanation of that I will read briefly from some remarks made in another place, where I expressed myself more clearly perhaps than I might be able to do here to-day:

> The Monetary Commission was created by the act approved May 30, 1908, under the provisions of what is commonly known as the emergency currency act, or the Aldrich-Vreeland bill. This act was passed when the panic of the autumn of 1907 was still fresh in the minds of the people and the necessity for reform in our currency system and banking laws was very greatly recognized. Hence Congress provided for a commission to be composed of 18 members, 9 to be selected from the Senate and 9 from the House of Representatives. It was thought best to restrict the membership to those who were in touch with legislative procedure, men more readily qualified to formulate practical legislation which would command general approval, and who would be able to explain and advocate any measures recommended before the two branches of Congress to which they belong. It was, however, intended that the very best expert opinion and assistance should be obtained from the banking profession as well as from every other source which might be helpful. Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, was chosen chairman and Representative VREELAND, of New York, vice chairman.
> The duties of the commission are succinctly stated in the act, namely, "to inquire and report (to Congress) what changes are necessary or desirable in the monetary system of the United States, or in the laws relating to banking and currency."
> For the accomplishment of this object ample authority was given. The commission, either in committee of the whole or by subcommittees, has held numerous meetings and conducted many hearings. Some of its members have visited Europe and by personal contact with the leading bankers of England, France, and Germany have obtained information at first hand. Prominent political economists and experts in banking have prepared articles giving the past history of banks and banking operations and setting forth all prevalent theories upon the subject. A representative committee from the American Bankers' Association appeared before the commission in response to a request to state their views. Not only this committee, but other members of the association and bankers of the country, either in response to inquiries or on their own initiative, have given the commission the benefit of their experience and suggestions in relation to banking and currency problems. A working library upon banking has been prepared and printed, for which the claim may confidently be made that in practical value and completeness it surpasses any material heretofore available along these lines.

The criticism may have arisen that the commission has made tardy progress in its work, because it has existed for more than two years and no concrete proposition for legislation has been presented. But when we consider the magnitude of the interests involved and the contrariety of opinions to be harmonized the time is not long. It is better to be assured that projected legislation will be helpful and will command popular approval than to enact ill-digested laws and regulations which would have to be changed within a few years. Thus far the time has been usefully occupied in obtaining a basis upon which to act.

One feature assumes especial importance to anyone who has had experience in Congress—the exceptional difficulty in legislating upon any subject which has to do with finance or banking. Senator Sherman, after a long career in which he had framed many financial measures, once remarked that no one of them met with his entire approval because concession and compromise had been necessary in every case in order to secure their passage.

He said at one time there never was a day after the passage of the silver-purchase act of 1890 when he would not have been willing to vote for its repeal.

The insistent arguments of visionaries in finance, oftentimes supported by selfish interests, as well as the clash of different theories concerning the functions which the State should perform in relation to banking and currency, have alike prevented needed reforms in the past and will render ideal legislation difficult in the future.

In this connection I want to give an illustration showing how difficult it has been to bring the people to accept the most necessary financial or monetary legislation. I think it would now require a search warrant to find anyone who does not approve the act for the resumption of specie payments passed in the winter of 1874–75. The object of that measure was to place our finances upon a sound basis, and after years of inflation and disordered currency to make every dollar issued by the Government worth its face value. It provided for the resumption of specie payments on the 1st day of January, 1879.

I wish to read briefly from an account of the reception given Mr. Sherman in the year 1878 when he made a speech at a prominent city in the Central West in advocacy of this law, which at that time every intelligent student of the subject approved and which now everyone who has given any consideration to the subject knows was a wise measure. It is unnecessary to read more than the headlines, which give an account of this meeting at which he appeared as an advocate of the resumption of specie payments:

Howled down. John Sherman's welcome home. Turbulent and riotous demonstration at his meeting. Men made beggars by him refuse to listen to his defense of the process, and the architect of national ruin receives a slight foretaste of the hereafter.

That was the kind of a reception given to a man who had brought forward perhaps the greatest and most beneficial legislation on the subject of finance that has been proposed in the last half century.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The quotation of the Senator from Ohio loses much of its flavor by his failure to give the place where this riotous demonstration took place.

Mr. BURTON. I would a little rather not do that. It was not in Detroit.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator give us the date?

Mr. BURTON. It was in the autumn of 1878, just a little while before the resumption act went into effect.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask the Senator if it was at any place in Michigan?

Mr. BURTON. It was nowhere in Michigan. I fear, however, that there are localities in Michigan at which if he had appeared he would have met with the same kind of a reception.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The question that he was discussing was the burning question throughout the country, and other speakers were met with a degree of enthusiasm that has been very rarely surpassed even in my own State. But the eminence of this distinguished Ohioan and his service to his country were such at the time as to entitle him to courteous treatment anywhere in America for championing a principle so vitally related to the welfare of every American citizen, and I am surprised that he did not receive it.

Mr. BURTON. I wish to say that when I stated the fear that he might have received a similar reception at some places in Michigan it was not intended at all as a reflection upon that State, because in many States the prevalent misunderstanding in regard to finance was such that he would have received the same kind of reception.

Mr. President, the inference to be derived from this is that this commission ought to be continued. Let it be reorganized. Let the extravagant features be eliminated. It will only be possible to file a partial report next winter, for, as I shall endeavor to show, there are a number of important subjects which that commission ought to consider. I desire to call attention also to the necessity of conducting a campaign of education in support of its recommendations, which could be best conducted by the continuance of that kind of an organization. The commission has a valuable library. It has the means for obtaining and for diffusing information. It has advantages which no committee of Congress, no set of men save those who have given attention to it for years, could possess.

While I am perfectly frank in expressing my criticism of the payment of members of the commission who are no longer Members of Congress, while I stand here ready to abolish their salaries to-day, I think we ought to hear the other side of the question. Every Member of this body and of the House knows how difficult it is to say "no" to the friends of those who desire to have them continued here in some official position.

There is a further argument to which I have briefly referred, that some members of the commission, while Members of the House or Senate, had given close attention to the questions under consideration, and it was thought desirable not to lose the aid of their valuable service.

I concede that some $230,000 has been expended, partly for literature, partly for salaries of these ex-Members, partly for traveling expenses. Now, let us take those up in the inverse order. It was thought best that a subcommittee of the commission should visit Europe. Mr. President, their deliberations would not have been complete, they would not have been competent to make any recommendations, without that trip. No books on the subject can give the desired education. It is necessary to confer with those actively engaged in the banking business, to view the situation on the ground, to recognize the similarity and dissimilarity of conditions. As a result of all those investigations it appeared that no European system in its entirety would answer as a pattern for us to follow. Nevertheless, in every one of those systems there are features of such value as to afford the most helpful suggestions, and it would have been impossible to frame any laws relating to either banking or currency without a full consideration on the ground.

I wish to say that for some 10 days I was a member of the subcommittee at London, and it was very assiduous in its labors. We sat day after day from half past 10 in the morning until 7 in the evening and heard the leading bankers of England, who gave us information with a frankness which would not have characterized their answers to inquiries regarding the methods of their business if they were to be published.

But it is said that a large amount of money has been expended for a library. What was the fact, Mr. President? The commission found no adequate library on the subject of banking. There are a few very good books, but it would perhaps be invidious to mention them, because it would leave out others which some persons might consider of equal value. But, for instance, there was not until the commission undertook this subject any history of the Bank of England or of its operations which would make clear to an American student its methods and organization. Textbooks had been written on the subject, but they were framed with a view to informing those who were already familiar with general conditions in banking in the United Kingdom. Just about the time the commission began its work a book was written, which goes far to supply this void and which has been considered by the commission as a better textbook than any other on the subject. It has been translated into English. With the consent of the Senate, Mr. President, I will have inserted in my remarks a list of a few of the books which the commission has printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The list referred to is as follows:

Fiscal Systems of England, France, Germany, and the United States, by J. O. Manson.

The Discount System of Europe, by Paul M. Warburg.

Special Report from the Banks of the United States, compiled by Charles A. Stewart.

Digest of State Banking Laws, by Samuel A. Welldon.

The Origin of the National Banking System, by Andrew MacFarland Davis.

History of Crises Under the National Banking System, by Dr. O. M. W. Sprague.

Statistics for the United States, 1867–1909, compiled by A. Piatt Andrew.

The Use of Credit Instruments in Payments in the United States, by Dr. David Kinley.

State Banking Before the Civil War, by Prof. Davis R. Dewey.

The Independent Treasury System of the United States and Its Relation to the Banks of the Country, by Dr. David Kinley.

Seasonal Variations in the Demands for Currency and Capital, by Dr. Edwin W. Kemmerer.

Suggested Changes in Administrative Features of the National Banking Laws.

The History of Banking in Canada, by R. M. Breckenridge.

The Canadian Banking System, by Dr. Joseph French Johnson.

The English Banking System, by Hartley Withers, Sir R. H. Inglis Palgrave, et al.
The French Banking System, by Albert Aupetit.
The Reichsbank, 1876–1900.
German Imperial Banking Laws, edited by Dr. R. Koch.
The Swiss Banking Law, by Dr. Julius Landmann.
Italian Bank of Issue, by Comm. Tito Canovai.
The Swedish Banking System, by A. W. Flux.
The National Bank of Belgium, by Charles A. Conant.
The Banking System of Mexico, by Charles A. Conant.
Banking in Russia, Austria-Hungary, Holland, and Japan.

Mr. BURTON. The opinion has been expressed this morning—I think rather carelessly—that there is no value in any of these publications. Let me offer in opposition to that criticism the words of certain recognized experts in finance in this country and abroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as I am the only person who has spoken on that matter, I assume the Senator from Ohio intends to impute that expression to me.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no. I, perhaps, should have mentioned that it was the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, I tried to say with some emphasis that I thought the collection was very complete.

Mr. BURTON. The statement was not made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not want to criticize the commission in any way at all for the collection of the monographs upon financial subjects or the collection of the general literature which it has brought together.

Mr. BURTON. This is from Mr. Wesley C. Mitchell, in the Quarterly Journal of Economics of May, 1911:

What practical use the commission can make of this large mass of material in framing new bills for submission to Congress remains to be seen. But certainly economists interested in currency problems will find the publications of the commission a most valuable addition to their literature. * * * Continued use of this information must be made both by the commission in elaborating its bill and by all who take serious part in the discussion of that measure. Whatever may be the legislative outcome of the commission's labors, it has already performed a notable service by gaining fresh and diffusing old knowledge of the subject with which it deals.

The next is from the London Economist of November 5, 1910. It is probably unnecessary for me to say, Mr. President, that that journal has as high a reputation as any financial journal in the world:

The publications of the above commission are probably the most important contribution that has been made in modern times to the science and statistics of banking and currency, and the investigations of the commission are by no means narrowly confined, for they embrace such subjects as stock exchanges, public credit, and Treasury control.

The next is from Sir R. H. Inglis Palgrave, perhaps the most noted English writer and author on financial subjects, the author of a dictionary of political economy, of a book on the bank rates of England, and of numerous other works. He is the man to whom appeal is taken whenever any statistical work relating to banking is desired. He says:

There have in times past been many investigations into monetary conditions of the great countries of the world. From the report of the bullion committee, printed in 1810, onward, both our Houses of Parliament have made many inquiries into important matters connected with the subject. The great French Enquête sur les Principes et les Faits Généraux qui régissent la circulation monétaire et fiduciaire held at the request of the Conseil Supérieur de l'Agriculture, du Commerce et de l'Industrie commenced its investigations on February 7, 1865, and continued to December 28, 1868.

It will be noted that that was 3 years and 10 months, about equivalent to the time occupied by this commission by the beginning of the next session of Congress.

The history of their labors fills six solid quarto volumes. They received information from 119 chambers of commerce, besides associations representative of arts and manufactures in that country and representatives of foreign chambers of commerce from England, Holland, Switzerland, and Austria. They examined 137 witnesses, including among their own countrymen such economists as Leon Say, statesmen as Thiers, representatives of the Bank of France and the principal bankers of Paris, as M. Fremy, who was at that time governor of the Credit Foncier de France. Among English authorities such men as Walter Bagehot, William Newmarch, Thomas Hankey, governor at that time of the Bank of England; Charles Gairdner, of the Union Bank of Scotland; John Stuart Mill, and many other well-known men. The analytical statements of the contents extends over 126 pages—

Thus far it will be seen he has been eulogizing the work of this French commission—

but for amount of work and information collected, the labors of the National Monetary Commission of the United States exceed all its predecessors, both in quantity and value, even the great French inquiry we have described. The list of the publications issued by it and in preparation alone forms a pamphlet of more than 30 pages. The energy of Senator N. W. Aldrich dominated and inspired the work, and the Hon. A. Piatt Andrew, now the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, has been of great service in arranging and coordinating the work of the commission.

The following is from the Journal of the Institute of Bankers, which, with the Bankers' Magazine, is the leading publication on banking in England. It states, in its issue of November 9, 1910:

* * * Americans have nothing with which to reproach themselves so far as research into the conditions prevailing in other contries is concerned. The National Monetary Commission, appointed immediately after the crisis in the autumn of 1907, under the chairmanship of Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, to examine and report upon the banking systems of Europe, has now published the most important part of its reports, and the result is a mass of information upon the banking systems and methods of Europe with which there is nothing in the English language to compare for completeness and fullness of detail. To English bankers, as well as to Americans, the reports will be invaluable. Hitherto anyone wishing for a knowledge of the banking systems of continental Europe has been driven to read German and French publications upon the subject, the sources of information in the English language having been meager in the extreme; and for anyone to whom the language difficulty has been an insuperable obstacle authoritative information has been practically impossible. Now we have for our guidance, thanks to the efforts of the commission, not only a series of interviews with the leading bankers of England and continental Europe, giving the fullest details of the systems and methods in force in each country, but also translations of a series of monographs by leading experts, forming a voluminous encyclopedia of banking knowledge. To Germany as the country possessing a political constitution most nearly approaching that of the United States the greatest amount of space has been devoted, but the attention given to English and French banking is but little less thorough.

There have been some comments in regard to the duplication of salaries, et cetera, by this commission. I repeat that I am not going to defend the disbursements and engagements of that commission. I do not believe in the duplication of salaries, but I think an injustice has been done to Mr. Andrew. In 1908 he left a position as professor in Harvard University, which was entirely congenial to him, to act as secretary of this commission. For a considerable time he continued in the exclusive employ of the commission. I want to say that no one student of the subject, no practical financier, whoever he may be, has contributed more to the dissemination of monetary information, has initiated and made public more valuable ideas on banking, than Prof. Andrew. Even if it be true that he has received $8,366.66—whatever the facts may be as to his receiving double pay during a part of that time—his services have been worth that and much more to the people of the United States. He has performed arduous and valuable services in superintending the publication of the library of the commission. Contracts with authors, translation, and proof reading have all been attended to by him.

Again it was stated, I know with some doubt and with no intention to do any injustice to the gentleman, that the librarian of the commission was receiving a double salary. That, Mr. President, is not the case. The librarian who is now employed formerly occupied a very responsible position in the bibliographical department of the Library of Congress, receiving a salary of $1,500 a year. He was invited to leave that position and become librarian of the Monetary Commission at a salary of $2,000 a year. He relinquished his old position and took the new. His experience as a bibliographer has been of great value in collecting this information.

I do not think very much importance is to be attached to the fact that his salary has been more than the aggregate cost of the books purchased. All the books in that library have not by any means been purchased at book stores. They have been collected from other departments of the Government. Public documents relating to financial subjects which were not available have been lodged in this library, thereby bringing together a valuable collection. I understand that the number of volumes and pamphlets is nearer 10,000 than 4,000, and the librarian has occupied himself during much of this time in compiling a bibliography of the subject. The Senate is to decide whether they wish to stop this work right here, or whether they are willing to continue it until a comprehensive library available to Senators and Representatives and to all students of the subject is collected. For myself (while I have no personal interest in this matter), and while like all the other Members of the Senate who belong to a commission, I am restive because it takes so much of my time, I do not believe it is best to bring the life of this commission peremptorily to an end next December. Let the members file a report and give to the public the benefit of their study of these monetary questions which now agitate the country, or which at least, if they do not agitate the country, should be live and burning questions, because they have so immediate a bearing upon the prosperity and general welfare of the people.

No doubt the commission needs reorganizing; no doubt salaries should be discontinued; but give them an opportunity to report. Then the field will be clear, and we can judge of the value of their recommendations and of the desirability of continuing the commission.

But what does the pending bill do? It proposes, at this time, practically without a hearing, without any knowledge of the value of the reports which they are expected to make, that this commission shall come to an end next December, thus passing judgment upon them before they are heard and before either the Senate or the House or the country can judge of the value of their work.

Problems upon which we ought to have information, and which should be solved, can not be adequately considered and reported upon by the 5th of December next, or I fear by the end of next winter, or even by the end of the next session of this Congress. If we pass this bill after we have created a commission and allowed it to expend very considerable sums of money in making investigations at home and abroad, we prejudge the work which the members will do and destroy any benefit which they might accomplish.

Mr. President, what are some of the questions which should be solved by this commission? Attention has been directed within the last few days to the question of the consolidation of the holdings of bank stock.

It has been a distinctive feature of our banking business that it has not yet been affected by the movement toward combination and consolidation which has been apparent in transportation and in industry. There are several reasons for that, among which are the initiative and independence of the banker himself. He desires not to manage a branch institution, the head of which is located at New York or Philadelphia, but, rather, he prefers an institution of which he has sole control.

Again, the confidence placed in each special institution is an important factor in its success. Depositors and those desiring discounts come to place their trust in some particular institution. If that institution is absorbed by another, that confidence is in a measure lost.

Another factor in the situation is the closer supervision exercised over banking institutions by State and Federal authority. Their management must be supervised, in the case of national banks, by the Comptroller of the Currency, and any step which looks toward individual management or consolidation is carefully scrutinized. No such check exists in the case of industrial establishments. True, there are certain factors which tend toward consolidation, especially in the investment market, where certain great financiers have obtained control over the mammoth life insurance and trust companies of New York, so that when anyone desires to float a loan the number of opportunities for borrowing the money which he requires is limited. This, however, is a tendency which will in time probably correct itself, although just recently the formation of certain companies for the purpose of taking over bank stocks has been reported.

Mr. President, this is in line with that tendency toward combination which is so much in evidence; but I confidently assert that it is not in accordance with the public welfare. A corporation has been formed in New York closely affiliated with a great bank, the object of which is to acquire bank stocks. As I understand the fundamental principle of this organization, ownership of stock in the bank is accompanied by the ownership of the stock of this affiliated corporation formed for the purpose of buying bank stocks all over the country. If a shareholder in the bank desires to sell his stock, his holdings in the affiliated corporation go with that assignment. This plan threatens to create a condition which has been avoided in the past, and which we should be careful to avoid in the future. It seems to me that such an organization of two companies side by side, the one to conduct the banking business, and the other having the same stockholders, whose shares go with the shares of the bank, to acquire stock in other institutions, is contrary to law, and that the connection between them should be dissolved. If it is not dissolved, I desire to give notice here that at the proper time I shall introduce a bill to prevent any such combination.

I recognize the difficulties to be encountered in framing a bill to meet such a situation. Of course it is a perfectly proper thing for a savings bank or for a trust company to buy a certain amount of bank stock as an investment, and it would be difficult to frame a statute which exempted that class of investments or forbade this practice; but when the sole object is to accumulate bank stock in different portions of the country, it seems to me directly contrary to the best policy. It would be a decided check upon the usefulness of the proposed plan for a reserve association which has recently been presented to the Monetary Commission. This subject is a fit one for the Monetary Commission to consider and to investigate. I offer it as but one illustration of questions which are sure to arise, for this subject has been brought to public notice only within a few weeks. To meet such exigencies a body, such as the Monetary Commission, would be useful in recommending and in framing legislation.

There are a number of other propositions which are before the commission on which no decision has been reached. The question whether bank examiners should be chosen by civil-service rules has been propounded. That was for a time considered by the members of the commission without arriving at a final conclusion.

Another question deals with the best method for the compensation of bank examiners. The present plan, under the statute in force, provides for their payment by the banks which they investigate. That saves money to the Federal Treasury, but whether it would not be better to have bank examiners directly and absolutely responsible to the Federal Government, and under no possible obligation, even indirectly, to the banks which they examine is a problem that requires careful consideration.

Again, under the present system there is an ever recurring temptation to slight a small bank, whose payment for examination is small, and to go to a larger bank, where the compensation is greater. This is a question upon which there should be mature deliberation and where some recommendation should be submitted to the Senate and to the House of Representatives. The following is a specific question before the commission for consideration:

> In making assessments to provide a fund to pay examiners and other expenses, do you think the law should be changed so as to base the amount of this assessment on capital and gross assets rather than on capital alone, as the law now provides?

This is another question, although not of special importance. The compensation of the examiners is now based on the capital of banks. See where that leads us. One bank may have a capital of $100,000 and deposits of only $150,000, making its assets for lending purposes in gross $250,000. Another may have a capital of $100,000 and deposits of a million and a half dollars. It would be a much more serious task to examine the latter bank, with its $1,500,000 of disposable assets, less reserves, and so forth, than the one having only $250,000. I give these illustrations, Mr. President, to show that there is work for this commission to do, and the work should be done carefully. The following extract offers another problem for consideration:

> Section 5200 of the Revised Statutes limits the total liabilities to any association of any person, company, corporation, or firm, but excepts bills of exchange in the following terms: "But the discount of bills of exchange, drawn in good faith against actually existing values, and the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same, shall not be considered as money borrowed." Evidently the intention in making this exception was to enable the owner of such paper to realize on it at once, preventing the necessity of tying his capital up in forms of indebtedness not of his own making. Frequently banks have allowed a liability of this class to greatly exceed in amount what they could legally take as a direct loan. Many failures have resulted from these excessive loans made to a single, or allied, interest.

Mr. President, if there is any one thing which has given stability to our national banks, it has been the limitation that not more than 10 per cent of their capital shall be loaned to any one individual or corporation. Only a few months ago, within my own knowledge, a State banking institution had loaned 60 per cent of its capital to one corporation. That corporation failed and the bank was wrecked. It appears that under the law as interpreted, under the guise of bills of exchange or the discount of commercial or business paper, the obligations which one person or firm assumes may be very much in excess of 10 per cent, and it is desirable to consider the question whether this exception should not be limited.

> In what manner do you think the law can be amended to remedy this condition and sufficiently limit the amount of paper of this character which a bank can properly discount?
> Should the comptroller, in such cases, be given authority to take action, when, in his judgment, loans are being made in excess of the limit indicated by prudence and safety?

It is my firm belief that something should be done—though whatever regulations are submitted should be framed with the utmost care and consideration—in regard to the relation of a bank to its directors and officers. The statistics of failures show that a very large share of the banking failures may be counted as directly traceable to transactions with directors and officers of the bank, who have borrowed its assets. A greater degree of looseness, or lack of care, is manifest in making these loans than is shown in transactions with outsiders. As a result of this, many banks have failed.

Some have suggested the very drastic remedy that no loans whatever shall be made to directors of a bank. That would be going too far. In many smaller communities, especially, it would be impossible to organize banks if that rule were observed, because the men who would subscribe to the capital of a proposed banking institution would expect to utilize the bank for their own accommodation. If the bank loans them money and exercises a reasonable and a usual degree of care, there can be no rational objection. I think the sentiment of the business world and of the banking community alike would oppose a rule entirely prohibiting bank directors from borrowing, but there is no doubt that there should be some regulation to prevent the abuse of this power.

One suggested regulation provides that no loan be made to any director except by the unanimous approval of all directors, so that the subject may be carefully considered. I think some way may be found to prevent the frequent recurrence of the failures which are traceable to that lesser degree of care which is exercised when directors borrow of banks. I have no doubt there are instances in which banks are organized for the express purpose of allowing a few insiders to get control of the assets of the institutions. Those, however, are the exceptions rather than the rule.

There is another problem demanding careful consideration—

Section 5205 of the Revised Statutes provides for the impairment of capital. Under the present law this impairment must be made good by a stock assessment within three months from the receipt, by the directors, of notice from the comptroller. If this is not done, the association is placed in liquidation.

Should not the comptroller have authority in such cases to protect depositors who may, during the three months specified, deposit their money in a bank in which he, the comptroller, knows the capital impaired? If so, in what manner do you suggest that such deposits should be protected? There have been many instances of bank failures, and some serious losses to depositors in such cases.

The question here presented is whether a hard and fast rule should be observed in all cases. Though it is very desirable, when capital is impaired, to have it replaced immediately, when the demand for the additional subscription is presented, there is always the contingency that in the meantime the bank will go on doing business and will fail to provide the additional capital, in which event depositors are subjected to serious danger of loss.

Another question, which is practically a repetition of one that I have already referred to, is suggested by the following:

In what manner would you suggest the limitation of borrowing from a bank by its officers, directors, or employees, both in making direct and indirect loans, and would you make any difference in such cases between officers and directors? Do you think any officer should be permitted to borrow from his own bank?

I think the answer of any careful student of the question would be, "Yes; but there should be some distinction between them." The fact that a man is cashier or director of a bank, with that partiality or that opportunity which is given to him, should subject him to exceptional regulations.

The following presents a problem that I do not regard as of so much importance:

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that it is unlawful for a national bank to purchase or invest in the shares of stock of other corporations—

A very good rule, by the way. No national bank should become a holding company—

but the laws of several States authorize the ownership of stock of national banks by other corporations. There have been several instances in which the directors of the holding corporation and of the national bank have been the same individuals, and when trouble arose the holding corporation became involved as well as the bank, and in such cases the possibility of double liability was entirely annulled.

I call attention to the fact, Mr. President, that in England and in some other foreign countries a very strict rule is in force requiring the shareholders of banks to be men of unquestioned financial solvency. It is a common custom when a bank is organized, say with a capital of £1,000,000, to pay in on the stock subscriptions only £250,000, or one-quarter of the total capitalization. In some cases the rule is one-half. If there should be any impairment of capital or any serious loss a collection is made from the stockholders. They start with £250,000 as a working capital. If their business increases or if they meet with losses they assess another 25 per cent or the whole, if necessary. It will readily be recognized that this plan can not be effective if the holder of a share, on which he has paid only 25 per cent, can assign it to any irresponsible or insolvent person, and therefore the ownership of the stock is reserved to those who have undoubted responsibility, and an assignment can not be made without the consent of the directors of the bank.

Here is a very important question, and it is in line with some things I have already said:

Would it be wise to provide against the holding of shares of national banks by any other corporation, except in cases when taken in satisfaction of debts?

If any more combinations are going to be organized like the one in New York, to which I have referred, that is a general question we must meet and answer—probably not by an absolute prohibition, so that, for instance, a savings bank in Vermont may not, if it so desires, buy a little bank stock or stock of a life insurance company, but that no company can be established for the sole purpose of holding bank stock, thereby acquiring an undue amount of control over the banking interests of the country.

Under section 5211 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for bank reports, banks are not required to make them in duplicate, and in several instance the examiner has been furnished by the officers of the bank with a report entirely dissimilar from the one on file at the department in Washington, and, in using the imperfect report, he has found that the bank's books corresponded to it. This permits of deliberate falsification of accounts.

Would it, in your judgment, be wise to require that reports be made in duplicate, both reports being sent to the Comptroller of the Currency, and one copy furnished to the examiner by the Comptroller when about to undertake the examination of the bank?

I think no one will have any very great difficulty in answering that question in the affirmative.

The law as it now stands requires every national bank to keep on deposit with the Treasurer, in lawful money of the United States, a sum equal to 5 per cent of its outstanding circulation, to be used for the redemption of circulating notes. There have been many instances where banks have failed to promptly reimburse the Treasury for the redemption of their circulation, and, as the law now stands, the only recourse the Comptroller has is to sell the bonds held against circulation, or to appoint a receiver, either of which courses might be detrimental to the interests of the Government, the note holders, and creditors of the defaulting bank. At the present time the aggregate deficiency due the Treasury for this reason amounts to several millions of dollars.

Should not the Treasurer be authorized to, in some way, enforce this law without taking the extreme measures which are now provided, and, if your answer is in the affirmative, in what way would you provide for its enforcement?

Mr. President, all these questions show how, in time, various problems have arisen which were not suggested when the original plan for forming national banks was devised. Our national banking laws are largely a matter of growth and evolution. At the beginning there were certain fundamentals which still remain, but changes have been made here and there, some due to relief from the exigencies of the Civil War, some to the absence of any necessity for providing a market for the sale of Government bonds. Some changes have also been made because the original plan did not work well in practice. But there still remain these questions to be answered and to be solved.

But they assume little importance, vital though they are, in comparison with the great question of the reform of the banking and currency system of this country. If there is any one reform needed in our laws I assert that it is in our financial system. We have made wonderful progress, thanks to the buoyancy of the American people, our enormous wealth, and our readiness to meet and solve emergencies when they arise. But we have on several occasions been subjected to severe checks, causing ruin to thousands and a partial paralysis of industry, all of which could have been prevented by a rational banking system.

The first question for us to solve is how far it will be possible for us to follow the banking systems of Europe, where, after long trial and many experiments, every advanced country has adopted the device of a central banking institution, closely associated with the Government. The Bank of England is owned and controlled by private individuals, while the ownership of stock in the Bank of France is vested in private individuals, but a governor and two deputy governors are chosen by the State. In Germany the board of directors of the Reichsbank are chosen by the Government itself, but there is a separate board of supervisors chosen by the stockholders. A further regulation provides that the profits over and above a certain fixed amount shall go to the State.

Not only is it a fact that the central banks abroad determine the rate of discount and other matters of supreme importance, but it is also true that a decided tendency exists toward centralizing the note issue in one institution, instead of scattering it among many banks, as we did in the days of the old State banks. They do not have a motley currency such as we now have with our greenbacks, silver dollars, gold, national-bank notes, gold and silver certificates, but one bank, such as the Bank of Germany, the Bank of France, or the Bank of England, controls the whole issue of currency.

Many earnest students of finance in this country have been advocating the formation of a central bank. The opponents of the central-bank plan fall back on the argument that the people are opposed to it, and in this regard I have to count myself one of the people. I do not believe a central bank will perform the same functions in the United States or be as free from monopolistic control as it is abroad, and so I do not advocate its formation. If a central institution or reserve association is organized, it should not be like the old United States Bank, existing under its two charters, an institution competing with private banks.

Much of the opposition to the old United States Bank at Philadelphia arose from the banking fraternity. They used this argument: "Here is an institution which has the prestige of being the fiscal agent of the Government. It issues bills under certain preferences and advantages. That bank is a competitor in the open market for deposits, and by its superior opportunity in extending loans and by the advantages which it possesses it enjoys an undue advantage over us." Whether we have a central bank or not, that much is certain. It should be a banker's bank, dealing only with the banks of the country, making its advances to them or to the Government and not to private individuals.

A central bank has not the same opportunity for success with us as in England, France, or Germany, because of the vast extent of our territory and the exceptional contrariety of interests. Notwithstanding the telephone and the telegraph and all the manifold means of conveying news from one portion of the country to the other, we have localities very widely separated, with distinct interests, with a varying degree of facility in obtaining credit, and with higher rates of interest in some localities than in others.

Then there is a second reason: Our people would not so readily respond to the control of bureaucracy or centralized management. The independence of the people is a factor in the situation. They are not accustomed to that bureaucratic control which prevails in France and in Germany, and it would be a long while before they would become accustomed to it.

There is also the danger of creating a monopoly of the banking business. How shall the stock be held? How shall the institution be controlled? Shall everyone have the right to subscribe? If that be the case, there would be the gravest danger that great financial interests would obtain such a share of the stock subscriptions of the central bank that they would exercise, I will not say absolute control, but an undue degree of influence upon the management. It is out of the question to have it controlled by officers of the Government, because that would mean a change with every changing administration. So, Mr. President, I think, at least for the present, we may dismiss the idea of a central bank.

The next question for consideration is this: How far should we adopt the branch banking system? In this respect there is a wide difference between banking methods in the United States and those prevalent in Europe, where the branch banking system is in vogue and has proved an ideal plan. If a bank at Paris has more funds that it can readily lend, it sends them to its branch in Lyon or Marseille or some country district, and, conversely, when there is a surplus of money in the country it can be sent to the central institution at Paris, thus being readily transferred from one part of the country to another, according to needs.

So in France the great central institution has about a thousand branches, a principal or special branch being located in each one of the more than 80 departments, and other branches scattered over the country. The Reichsbank, or Imperial Bank of Germany, has even more branches. The great Central Bank of England has perhaps 9 or 10 branches. But the business is transacted by joint stock institutions which have numerous branches scattered all over the United Kingdom. There is, however, a very wide difference between the management of these branch banks and that of the Bank of England. If application for a loan is made at Nottingham, or any branch of the Bank of England outside of London, it must be transmitted to the central office (at London) to be passed upon there, while if a similar application be made at a branch of any of the joint-stock companies the local manager has the right to dispose of it, say, up to $100,000. The result is that the branch banks say they do not fear the competition of the Bank of England in their outside business.

We have no great central institutions with branch banks scattered all over the country. Occasionally a State banking institution may have some branches in the city in which it is located, or a few outside, but with rare exceptions each bank is an independent institution. Which is the better system of the two? That is the question for us to decide.

Mr. President, I am far from asserting that the time may not come when the branch banking system will be more generally adopted in this country. It would give greater strength and stability to each banking institution. It would enable, as is the case in England, consolidated institutions to shift their funds from one place to another where they are more needed.

The general history of the formation of the banking system of England is this: An institution established, say, in Lancashire, or some district where deposits were very considerable, after a few years of successful operation would find its available funds so considerable that in order to dispose of them it was obliged to establish an agency at London or some metropolitan center. In the course of time that agency became more important than the parent institution, and the head office was changed from Lancashire, or wherever it might be, to London. Other banks in various places were acquired where it was to their advantage to consolidate. Thus almost the entire banking business of the country in time became consolidated in a few prominent institutions, not more than 20 in number.

In the United States there is a strong feeling against consolidation, due to a prevalent opinion that it means monopoly. Again, if the branch banking system should be established in this country, one of two methods would have to be adopted: Either all loans must be passed upon by the local managers in various portions of the country or by the central management of the main institution. The latter plan would probably be regarded as the only safe policy to adopt. The plan of allowing the central institution to determine what loans shall be made would not promote the development of a new and growing country like ours. No central office at New York or Chicago could be sufficiently in touch with the needs of remote localities where loans might be requested to make adequate provision for them.

I may illustrate this fact by relating a conversation which I once had with a constituent of the Senator from South Dakota. He stated that 20 years ago he went out into what was then an unoccupied prairie. Some stalwart young men came out there and took up homesteads of 160 acres each and desired to buy cattle. Having hardly a dollar of resources, they came to him for loans to buy stock. He selected those who, as he thought, had a future, and made loans to them liberally; and he added, "To-day they are the wealthiest men and the leading citizens in that whole section; but had I been a mere manager of a branch bank, the head office of which was located in Chicago, I should not have felt free to lend a dollar to any one of them."

Mr. President, there are some other questions within the scope of investigation of the Monetary Commission, and I think while we are on the subject we might as well consider them. I recognize that in this torrid heat it is a burden for Senators to be present, but I think there should be placed before the Senate and in the RECORD some questions that are before the American people. The two great subjects which we must consider are banking reserves and an adequate currency. What is the reason why we do not have a better currency system? Everybody realizes the wretched condition that has been created, the injudicious character of the laws and regulations which have prevailed for so long, but strangely no one has come forward yet with a practical remedy.

What are some of the reasons for this condition, Mr. President? From the year 1791 to 1863 all our banking institutions were organized under State laws with the exception of the United States Bank. They showed a variety of regulations akin to those which now prevail in respect to other corporations. If a set of men could not do a banking business in the manner in which they desired in one State, they could incorporate in another.

The clash between the laws of different Commonwealths, the disadvantages of a system under which corporations organized in one State of the Union transact 95 per cent of their business in other States or abroad, did not begin with the recent trust movement. It was vividly displayed in the history of the State banks previous to the Civil War. In the matter of stock subscriptions there was no general requirement that the money should be paid into the coffers of the bank. Oftentimes the subscribers gave their notes for their subscription, and thus banks opened their doors without adequate capital—in fact, almost without capital at all. The result was that as soon as a squall came their doors were closed. It would hardly be correct to say that their capital was wiped out, for capital they never had.

In the midst of this confusion in banking regulations and this general instability there were some States that stood out prominently because of their excellent banking systems. In the far South the best examples were Louisiana and Tennessee; farther north, Indiana and Ohio; and, after many futile attempts the major part of New England succeeded in securing stability, though several States had institutions which failed disastrously.

Too much stress was laid upon the note-issuing privilege. These notes were secured in two or three ways. One was that in vogue in New York known as the safety fund, under which each bank was to pay 3 per cent of its liabilities into a safety fund. If any one of them failed, that fund of 3 per cent was applied toward paying its liabilities.

The system proved an absolute failure for a very obvious reason. The safety fund was intended to pay not merely the circulating notes which the bank had issued, but the amounts due to depositors and to all creditors. No distinction was made between the circulating notes which it issued and its general liabilities. Such a system was doomed to failure from the start, because it is hardly conceivable that in a new and growing country, with no regulations requiring capital to be paid in in full, with no provision to prevent impairment of capital, a 3 per cent fund would be sufficient to pay all the obligations of the failing banks.

This system overlooked the vital difference between circulating notes and the other liabilities of a bank—a distinction which is essential in any banking system. The depositors of a bank are supposed to have some familiarity with its condition; they should know the reputation of its officials; they have before them statements periodically published showing assets and liabilities. Loans are made to banks by those who exercise a certain degree of judgment, such as the lender always exercises. On the other hand, its circulating notes go from hand to hand, over the widest expanse of territory, and are accepted with confidence that they carry absolute stability.

Then another system was tried in some States, according to which mortgage loans were to be taken, the money paid over to the mortgagors, and notes issued to the par value of those mortgages. This failed, and failed quickly, for a reason which can not be too much emphasized, namely, that the security for circulating notes must always be in a form readily available, upon which collections can be made in a very short time.

The third experiment was that of buying State, municipal, and other bonds and issuing notes equal to their par value. This plan was rather better than the others. It furnished a criterion for the note-issuing privilege for our national banking system when organized in 1863. But it proved in practice no better than the other two methods, because, as before, the bonds could not readily be turned into cash, and oftentimes were defaulted in interest, and proved to be of doubtful value.

There was another plan, under which banks might issue bills equal to a certain proportion of their capital, but in such event they were compelled to maintain a gold reserve. This met with somewhat better success than the other three, but depended entirely for its stability upon the degree of rigidity and care with which the maintenance of the gold reserve was required.

Then there originated what were called the wildcat banks, because they were located in remote localities where wild animals were somewhat common. A Secretary of the Treasury who had engaged in the banking business some 5 or 10 years before the Civil War, and who is still living, relates some very interesting instances of attempts to collect money on some of the bills of these wildcat banks.

After gathering together a collection of notes of a certain institution he performed the rather wild journey necessary to reach the town in which it was located and there found himself in a very unfriendly atmosphere. Suggestions were made to him that his presence was not altogether agreeable to the citizens of the place, for it was a prevalent idea at that time that anyone having a bank bill must pass it on, thus forming a sort of an endless chain, and anyone who asked for payment was considered an enemy of the community in which the bank was located.

In addition to all these disadvantages under this system there was such a plurality of bills, and they were so poorly executed, that no bank cashier or other expert could readily tell a genuine bill from a counterfeit. Sometimes the counterfeit displayed better workmanship than the genuine bill.

Such was the system that prevailed in the days preceding the Civil War, before we had sufficient regulation. It took long years to convince the American people that there was a better way. It took the exigency of the great conflict to make possible the passage of a national banking law under which the whole system of banking and currency is governed by strict and uniform laws and is placed under the supervision of a Federal official.

Now, why were the national-bank notes accepted with confidence when those secured by bonds and stocks prior to the Civil War did not succeed? Because they were supported by laws and regulations providing for security; because it was recognized that when a bill was issued the institution which put it forth must provide for its prompt redemption.

The national-bank notes were secured in three ways. First, by a deposit of United States bonds in the Federal Treasury, on which bills to a total amount of 90 per cent could be issued; that is, if a national bank had $100,000 in Government bonds which it deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, it could issue bills to the amount of $90,000. That regulation has since been changed by the act of 1900, so that the bank may issue circulating notes up to 100 per cent, or the full par value, of the bonds.

But there was another security in the earlier days of the national banking system, since abolished, that the institution must maintain a reserve in the same manner as against deposits.

Still a third followed—that it must maintain with the Treasurer of the United States in legal tender 5 per cent of its total circulation, to be utilized for the redemption of any notes which might be presented to the Federal Treasury.

In order to do away with the circulation of the State banks an act was passed in 1865 imposing a tax of 10 per cent on their note issues, which, of course, almost immediately drove them out of circulation.

So, Mr. President, through decades; yes, generations of experiment, failure, and ruin the United States at last reached a currency system which had the merit of stability.

There are other essential features, however, of a perfect currency system which are still lacking, most important of which is elasticity, or response to the conditions of trade. How to secure sufficient elasticity is one of the problems before the Monetary Commission, and its correct solution is essential to the prosperity of this country.

I do not think there is much exaggeration in saying that we now have the worst currency system in the world, although we are proud of the absolute value of every dollar, paper or metal, now in circulation. The national-bank note, the greenback, the silver certificate, the silver and the gold coin, will now be accepted with utmost confidence in the remotest portions of the globe.

What is the reason that we do not have a good currency system? The main one, Mr. President, is quite obvious, though I do not seem to have heard it referred to as often as it deserves. It is that in all our legislation on finance and money we have never taken up the currency question as an independent proposition.

A glance at our monetary history will confirm this view. The greenbacks were issued in 1862. What was the object? Was it to give us a good currency system? By no means. It was to save the life of the Government. Our currency system had utterly broken down. It was difficult in 1862 to obtain money enough to pay either the soldiers in the field or the contractors. The fiscal operations in connection with the Civil War far surpassed those of any preceding year.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUMMINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BRADLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bailey	Chilton	Heyburn	Page
Bourne	Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins
Bradley	Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Root
Brandegee	Crawford	Lodge	Stephenson
Bristow	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Taylor
Brown	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Thornton
Bryan	Curtis	Myers	Wetmore
Burnham	Dixon	Oliver	Works
Burton	Fletcher	Overman

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The announcement of the result of the roll call has not yet been made. Thirty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest a call of the absentees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has moved that the Senate adjourn. Does the Senator withhold his motion?

Mr. HEYBURN. I withhold my motion for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators.

During the call of the absentees Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. BURNHAM. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is not present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose no business is in order, but I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio informally how long he expects to continue with his observations and what his notion is about the time when we may probably reach a vote on the pending bill?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, nothing is more difficult than to give an exact estimate of the duration of one's remarks. There are several subjects that I should like to touch upon, and I also desire to dwell at some length upon the proposed plan for a reserve association, familiarly known as the Aldrich plan, but I hardly anticipate that I could reach that to-night.

Mr. CUMMINS. I feel impelled from that answer to move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has moved that the Senate adjourn, and that motion takes precedence.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood the Senator to withdraw the motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I withheld it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withheld his motion. The Chair did not understand him to withdraw the motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I can only express the hope that the Senate will not adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the mandate of the Senate.

After a little delay, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. WARREN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. BORAH, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. SWANSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. If there be no objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE W. GORDON.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. GEORGE W. GORDON, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read. (H. Res. 274.)

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 10, 1911.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. GEORGE W. GORDON, a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions I send to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee submits resolutions, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolutions (S. Res. 133), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON GORDON, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased at Memphis, Tenn.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. BROWN, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. JONES, Mr. WATSON, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. THORNTON.

Mr. TAYLOR. I submit an additional resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 11, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 10, 1911.

AMBASSADORS EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY.

John G. A. Leishman, of Pennsylvania, now ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Italy, to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Germany, vice David Jayne Hill, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 10, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, the Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., delivered the following prayer:

We rejoice, O God, our heavenly Father, that Thy footsteps may be traced by those who have eyes to see; that the works of Thy hands speak eloquently to those who have ears to hear; that the pulsations of Thy heart may be felt by those who have hearts to feel; that no night of sorrow can obscure Thy presence from those who put their trust in Thee. Once more called upon to mourn the loss of a faithful and valuable Member of this House, we pray that those who knew and loved him, especially those who were bound to him by the ties of kinship, may be comforted by the thought that, his work fulfilled here, Thou hast called him to a larger life of usefulness, and though he may not return to them they shall surely go to him, in Thine own good time, to part no more forever. For this blessed faith and precious hope, we praise Thy holy name, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION COMMISSION.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the Senate concurrent resolution No. 6.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 6 (H. Rept. 142).

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the hearings before the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commision be printed as a public document, and that 3,500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the resolution.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think we may as well settle that now. It is a privileged resolution. It is a public document and for a commission of Congress. I think if the gentleman from Illinois will read the resolution he will have no doubt as to its being privileged. It is to make the commission hearings a public document, and calls for the printing of 3,500 additional copies for this congressional commission, a commission composed of Members of the House and the Senate. I have no doubt myself that it is privileged.

Mr. MANN. I have not been able to hear the resolution read in order to get an understanding of it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. FINLEY. The cost of this printing, Mr. Speaker, will be $75.86. That is the estimate of cost furnished by the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. How much?

Mr. FINLEY. Seventy-five dollars and eighty-six cents.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 6) providing for the printing of copies of hearings before the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

It is estimated that the cost of printing the copies of the hearings as provided for in this resolution will be $75.86.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is this the same resolution which was called up yesterday?

Mr. FINLEY. It is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not insist upon the point of order, although I think it is plainly subject to a point of order. Yesterday when the resolution was called up on the call of committees and reported the gentleman stated that it was privileged. I made the point of order that it was privileged, and the Chair sustained the point of order that it could not be called up if it was privileged without opportunity for the Chair or myself to examine the resolution. Because of that error I shall withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declared it privileged because the gentleman from South Carolina said it was privileged. The Chair did not investigate the matter.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I consulted about as good authority as there is in this country, and he gave me his opinion that it was privileged.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7693. An act to authorize the town of Logan, Aitkin County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.;

H. R. 11022. An act to authorize the bridge directors of the Jefferson County bridge district to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff, Ark.; and

H. R. 12051. An act for the relief of the city of Crawford, in the State of Nebraska.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 1. A joint resolution to amend certain appropriation acts, approved March 4, 1911.

DRAINAGE SURVEY OF LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 259.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 259 (H. Rept. 143).

Resolved, That 1,250 copies of House Document No. 27, Sixty-first Congress, first session, entitled "Drainage Survey of Certain Lands in Minnesota," be printed for the use of the House document room.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

August 1, 1911, referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FINLEY, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report, to accompany House resolution 259:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 259) providing for the printing of additional copies of document entitled "Drainage Survey of Certain Lands in Minnesota," reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to with the following amendment, that the words "two thousand copies" be stricken out and the words "one thousand two hundred and fifty" be substituted in their place. The estimated cost for printing 1,250 copies of this document, as provided for in the resolution, will be $500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PROTECTION AGAINST FOREST FIRES.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for five minutes upon the subject of forest fires.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for five minutes on the subject of forest fires. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the Legislature of the State of California on March 3, 1911, passed the following resolutions:

CHAPTER 35.

Senate joint resolution 8, relative to national forests situated within the State of California and requesting the War Department of the United States to station and maintain Federal troops in such national forests during certain months.

Whereas there are situated within the State of California great national forests, comprising in area over 27,000,000 acres; and

Whereas the protection and preservation of these forests is of great benefit to the citizens of this State and of the whole United States; and

Whereas each year during the months of July, August, and September forest fires threaten partial or total destruction of these forests; and

Whereas these forests are not sufficiently protected from fire during such months: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate of the State of California, and the Assembly, jointly, That the War Department of the United States be, and it hereby is, requested to station Federal troops in the national forests within the State of California during the months of July, August, and September each year, for the purpose of preventing and fighting forest fires and protecting such national forests; and be it Further resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be sent to the head of the War Department of the United States.

Adopted, March 3, 1911.

On July 5, 1911, I offered the following resolution:

House joint resolution 128, authorizing the War Department of the United States to station and maintain Federal troops in national forests during certain months.

Resolved, etc., That the War Department of the United States be, and it hereby is, authorized to station Federal troops in the national forests within the State of California during the months of July, August, and September each year, for the purpose of preventing and fighting forest fires and protecting such national forests from fire.

I have corresponded with the Department of Agriculture, the Forestry Bureau, and the Department of the Interior in regard to the amount of timber destroyed by fire in the forests, and I find that during the year 1910 there was a loss of $26,597,228, at a cost of $1,037,254.03; during the year 1909 there was a loss by fire of $456,246, at a cost of $54,669.83; and during the year 1908 there was a loss by fire of $1,223,717, at a cost of $73,283.33. I ask that these tables be inserted in the RECORD, so that they can be used in regard to this matter.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Comparative summaries of the reports on fires on national forests, 1909 and 1908.

	1909	1908
1. Total area burned over (acres)	362,014	414,638
2. Timbered area burned over (acres)	209,671	[1] 252,382
3. Quantity of timber destroyed (M. ft. b. m.)	169,410	232,191
4. Value of timber destroyed	$297,275.00	$451,188.00
5. Damage to reproduction and forage	$158,971.00	$772,529.00
6. Cost of fire fighting:
Labor (exclusive of forest officers' salaries)	$39,597.83	$55,981.78
Supplies	$15,072.00	$17,301.55
Total	[2] $54,669.83	[3] $73,283.33
7. Class of fires reported:
Class A	[4] 1,896	1,436
Class B	568	653
Class C	674	639
8. Total number of fires reported	3,138	2,728
9. Causes of fires:
Railroad locomotives	[4] 1,186	603
Lightning	294	555
Incendiary	97	102
Brush burning	181	68
Campers	431	493
Sawmills and donkey engines	38	5
Unknown	758	263
Miscellaneous	153	639
Total	3,138	[4] 2,728
10. National forest area (acres)	194,505,525	168,000,000
11. Area per 1,000 acres burned over	1.86	2.46
12. Per cent of timbered area damaged to total area burned over	57.92	60.87
13. Amount of damage per acre burned over	$1.26	$2.95
14. Per cent of fires of less than 5 acres	78.52	76.58

[1] The timbered area burned over in 1908 was not reported. This is an estimate based upon the average number of board feet of timber destroyed per acre in the years 1907 and 1909.

[2] Seventeen thousand one hundred and sixty-two dollars and eighty-two cents of this amount was expended on account of fires not on national forest lands.

[3] Nine thousand and fifty-seven dollars and thirty-three cents of this amount was expended on account of fires not on national forest lands.

[4] The large increase in 1909 in the number of Class A fires (fires extinguished before causing damage) is entirely attributable to fires on the Coeur d'Alene Forest, for which 657 fires of this class are reported for 1909, as against only 84 for 1908. Locomotive sparks were the origin of 611 of the fires on this forest in 1909, while for 1908 only 9 fires of such origin were reported. Consequently the increase in the total number of fires is almost entirely accounted for by the reports for Coeur d'Alene Forest.

Losses on private lands within forest boundaries.

The amounts given in connection with a, b, c, and d are included in the preceding table after 2, 3, 6, and 7, and the percentages following indicate the ratio of the losses on private lands within the forests to the total losses on the forests, as shown in the first table. However, in this exhibit the cost of fire fighting includes the value of the time of forest officers.

During the year 1910 there were a great number of forest fires in California, and yet by the assistance of the soldiers property was protected and millions of dollars were saved. I find on investigation that the War Department has no authority to send out these troops, and this resolution is offered for the purpose of giving it permission to so utilize the men in the Army. By inquiry at the War Department I find that there are 126 officers and 4,300 enlisted men of the Army now in the State of California that could be used for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I also desire to read a newspaper article from San Bernardino, Cal., under date of August 3, as follows:

SOLDIERS ARE WANTED TO FIGHT FOREST FIRES.

SAN BERNARDINO, August 3.

A frantic appeal for troops to combat the forest fire in the mountains north of here was sent to the War Department to-day. Between 50 and 75 square miles of forest already have been destroyed on the watershed of the San Bernardino Reserve.

Following the admission to-day of Forest Supervisor Charlton that he is unable to cope with the situation, every civic body in this section kept the wires to Washington hot with appeals for aid.

I desire to say that I find the same situation all over the State of California, where large tracts of timber are being destroyed by fire. All the available men of the Department of Agriculture are being used. More help is needed, and this resolution is simply that the War Department be given permission to send these troops out when requested. I hope that before this Congress adjourns we shall be able to pass this resolution, providing that when the Forestry Bureau of the Department of Agriculture requests the War Department to send troops it will have that authority.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To which one of the two gentlemen does the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield first to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Has the resolution been introduced?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Was it introduced only yesterday?

Mr. RAKER. It was introduced some time ago.

Mr. MANN. Has it been reported?

Mr. RAKER. Not yet.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is an emergency matter?

Mr. RAKER. Why, if $24,000,000 worth of property was destroyed last year, and fires are raging now, and 4,000 men are there that could be used, it seems to me there is not any more urgent matter of business that this Congress could consider than this.

Mr. MANN. Yet under the Democratic caucus action have they not refused to report it to this House?

Mr. RAKER. They have not refused to report it.

Mr. MANN. They have not reported it.

Mr. RAKER. I desire to call it to the attention of Members of this Congress before we adjourn, and I desire to ask unanimous consent that we take it up and pass it without any delay. A vast amount of property is going to waste, and all these men are there at the Presidio, who might be called out and sent over the State of California to preserve millions of dollars' worth of property. These fires are raging right now, and the men are needed to do this work. Congress is in session, and these people are appealing for aid. It seems to me this is the time to act. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I desire to ask unanimous consent that we take up this resolution at this time and pass it.

Mr. BUTLER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend remarks in the RECORD at some future date on the subject of the Government coal-land policy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD remarks on the subject of coal lands. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 14) admitting New Mexico and Arizona to statehood, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, these amendments do not materially alter the resolution as it passed the House. There are three of them. They all amend the section of the resolution providing for the separate ballot which is to be used in voting upon the constitutional amendment submitted to the voters of New Mexico. The Senate amendments throw additional safeguards around the use of this ballot. They require the ballot, after it has been handed to the voter by the election officer, to be returned to that officer, whether it has been marked or not. The purpose of this is to prevent these ballots from getting into the hands of party workers, who, by getting hold of the ballot, might use it to intimidate timid voters and induce them to vote against their convictions upon this constitutional amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution passed this House by a vote of 214 for it and 58 against it. It passed the Senate by a vote of 53 for it and 18 against it. It is thus demonstrated that this resolution meets with the approval of an overwhelming majority of the membership of both Houses of Congress. [Applause.]

I believe it is satisfactory to the overwhelming majority of the people of both these Territories. I hope the House will concur in these amendments, that this resolution will soon become a law, and that the Democratic and Republican Parties will thereby keep the pledges they have made to the people of these Territories. [Applause.] I hope that these prosperous, populous, and growing Territories may soon be admitted to the sisterhood of States upon equal terms with the other States of this Union. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if no one desires to speak upon this motion, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is demanded on some amendment or amendments, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question being taken, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The next order of business is the regular call of committees, and the clerk will call them in their order, beginning where the call left off before, with the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I want to ask if the call does not rest with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state his understanding of the rule, and if any gentleman does not think the Chair's decision is correct the Chair will be willing to hear him. There are two calls of committees under the existing rules that we now have. One of them is the regular call. When the House runs out of any other business to do, then that call takes place. The one we were operating under yesterday is Calendar Wednesday, and when next Calendar Wednesday arrives then the unfinished business will be the bill called up yesterday by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to the opinion that that question came up in the last Congress and the precedent was established the other way; that is, regardless of what day the calendar was called, there could be but one call of committees. I have not looked the question up, but my recollection is that the practice of the House was established that way. My recollection is that the matter was discussed at the time, and it was pointed out that to have a call rest with different committees on different occasions was bound to result in confusion.

Gentlemen raised the question that there was some advantage of having a call rest with the committee on Calendar Wednesday, because it might call up a bill on the House or the Union Calendar, and it had not that advantage on some other day. After discussion, my recollection is, although I may be mistaken, that the practice was fixed that the call should continue day by day; otherwise it would result in interminable confusion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York a question. There is no question but that you can have a call of committees any day when the House runs out of business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. None whatever. The only difference that Calendar Wednesday makes is that there must be at least one day in the week when privileged business can not be interjected so as to prevent the call of committees being reached in regular order unless two-thirds of the House so determines. There must be a call of committees on Wednesday in each week, and there may be a call of committees every day in the week unless matters more highly privileged are called up in the House.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's contention is that really the two calls of committees are merged in one, and the call rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, where we were yesterday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my recollection of what was determined by the House. The only thing that was done in the establishment of Calendar Wednesday was that it compelled a call of committees on Wednesday. The rules provided for the call of committees, but a practice had grown up by which business of higher privilege was being continually called up and considered by the House, thus cutting off the call of committees. So, in order to insure the call of committees at least one day in the week, a rule was provided to make it mandatory that the committees should be called one day a week unless two-thirds desired otherwise; but there is nothing in the rule that would indicate that the call of committees on that day should be segregated from the call of committees on any other day in the session. My recollection is that the matter was brought up, and after discussion the House settled that there was no distinction, and that there could be but the one call; and while it might be either an advantage or a disadvantage not to be called on Wednesday, or any other day, that was one of the chances Members and committees had to take.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the decision of the Speaker on the subject. The gentleman from New York, as I understood him, just stated that there was nothing to segregate the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday from an ordinary call on any other day in the week. On the contrary, I call his attention to the rule which specially segregates the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday from an ordinary call.

Paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV, the rule for Calendar Wednesday, says:

> On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules; but bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Now, under the call of committees under the other rule, the ordinary call of committees, Union Calendar bills can not be called, and so it seems to me that while the gentlemen are looking up the precedent set at the last session—which we all seem to be rather hazy about—it seems to me that the letter and the spirit of the rule permitting Union Calendar bills to be called up on Calendar Wednesday is a segregation.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. It is true in the first instance, under the regular order, that bills can not be called up on the Union Calendar, but at the end of 60 minutes they can be.

Mr. MANN. That is true at any time.

Mr. DALZELL. Which is a privileged motion. I say that what the gentleman says about the difference between the two rules growing out of the power to call up bills from the Union Calendar in one case and lack of it in another is not a substantial difference, for the reason that under clause 4 of this rule on any other day than Calendar Wednesday a bill on the Union Calendar may be called up at the end of 60 minutes, which is a privileged motion.

Mr. MANN. That will still be true, of course, if we now proceed to the call of committees as we have proceeded, and as the Chair has held that Union Calendar bills are not in order under a call of committees, at the end of 60 minutes, at the expiration of an hour, under the call of committees, it is then in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a particular bill, to which one amendment may be offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Under the ordinary call of committees a bill on the Union Calendar may not be called up, while under the call on Calendar Wednesday bills on the Union Calendar may be called up. If the ruling is that there is only one call, then this call would rest with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which had under consideration when the House adjourned a bill from the Union Calendar. Query: If it be held that we take up this call to-day where we left off yesterday, can the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on that bill from the Union Calendar and proceed with it?

Mr. DALZELL. I think it can, Mr. Speaker. I think to hold the contrary would get us into this situation: If it be held now that the bill that was taken up yesterday is not in order under a call of committees, we will take up a new bill, and at the end of 60 minutes it will be in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and take up the bill that was considered on yesterday. What will be the result? You will have two bills representing unfinished business, one of them the bill that was called up on Calendar Wednesday originally and the other the bill that was called up to-day, so that, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] says, to hold as the Speaker has intimated, will, in my judgment, result in no end of confusion. You will have two classes of unfinished business all of the time.

The SPEAKER. How would it work any confusion?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the Speaker permit me to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to a method by which it would work perhaps not confusion but interminable delay. Under the ordinary call of committees it is in order, after the expiration of an hour, to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on a special bill, but if we proceed now to the consideration of this bill on the Union Calendar and resolve ourselves into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the House will have no way at the end of an hour of taking up any Union Calendar bill except by the committee rising.

Under the gentleman's contention it could not take up any other Union Calendar bill, because it has one before it. The House ought to have the liberty under the rules on ordinary days after the end of an hour on the House Calendar to proceed to the consideration of any Union Calendar bill it desires to reach. That gives liberty to the House, and under the construction the Speaker has intimated it gives the House control of the bill that it chooses to take up, and it will often want to take up some other Union Calendar bill. But if you have to proceed with this bill, if it is the unfinished business, we might have, for instance, the bill that was called up at the last session of Congress for a revision of the judicial title, and the House would find itself in a position where under the rules it could not proceed to the consideration of any other Union Calendar bill until it had completed the consideration of the bill it had commenced on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. DALZELL. That would be a reason why the House should finish the consideration of that bill. There is no answer to what I have said—there will be two kinds of unfinished business.

Mr. MANN. There may be a dozen kinds of unfinished business.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania another question. Now, here is the situation. We on yesterday considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union a bill on the Union Calendar which can not be called up under this ordinary call of the committees. Now, the gentleman from Florida, very much interested in that bill as chairman of that committee, raises this point of order that the call rests where we quit on yesterday. Now, suppose we let the call rest where we quit on yesterday; then under the rule the Chair is compelled to rule that bill out of order to-day, because you can not consider under the ordinary call, as I understand it, a bill on the Union Calendar——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, but after one hour it would be a privileged motion to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a bill on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to make this reply in answer to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we would have two classes or two kinds of bills unfinished. Under the old rule we were liable to have that, because under the old rule, after we proceeded for 60 minutes on a bill not on the Union Calendar, a motion was in order and could be made, and we could go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on a bill on the Union Calendar; so we are liable to have the same confusion of which the gentleman speaks now. I do not think that is any reason against the ruling intimated by the Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add to what I have already said that this question was discussed in the last Congress and a ruling made by the Speaker in accordance with the position I have taken to-day.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair would be very slow in overruling a precedent made by a former Speaker if this question had been well settled, but this was a new ruling, and the Chair has always understood that the gentleman from New York was the author of it, and there never has been but one ruling made on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion to the Chair. Under the rule a committee is entitled to two days on call of committees to call up bills and after the second day it can not call up any new bill, but a bill called up on the second day may be continued along from day to day until it is disposed of. One of the reasons for the construction given to the rule was this: If on Calendar Wednesday, for instance, a bill, such as the gentleman from Florida called up, after the committee had occupied practically two entire Wednesdays, was called up at the end of the second Wednesday, and it was a bill on the Union Calendar that would be controverted, on which a large amount of time would be occupied in general debate, and the bill was also one which would require considerable time for consideration under the five-minute rule, in a short session of Congress such a bill as that would occupy every Calendar Wednesday in a short session.

The SPEAKER. Now, that is precisely what did happen at the last session of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but the bill that was called up in the manner in which it was called up could have been called up under the rule that had been made on any other day in the week if there had been a call of committees after at least 60 minutes had expired. After the 60 minutes had expired in which business on the House Calendar is considered, it is a privileged motion to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider such a bill as the gentleman from Florida desired considered, and it is a motion of such high privilege that a Member can be taken off the floor right in the middle of a speech to have such a motion submitted. It is one of the few motions a gentleman can make in order to get the floor from another.

Mr. GARRETT. If he has a privileged bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whether it be a privileged bill or not. So long as it is a bill on the Union Calendar, at the expiration of 60 minutes, in consideration of bills under the call of committees, the motion is privileged, and it can take a Member from the floor if offered. It seems to me, while the question, perhaps, was not thrashed out as fully as it might have been, that to have these two separate calls of committees, the call resting one day on one committee and for another day with another committee, will do much to destroy the effectiveness of the rule which was designed to have a call of committees.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a question or two. How will it destroy Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is hard to illustrate further than what I have said in this respect. If the ruling be made as now, it is likely to result in one committee occupying the Wednesdays during one session of Congress, to the exclusion of other committees, in the manner indicated.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Was it not held by the House at the last session of Congress that the question of consideration could be raised against one of these Calendar Wednesday bills on any Wednesday when the House determined that enough of time had been occupied for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is accurate. The trouble about it is this: All bills on the calendar are of some importance to some Members; but there are more Members interested in the great number of bills not under consideration than in any particular bill under consideration, and there are always many Members ready to vote out of the way a bill that is ready for consideration in order to reach other bills on the calendar. Moreover, if there be two calls recognized, both of them may easily rest with the same committee at one time to the exclusion of all other committees.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, with the merits of the present bill I have little concern. I know neither Trojan nor Tyrian as to this bill, but it does seem to me that the question that is raised here goes back to one of the old parliamentary battle fields of this House. There was a decision rendered at the last session by the Speaker, which I believe was the result of great consideration and care, and I think that decision was to the effect that Calendar Wednesday, so far as the consideration of bills is concerned, should correlate with other calls of committees on other days of the week. I do not know whether that ruling states what seems to me and what I shall present to the House as the great fundamental reason supporting it. If you will go back in the history of the rule relating to the call of committees, you will find that around that call centered a large part of the great obstructive tactics which tied up the business of this House to such an extent 25 and 30 years ago. They had a rule then that any bill called up on the call of committees should be considered for 60 minutes on any one day, should be considered for 60 minutes again on the next call of committees, and then should go to the Calendar of Unfinished Business. The knowledge on the part of the House that any bill, after two days' trial, could be sent to the tomb of the Capulets invited obstruction not only on the particular bill on which they wished to exercise obstruction but it invited obstruction against every other bill on the calendar that was coming in the procession ahead of the particular bill against which they had put their mind.

Now, I invite your attention, Mr. Speaker, to what will happen to-day if you rule that this bill must go over until next Wednesday. I infer from what happened yesterday that there was against this bill a large and determined opposition. They have found, if you shall rule as many here urge you to rule, that by debating that bill until the time of adjournment yesterday they have thrown it over for a week; and next week, when you shall again call it up, they will find that by debating it through that day they can throw it over to another week.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. HINDS. Surely.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would it not be in the committee's power—assuming that the power now rests in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—would it not be in the power of the committee after the expiration of an hour to call up the very bill that was under discussion yesterday?

Mr. HINDS. It might be, and very likely it would, but the whole experience of this House shows that that process of getting into a committee at the end of an hour and getting out of it again is pretty difficult. The right existed in this House for 10 years, and at the end of 10 years of its use in this House a revolution took place against it which finally resulted in the Calendar Wednesday rule you now have.

Mr. SHERLEY. If you take a large bill like the judicial code, which was under consideration last year, or any large bill such as the one for the reorganization of the postal service, if you take it up on Wednesday and have it as the unfinished business does it not practically block and obstruct every other committee in the House?

Mr. HINDS. I will say to the gentleman, do you gentlemen still remember how last year, when that judiciary bill was in the way, you could raise the question of consideration, and if the majority in this House had assented the Members would have thrown aside that bill when it became an embarrassment? I am not arguing here about the obstruction that majorities may make with their nay votes and vetoes, but I am arguing against that obstruction which puts the power which rightfully belongs to a majority into the hands of a minority.

I will invite your attention a little further, Mr. Speaker, to another point. Suppose two weeks ago it had been known—supposing we were here in the natural order of business—that this bill which is now pending was to come up under conditions whereby the ruling of the Speaker to throw this over for a week would control in this House. You would have had on every bill ahead of it, as every committee was called, that weird, insidious, conscientious, painstaking inquiry after facts which lasts long after the facts have been ascertained. [Laughter.]

You would have had that cushionlike opposition—an opposition more effective than Saladin put before the sword of the Knight of the Leopard—that obstruction which is to-day a national issue, because it exists in another body very far removed from this body—for most of us. [Laughter.] It is for that reason, in order that we may not see restored in this House the old obstruction which reduced this House to impotence 25 years ago, that I hope the Speaker of this House will consider long and carefully before he makes the ruling which he is urged to make to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question before the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS] takes his seat?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly, I will yield.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The gentleman from Maine has just stated correctly, according to my recollection, the action taken by the House with reference to Calendar Wednesday bills which continued over from Wednesday to Wednesday—that is, the question of consideration need not be raised when the bill is first called up, but may on any other Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. HINDS. It may be made when it is first called up, too.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. And on a succeeding Wednesday; and the House, therefore, is in a position at all times, so far as this Calendar Wednesday is concerned, to protect itself against a bill that takes up too much of the time of the House.

Mr. HINDS. It is, if you leave it for the majority of the House to say.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Of course the question of consideration must be determined by the majority. If we call up this bill from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors now, on the regular call of committees, as suggested by the gentleman, then the House could not long protect itself from the consideration of that bill.

Mr. HINDS. It could by the raising of the question of consideration.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The time for the raising of the question of consideration has passed, so far as all bills called up under call of committees is concerned.

Mr. HINDS. I think the gentleman will remember that last session it was ruled that the question of consideration might be raised against unfinished business under the call of committees.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. No; I think the gentleman is in error as to that. It was so held, as I remember it, so far as Calendar Wednesday business was concerned. I made the point. I raised the question of consideration myself.

Mr. MANN. And we voted on it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. And we voted on it, but it was that that applied only to Calendar Wednesday business.

Mr. HINDS. I think there was no limitation.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. My recollection is as I have stated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman overlooks the fact that on any day except Calendar Wednesday the question of consideration is taken on a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, while on Calendar Wednesday the House goes automatically into the committee, and it has been held that every day that is done it is in order to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MANN. The ordinary way of raising the question of consideration is by raising it in the House, but the ruling that time was that the question of consideration could be raised in the committee, the House having automatically resolved itself into the committee. That could not occur on any day except Calendar Wednesday, or unless the Speaker rules that this bill is in order to-day, when it can be called up as unfinished business.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I have a very distinct recollection that the question of consideration was raised while we were in the House, because the decision was made by the former Speaker of the House.

Mr. MANN. It was raised in the committee.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It could not have been raised in the committee if the decision was made by the then Speaker.

Mr. HINDS. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if the Chair, following the principles of the decision of the last session, will hold that the call of committees on a Calendar Wednesday is the same call in effect as the call of committees on any day when the House chooses to have a call of committees, he will then remove all difficulty as to the construction which will be caused by the segregation of business in one day and in stated periods.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois will suspend a moment, the Chair will ask the gentleman from Maine a question: Suppose the Chair should rule that the call rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, or suppose the House should decide that, then would this bill that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] had up yesterday be in order?

Mr. HINDS. I think so, as unfinished business, as on a call of committees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and I have not just now agreed as to what the ruling of the Speaker tentatively was. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] insists—and he may be correct—that the Speaker ruled that there were two calls of committees, and that if we went to a call of committees to-day we would commence where we ended yesterday. I was under the impression that the Speaker ruled that under the call of committees to-day it was not in order for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to call up a Union Calendar bill, and that the bill that was under consideration yesterday would go over as the unfinished business on the next Calendar Wednesday, and that the call would proceed, and that it still rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the Chair was a tentative ruling to the effect that in his opinion the rules as they stand now provide for two calls of committees, which have no connection with each other, and that this call to-day would begin with the Committee on Accounts, simply because that is where the regular call was. The committee was called several days ago, and there was no business ready. Of course, that call went clear around the whole circle. That would throw the call back to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MANN. If the Speaker will permit me, then, I think the Speaker is mistaken about that construction of the rule. I understood the Speaker to rule——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not finally rule at all. He made a tentative ruling for the purpose of inviting discussion about this matter, because it ought to be settled definitely.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the Speaker did not make any ruling. It seems to me that the claim that there are two calls of committees would result in giving some one committee of the House more days than it was entitled to possibly all the season, because the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, when I was chairman of it, frequently found itself in a position where it could use up two whole days on House bills. It might do that and have unfinished business, and then use up two whole days on the Union Calendar bills and have unfinished business. It seems to me that the correct construction of the rule—and that was the ruling at the last Congress when the Committee on Indian Affairs and some other committees were cut out of calling up Union Calendar bills because they could not call them up on ordinary days—that when a call has proceeded and a bill on the Union Calendar becomes unfinished business on Calendar Wednesday it is not in order to call it up on the call of committees on another day until after one hour has been used in the call of committees on House Calendar bills.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order, so that we can hear this discussion. The way the Chair rules, or the way the House settles this matter to-day, is very important, because that will be the ruling of the Chair during the remainder of this Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly agree both with the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Illinois that the call to-day rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that there are not two separate calls of the committees. But I disagree with the gentleman from Maine, and I agree with the gentleman from Illinois, that the right under the call of a particular committee is different according as that call occurs on Calendar Wednesday or under the ordinary call of committees on any day.

Under the call of committees, if on Calendar Wednesday, manifestly the call would rest with the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and this bill as unfinished business would be considered, but under the call of that same committee to-day it would not be in order, in my judgment, to call up a bill on the Union Calendar until, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, 60 minutes had been used in consideration of bills that did not require the House to go into Committee of the Whole. The reason for this view is that otherwise it would give to a committee that happened to get possession of a call on Calendar Wednesday a position of tremendous advantage that I think would serve to obstruct instead of promote the purpose of Calendar Wednesday. The purpose of the rule was not to help a particular committee, but to make easier the getting up of all matters on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. Suppose the House takes that view of it, or the Chair so rules, it is immaterial which, where does it leave this bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. It leaves this bill as unfinished business on Calendar Wednesday, with this further power in the hands of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that he can now call up House bills, and after an hour, if he has still maintained the floor during that hour, he would have the right to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that bills from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are privileged.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not consider that the question of privilege is here involved.

The SPEAKER. That is in the rule, and if that is true, where does it leave the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is not an appropriation for a river and harbor improvement. If it is, a point of order could have been made against it when it was called up on the call of committees yesterday. The rule provides that bills that are privileged can not be called up on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Yes; if the point is raised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the bill is privileged, then it can be called up any time after the approval of the Journal. A motion would be in order that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HINDS. Whether this bill is privileged or not, I take it, would not figure in this discussion.

The SPEAKER. No; it would not. I was asking for my own satisfaction.

Mr. HINDS. As to the question raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], no one appreciates better than I do the logical force of the objection that this Union Calendar bill would not have been in order to-day on a call of committees had the committee been called. But on yesterday this bill passed to a new estate when we adjourned. It passed to the estate of unfinished business. It was, so to speak, naturalized in a new order, a new class, which has always been treated under rules governing that class especially, the rules as to unfinished business. To-day that bill stands before us as unfinished business, and while there is some logical difficulty, yet it seems to me plain that for the orderly transaction of business and for the avoidance of obstruction it would be best for the law of this House if the origin of this bill were forgotten and it were treated only in its present estate, the estate of unfinished business. Under the rules and practice of this House the unfinished business on a call of committees has always been first in order on the renewal of the call of committees.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the rule creating Calendar Wednesday excludes the consideration of privileged bills. If the gentleman from Maine is right in his interpretation of the rule, suppose under the ordinary call of committees a privileged bill is called up for consideration. Of course the ordinary call of the calendar does not exclude privileged bills. Suppose a privileged bill is called up for consideration and is not finished, then, under the theory of the gentleman, the next Calendar Wednesday we would have to take up that privileged bill as unfinished business, when the rule expressly says that privileged measures shall not be considered on Calendar Wednesday. Would not that be the result?

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, that would be the result, and the gentleman has correctly stated the case, but in the history of this House in the last 10 years I can not remember any case where any Member being in charge of a privileged bill, which is virtually having the ability to send that bill by fast express, has ever wished or ever tried to put that bill into the slow, local accommodation train which this procedure to-day affords.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Suppose the calendar is called on Tuesday, and a privileged bill is considered and not finished, it then may displace all nonprivileged measures on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HINDS. It is conceivable that a high question of privilege like an impeachment—like an election case or any other of those high cases—might be called up on a call of committees. That is conceivable, but any man who has been in this House for the last 15 or 20 years will know this House never does that, and it does not seem to-day that we ought to bring up into argument a state of things which arises from a conceivable case but not from a probable case.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, is not the bill of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] a privileged bill which can be called up by the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to pass upon that question at present because he has not examined the bill. That question is not involved in this particular matter that is pending here now.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I suggest that the gentleman call up the bill as a privileged bill. I think it is privileged under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is simply where the call rests.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to what my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. HINDS] has stated—and there is no one in this House whose opinion on a matter of parliamentary law has greater weight—the gentleman from Maine, however, suggests that no one would ever use the process suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Suppose some one wanted to cut out Calendar Wednesday, and should happen to have charge of an appropriation bill, and his committee could be reached on the day before Calendar Wednesday. Such a thing might easily happen; and suppose he should call up the appropriation bill on Tuesday. It is the unfinished business at the close of Tuesday, we will say, and, under the contention of the gentleman from Maine, it would be the unfinished business on Wednesday—on Calendar Wednesday—to be considered during the entire day of Wednesday, and absolutely cut out the ordinary business of Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, I will admit that might be done; but the question of consideration would control and save the House, unless it might be that the majority of the House wished to obstruct; and when the majority of the House wishes to obstruct, all rules and all principles pass into abeyance.

Mr. MANN. Well, not quite, because the rules provide that it takes a two-third vote to dispense with Calendar Wednesday; but, under the procedure suggested, a majority vote could do it, and even then a man who voted would be in the position of voting against the consideration of a great appropriation bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Florida will withhold that motion, the Chair desires to settle this point of order, and then he will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss this question briefly. It occurs to me that these two paragraphs of Rule XXIV provide for altogether different methods of procedure. Paragraph 4 provides for the call of calendars regularly, but under that procedure the matter called up may be privileged or nonprivileged, provided it is on the House Calendar. The abuse that paragraph 7 was intended to cure was that the calendars of the House became loaded with privileged measures which occupied all the time, and there was no call of the calendar at all and no opportunity to bring up bills under that procedure, and paragraph 7 was adopted as an amendment to the rules generally. That paragraph does not in express terms repeal paragraph 4; it does not refer to it; and if there is a repeal of any part of paragraph 4 it is by implication. Repeal by implication never occurs where the two paragraphs can be construed so that both shall stand. Now, paragraph 7 provides for a call of the calendar on Wednesday, and it includes bills on the House Calendar as well as bills on the Union Calendar. It prohibits, also, the consideration of privileged measures which may be considered under the general call of the calendar under paragraph 4. Paragraph 7 provides for a different procedure and a consideration of a different class of measures. It was designed to bring to the membership of the House an opportunity once in each week to have the committees called regularly for consideration of a certain class of bills, not bills that are in order on the general calendar, but a particular class of bills, and therefore the procedure is of a different character on Calendar Wednesday from what it is under the ordinary call of the calendar. Therefore a bill that is unfinished on Calendar Wednesday is not the unfinished business on the next call of the calendar, but must wait until the next Calendar Wednesday. That is so from the very nature of things, because on Calendar Wednesday may be considered bills which are not in order upon any other call of the calendar.

On the ordinary call of the calendar, aside from Calendar Wednesday, there may be considered bills that are not in order on Calendar Wednesday, so that the ordinary call of the calendar is altogether different and disconnected with Calendar Wednesday. It seems to me that it is a very clear proposition. Each proceeding has its own characteristics, its own functions, and the work of yesterday is not the unfinished business of to-day; the call of yesterday has nothing to do with the call of to-day, because the call of to-day is under an altogether different and independent rule of procedure.

Mr. BUTLER. Where does the call rest?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The call rests where it rested at the last call of the regular calendar, not of Calendar Wednesday, and if there has been no call of the calendar at this session of Congress the call would begin in the order of committees as they appear upon the record.

Mr. DALZELL. The call rests now with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the Calendar Wednesday call rests there, but we are not doing Calendar Wednesday's business to-day; we are not operating under the Calendar Wednesday rule to-day; we are operating under an altogether different rule, one that will not permit business that may be in order on Calendar Wednesday. We can do to-day business that we can not do on Calendar Wednesday. It seems to me there is hardly any rule of construction that would hold that part of Calendar Wednesday rule should operate to-day, unless all of it should operate.

Mr. DALZELL. But the gentleman must recollect that yesterday the calendar was called and that all the business on the calendar reported by committees and subject to call prior to the report of the bill by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was disposed of. Therefore, the call rests to-day with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and if the Committee on Rivers and Harbors can not go on to-day with the bill that they had up yesterday because it comes from the Union Calendar, they have the right to call up a bill from the House Calendar. And the result of that is that a committee under that construction of the rule will be allowed to mortgage two days instead of one. That is to say, for instance, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors calls up to-day a bill from the House Calendar; it has the right to occupy every day of this session devoted to a call of committees until it finishes that bill, except Wednesday, but when next Wednesday comes it has an unfinished bill on the calendar for Wednesday, and it has a right to occupy every Calendar Wednesday until that bill is finished, and that committee under those circumstances has two chances as against every other committee in the House. The rule was never intended to operate in that way.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Just a word in answer to that statement. The call is being made to-day in the same manner as though there were no Calendar Wednesday at all. Calendar Wednesday is a different thing. It is peculiar in its nature. The call, in my judgment, should be as if there were no Calendar Wednesday. There is no connection between the call on Calendar Wednesday and the call of the committees to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The arguments brought out by most of the parliamentarians in the House seem to show that they are of one accord on the main proposition. The Chair wished to have the matter settled so that we would not have any more trouble about it during this Congress. Now, they agree practically with the ruling of Speaker CANNON in the last Congress, namely, that the call rests where it left off yesterday, namely, with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the Chair so rules.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Do I understand that we proceed where we left off yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not call up a bill on the Union Calendar under this call. That is clear to the mind of the Chair, and the rules so state. This call is confined to the House Calendar. Now, if it turns out at the proper time that the gentleman makes a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider that bill, the Chair might hold the motion to be in order. The Chair will not pass upon the question at this time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is at the end of one hour, is it not?

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to carry the contention beyond the bounds of reason. The Chair states that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] can not call up a bill on the Union Calendar. I ask if this bill is on the Union Calendar or in the Committee of the Whole now?

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HINDS. That is, the motion which he proposes to make—I could not hear it—is to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman is to go into the Committee of the Whole. However, as a matter of fact, he has not made it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. He does not intend to make it for an hour.

Mr. HINDS. I will waive that, and perhaps at the end of an hour it will work out all right.

The SPEAKER. The bill that was under consideration yesterday, in the opinion of the Chair, is the unfinished business on next Calendar Wednesday. Now, after the House disposes of any business that it has to do, the Chair, as it appears, would be inclined to rule anybody could get the floor if we had reached a bill on the Union Calendar especially, but at present the call takes up bills on the House Calendar. That is the ruling of the Chair, and the Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

During the call, the following occurred:

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, on the call of the Committee on Agriculture, I wish to take up a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Agriculture, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia, has been passed.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I was walking down the aisle in order to listen to the call, and I could not hear a call of the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again that the Committee on Agriculture has been called and passed.

Mr. PEPPER. The Committee on Military Affairs has not been passed as yet, has it?

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GORDON.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that the delegation from the State of Tennessee has learned of the death of Hon. GEORGE W. GORDON, one of our distinguished colleagues.

At a later day I will ask the House to set apart a time to commemorate by proper exercises his life, character, and public services. At this time I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask for present consideration of the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 274.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. GEORGE W. GORDON, a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee on the part of the House:

Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. LAMB, Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, Mr. CRAVENS, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. GARRETT, Mr. HULL, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. SELLS, Mr. PRINCE, Mr. THISTLEWOOD, Mr. TILSON, Mr. KAHN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. ANTHONY, and Mr. SLEMP.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. OLDFIELD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of the serious illness of his mother.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DENT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of the bill for the relief of George P. Heard, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GORDON.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the additional resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 11, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Assistant and Chief Clerk for the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to act of March 3, 1909, letter from Acting Chief Signal Officer of the Army, reporting expenditures in connection with the extension of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system (H. Doc. No. 101), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 11, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to make a personal statement.

In the report sent out by the Associated Press as to the vote on the statehood bill the statement was made that I voted against the bill proposing to admit those Territories as States. It was wrong. I voted for it, but a contrary statement has been given very wide publicity. There was no possible excuse for any reporter who has the privileges of the floor or of the gallery making the mistake. The RECORD distinctly shows how the vote was cast, and I wanted to make this statement in order that the facts might be properly given to the country and emphasized in some way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Kansas has made that announcement, though his position was not misunderstood by anyone on the floor of the Senate or in committee, because there has been no more zealous friend of the admission of Arizona and New Mexico, either on the committee or in the Senate, than the Senator from Kansas. I am very glad, indeed, to give him proper credit for his patriotic attitude upon this question.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7263) to authorize the counties of Bradley and McMinn, Tenn., by authority of their county courts, to construct a bridge across the Hiwassee River at Charleston and Calhoun, in said counties, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 7693. An act to authorize the town of Logan, Aitkin County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.;

H. R. 11022. An act to authorize the bridge directors of the Jefferson County bridge district to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, at Pine Bluff, Ark.;

H. R. 12051. An act for the relief of the city of Crawford, in the State of Nebraska; and

H. J. Res. 14. A joint resolution to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia presented a petition of the Religious Society of Friends, of Richmond, Va., praying for the ratification of treaties of arbitration between the United States, Great Britain, and France, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BROWN presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Omaha, Nebr., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called cold-storage bill, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition of Patterson Jobes Post, No. 555, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, of Claysville, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of Local Division No. 2, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Greenville, Pa., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Luzerne County Pharmaceutical Association, of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the imposition of a stamp tax on proprietary medicines, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

DUTY ON LEMONS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I present telegraphic memorials from citizens and commercial organizations of California, protesting against the enactment of any legislation placing lemons on the free list. They state that facts and figures are now being gathered together which will shed new light on this question and which they believe will make it apparent to all that free lemons will work irreparable damage to California, will deprive the country of a large revenue, and will not reduce the price of lemons to the consumer anywhere in the United States. This data will be ready in a short time, and my constituents ask that they be given an opportunity to present it to Congress and to appear before the Committee on Finance before any action is taken affecting the duty on lemons. I ask that the telegrams, which I send to the desk, be laid on the table and that a list of the signers be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table, and the list of signers was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fernando Fruit Growers' Association, Fernando, Cal.; Azusa Foothill Citrus Association, Azusa, Cal.; Semi-Tropic Fruit Co., Los Angeles, Cal.; Whittier Citrus Association, Whittier, Cal.; H. H. Granger, Chula Vista, Cal.; W. R. Salter, Chula Vista, Cal.; P. C. Drescher Association, Oroville, Cal.; Keen & Co., La Mesa, Cal.; Queen Colony Fruit Exchange, Corona, Cal.; Corona Lemon Co., Corona, Cal.; Azusa Citrus Association, Azusa, Cal.

TUG FORK BRIDGE, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11477) authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va., and I submit a report (No. 134) thereon.

Mr. WATSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 3199) granting an increase of pension to Edward P. Thorn (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROWN:

A bill (S. 3200) to correct the military record of Charles Haskins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3201) for the relief of Marion B. Patterson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 3202) granting a pension to Minnie A. Curtis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3203) to authorize the sale of certain lands within the Umatilla Indian Reservation to the city of Pendleton, Oreg.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3204) granting an increase of pension to Job Snyder; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 3205) granting an increase of pension to Henry Dye; and

A bill (S. 3206) granting an increase of pension to John Gorman; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3207) for the relief of Frank Kearney (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 3208) granting an increase of pension to William T. Kinerson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3209) granting an increase of pension to George R. Waterman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3210) granting an increase of pension to Paul Lemm (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS:

A bill (S. 3211) authorizing that commission of ensign be given midshipmen upon graduation from the Naval Academy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JONES:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 53) authorizing the President to cause a survey or surveys to be made to ascertain and determine the most practicable and feasible route for a railroad between certain points in Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. BRISTOW submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 7263. An act to authorize the Counties of Bradley and McMinn, Tenn., by authority of their county courts, to construct a bridge across the Hiwassee River at Charleston and Calhoun, in said counties, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. OVERMAN. I present a letter and ask that it be read from the desk and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter presented by the Senator from North Carolina.

The letter was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

FLINT MANUFACTURING CO.,
Gastonia, N. C., August 8, 1911.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On April 19, in answer to a letter I had written you relating to the tariff on cotton goods, you wrote that you did not believe the cotton schedule would be taken up this session of Congress, but when it was taken up for me to write you fully my views.

As this schedule has been taken up, I am again writing you.

Without trying to discuss the right or wrong of a protective tariff, what confronts the manufacturer of North Carolina to-day is that we have built a number of mills for making fine yarns and cloth, and these mills have paid a high rate of duty on their machinery, which mills would not have been built, nor could they have been operated at all, without a protective tariff on their product.

Now, since millions of dollars have been invested in these enterprises under a high protective tariff, will it not be a great wrong to at one stroke of the pen blot them out of existence by cutting the duty in half and allowing other countries who are old and experienced in the business and who hire their labor for half what we have to pay and with no duty on machinery to come in and take this business away from us?

Yes; but some say that we can compete with the world, which may be true on some of the coarser grades, where the labor cost per pound is small, but on fine yarns from 40's to 80's and above this talk is foolish.

England to-day is paying on yarns Nos. 40s to 80s 12 to 24 cents per pound duty, and imported for the year ending June 30, 1910, $2,563,729, which shows that the present tariff is not prohibitive, and that if you lower the present tariff on fine yarns there will be a larger increase in imports.

The fine-yarn mills of the South are to-day, many of them, running on short time, and we are having a hard time, some losing money.

In the face of all this to commence tariff tinkering and agitation at this time seems to me to be very unwise.

The above imports figures, of course, cover twisted yarns, colored and mercerized, and some of the radical reformers will say these yarns do not affect the South.

Yes; but they do; nearly all the fine-yarn mills twist their yarns, and while they sell them in the gray, they are sold largely to converters, who mercerize, bleach, dye, and resell.

Now, if this yarn is imported from England already finished, it will take that much business away from our converters, and, consequently, we will be unable to supply them with yarn.

Some time ago I stepped into an importer of fine yarn's place of business in New York, and showed samples of 60s to 80s fine-combed yarn. He looked at the samples, was pleased with the spinning, and asked the price. I was informed that my price was 1 cent per pound too high; that he could pay the duty—15 to 24 cents per pound—and undersell me.

Now, it does not take a college graduate to tell what will happen, or how soon, if this duty was removed or even cut in half.

There was last year made in the South $8,000,000 worth of fine yarns, 40s to 80s, and if you cut the duty in half it is my firm belief that you will close every one of these mills.

These mills are not oppressing the country. They are in no trust. On account of the sharp competition among themselves for business yarns are selling for cost, and in some cases, where the mills are about to go into the hands of a receiver—and they are numerous—yarns have sold below cost of production.

Again, the manufacture of fine yarns, especially combed yarns, is just in its infancy in the South; in fact, it was almost unheard of seven or eight years ago, but for the past five years 20 to 30 small mills, 5,000 to 10,000 spindles each, have been built or equipped for these fine yarns.

These spindles, as above stated, would never have been in operation had it not been for a tariff, and a high one at that, but not high compared with the wool schedule.

Now, in the face of these cold, hard facts, since these newly built cotton mills, on a new kind of goods, not experienced, like our English brethren in manufacturing, are struggling in a death grapple to keep from losing money and keep the sheriff's notice off their doors, would it not be better to let the cotton schedule alone for the present, or change it but very little?

I trust, if reduction is necessary, that it will be done gradually, covering a period of years, and that a reduction at the same time be made on machinery.

With best wishes, I am,
Yours, very truly,

FLINT MANUFACTURING CO.,
By L. P. GROVES, Treasurer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, the morning business is closed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 854.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Iowa withhold his motion for just a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will withhold it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to submit a proposition for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin presents a proposition for unanimous consent, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that on August 16, 1911, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton, and that before adjournment on that legislative day the Senate will vote upon the amendment then pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill, through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate for one moment this morning to say anything upon this proposition further than that it allows three full days for debate before we reach the legislative day fixed in the request, and thereafter, if it is necessary, in order to give all Senators an opportunity to be heard, the debate can run along, by taking recesses, until there shall be a full chance for every Senator to be heard who desires to submit any remarks upon this schedule.

I hope there will be no opposition to the proposed agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the entry of the order?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this seems to me to be an unusual and extraordinary proceeding. I do not think I have ever heard, since I have been here, a request for unanimous consent presented to the Senate to vote on a bill before it had been even discussed. It may have been done, but I have no recollection of it. After a bill has been discussed somewhat, then there is usually a request for unanimous consent to vote on a particular day. In this case there has been no argument at all on the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that while the reciprocity bill was still being debated by the Senate at the present session a unanimous-consent agreement was arrived at for the fixing of a day to vote on the wool schedule, on the free-list bill, on the apportionment bill, and on the statehood resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was that done before any discussion?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was done before any debate on this floor and before the bills were before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will object now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina objects?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, Mr. President, I will submit this same request to-morrow, and I will say to Senators just a word upon the proposition, that for one I shall contend that the Senate remain in session and debate the cotton schedule day after day until a vote is reached upon it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator also say that he will contend for a continuation of the session until we have other schedules debated and considered?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am in favor of disposing of every schedule which is sent to us from the House at this session, and I am in favor, Mr. President, of adding to the cotton schedule the revision of the steel schedule prepared by my friend from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the revision of the sugar schedule prepared by my friend from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], in order to insure that at least these three schedules shall be yet considered and disposed of by the Senate before final adjournment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am preparing a revision of the chemical schedule. Will the Senator agree to consider that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will agree to consider every schedule of the tariff law which can be presented to the Senate by anyone here who can offer a complete revision.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator mean as amendments to the cotton schedule?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As amendments to the cotton schedule. If the Senator from North Carolina can prepare a revision of the chemical schedule which he is willing to present here, I for one shall be very glad to consider it. I know it to be one of the most complicated and difficult schedules to undertake the revision of in the entire tariff list.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I renew my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 854.

The motion was agreed to.

OSAGE INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. OWEN. I have in charge a very important local bill affecting the Osage Indians, which it will take only a few minutes to dispose of. It is an administration measure; it is asked for by the Secretary of the Interior. A similar bill was passed by the Senate at the last session. I think there will be no debate whatever on it, and I ask unanimous consent to dispose of this measure, with the understanding that it will lead to no debate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oklahoma, provided the bill he has mentioned will not provoke any debate.

Mr. OWEN. I agree, Mr. President, that it shall not involve any debate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not agree to have the bill considered at this time if it will lead to debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma couples with his request for unanimous consent the statement that should debate arise in consequence of the consideration of the bill he will withdraw it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the bill for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2) supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment in section 11, page 8, line 7, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," to insert:

Provided, That the provision in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. L., 90), limiting the amount of money to be expended for salaries of regular employees at any one agency shall not hereafter apply to the Osage Agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the pending bill, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following:

That the National Monetary Commission, authorized by certain sections of an act to amend the national banking laws, approved May 30, 1908, is hereby directed and required to make and file a report on or before the 10th day of January, 1912.

SEC. 2. That the first paragraph under the subject "Legislative," on page 28 of an act (Public, No. 327, H. R. 28376, 60th Cong., 2d sess.), entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909, reading as follows: "That the members of the National Monetary Commission, who were appointed on the 30th day of May, 1908, under the provisions of section 17 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the national banking laws,' approved May 30, 1908, shall continue to constitute the National Monetary Commission until the final report of said commission shall be made to Congress; and said National Monetary Commission are authorized to pay to such of its members as are not at the time in the public service and receiving a salary from the Government, a salary equal to that to which said members would be entitled if they were members of the Senate or House of Representatives. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed," be, and the same is, hereby repealed.

Also to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to require the National Monetary Commission to make a report on or before the 10th day of January, 1912, and to repeal the first paragraph under the subject 'Legislative' of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for prior years, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1909."

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table, and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; that is done without special request. The Chair understands the Senator from Ohio offers the amendment and does not simply submit it. It is the pending amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, there has been no extended discussion in Congress on the subject of monetary legislation since the act passed May 30, 1908, notwithstanding the fact that these subjects assume the utmost importance. It is desirable that legislation be enacted relating to currency and to banking, and I trust these topics may be considered by the Congress at its next session.

When interrupted yesterday I was explaining the fact that our currency question had never been considered as an independent proposition, and that up to the present time all legislation relating to this subject was passed more to meet certain exigencies than to provide a complete and comprehensive system. One illustration of this fact which I gave was the issue of greenbacks during the Civil War. Other illustrations are the national banking system, adopted in 1863, and the silver acts of 1878 and 1890.

There has been much discussion of the necessity and wisdom of issuing legal tender during the Civil War. Some students, after careful consideration of these problems, have asserted that such issue was entirely unnecessary; that the war could have been prosecuted to its completion without it.

To make clear the situation as it then existed and to establish the point that at no time has Congress considered the question of currency independently, I desire to refer briefly to the conditions which made the issue of greenbacks a necessity. The first condition was the enormous increase in the expenditures of the Federal Government occasioned by the war. The second was the inability of the Government to prosecute extended military operations while relying upon an exercise of the borrowing power to provide for the expense. The third was the utter insufficiency of the currency system of that day to meet the increased demands.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that while in the year preceding the war the total expenditure was only $66,000,000, in the next year it had reached $474,000,000, or over seven times as much. I think it can be stated without fear of contradiction that the Treasury of the United States was confronted by conditions altogether more difficult than has ever occurred in the financial history of any country. It was not until the Government was practically bankrupted, it was not until the currency system had broken down and the expenses were seven times as much as in the preceding year, that the issue of legal tender was resorted to.

It has often been stated that the discussion in Congress over the issue of greenbacks showed great ignorance of the problems of banking and currency, but an examination of the debates at that time disproves these statements. It is true that some arguments were made which were fanciful and others were ingenious rather than sound, but the dangers arising from the issuance of paper money by the Government were clearly pointed out. Many warning voices were raised against the proposed form of currency. Mr. Pendleton and others argued against the measure on constitutional grounds. Mr. Morrill opposed the bill, but especially insisted that the amount of the issue should be limited. He said:

I would as soon provide Chinese wooden guns for the Army as paper money alone for the Army.

When the bill was urged as a necessity, he was oversanguine about the early termination of the war, and said:

The ice that chokes the Mississippi is not more sure to melt and disappear with the approaching vernal season than are the rebellious armies upon its banks when our western army shall break from its moorings and rush with the current to the Gulf.

He termed the bill "a measure not blessed by one sound precedent and damned by all."

Mr. Alley, of Massachusetts, supported the bill, but said:

Beneficent as this measure is as one of relief, nothing could induce me to give it sanction but uncontrollable necessity.

And, further:

If you do not adopt this measure, you will see the country flooded with irredeemable bank currency, a great deal of which will be found, as after the War of 1812, utterly worthless.

Mr. Horton, of Ohio, opposed the bill and prophesied: "If this bill passes, as I hope and pray it will not, this will be a point from which we shall date a new financial system in the United States."

Mr. Roscoe Conkling, who was then a Member of the House of Representatives, said:

The Treasury will control and decide the war, not the war the Treasury * * *. Armies and navies may perish, and a public credit well preserved can replace them; but if the public credit perishes, the Army and Navy can only increase the disaster and deepen the dishonor.

He opposed the proposition to make paper a legal tender, on the ground that the Constitution authorized no proceeding of the kind. He argued also against what he termed the "moral imperfections" of the bill.

It will proclaim—

He said—

throughout the country a saturnalia for fraud; a carnival for rogues. * * *. Every debtor of a fiduciary character, who has received from others money—hard money worth a hundred cents on the dollar—will forever release himself from liability by buying up for that knavish purpose, at its depreciated value, the spurious currency which we shall have put afloat. Everybody will do it except those who are more honest than the American Congress advises them to be.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What class of our currency was referred to?

Mr. BURTON. The greenback, the $346,000,000 now outstanding.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The prophecies of demoralization were hardly borne out by history.

Mr. BURTON. That is true; but I want to say, in this connection, the reason for that has been the very exceptional wealth of the country, the credit of the Government, and the very careful provision made by the resumption act of 1874–75 for redeeming these notes in gold. Under ordinary circumstances these prophecies might have been abundantly realized.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But those who were responsible for the original issue of greenback currency proposed to hedge it about not only with the honor of the country, but with such legislation as would forever guarantee that money as good as any obligation of the Government.

Mr. BURTON. They gave it every safeguard, such as the exchange for bonds, making it a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and allowing its deposit in the subtreasury in a manner to draw interest.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There never has been a time, I think, when the greenback currency has been especially burdensome to the Government. Of course, during the Cleveland administration, perhaps, the greenbacks were used for a purpose that was in its consequences more direful than any previous use or any use since that time which has been made of them. When our gold reserve was drawn out by it, it did provoke a very serious situation in the monetary world, and was especially harmful to the credit of our Government.

At that time, with some degree of modesty, I joined an innumerable band of patriots who felt that they had a remedy for that existing difficulty; and then I suggested a way by which that raid upon our gold reserve, which was made by means of the greenbacks, could be stopped. It could have been easily stopped if the Government had authorized the national banks to make the greenbacks a part of their lawful reserves. By making the greenback a part of their lawful reserve all of the outstanding greenbacks would have been taken up for a purpose decidedly useful. They were not at that time a part of the reserve, and the raid which was made on the Treasury through the presentation of these notes for redemption would have been avoided.

It is perhaps just as well that none of these extreme remedies were resorted to. The greenback has a standing among the American people that they will not willingly depart with or see weakened by any legislation or in any manner that has been suggested. For one I feel as though it is about as high a badge of national credit as anything we have in the shape of governmental assets.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, at some later time I may, perhaps, discuss the considerations so well presented by the Senator from Michigan. I am seeking now to explain the circumstances under which the greenbacks were originally issued, to show that it was in response to the exigencies of war and not as an independent attempt to solve the currency problem.

Let us now trace the later history of the greenback. The amount was increased so that the maximum at one time aggregated between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000. In a judicial decision, rendered in the later sixties, the Supreme Court declared that the legal-tender clause was unconstitutional; but that decision was later overruled by the same august body, since which time the legal-tender quality of the notes, whether provision be made for redemption in gold or not, has been universally assented to.

Another decision of the Supreme Court—in the case of Juillard, decided about 1878—establishes them still more firmly as a part of our currency system. The point was raised that these notes could only be valid and the legal-tender quality could attach to them only in case they were issued under the exigencies of war, but that, if issued in time of peace, they were subject to all the constitutional objections which were made before. In this case the decision, rendered by the Supreme Court with one dissenting member, was to the effect that in peace as well as in war it was within the power of the Government to issue these notes.

In 1878 an act was passed fixing the total amount of greenbacks in circulation at about $346,000,000, and now, for 33 years, that quantity has remained fixed and invariable.

There was at first provided a redemption fund of a hundred million dollars, with the right to issue bonds to redeem them. That right was exercised on a large scale by President Cleveland in his second administration.

In the year 1900 an act known as the Overstreet bill was passed fixing a gold reserve fund of $150,000,000, to be set aside for the redemption of these bonds. That is the law as it is at present.

I come now to a second class of currency—our national-bank notes issued by provisions of the national banking act of 1863—and I think it is easy to show that they also did not originate with the idea that they were a model form of currency. This system had been a pet idea of Secretary Chase. No doubt he, as well as other financiers and public men of the time, were very largely influenced by the deficiencies of our currency under the State banking system. But few if any of them had been sanguine enough to believe that Congress would pass a law for a national banking system. Such a measure would have immediately been confronted with the opposition of all those who believed in State rights and in a strict interpretation of the Constitution. It is only in case of some great event, such as the Civil War, that a measure of this kind could have been passed. It is surprising to note how much of the framework of public policies or legislation rests upon laws or constitutional provisions adopted while there were armies in the field or under the influences resulting from war or similar great emergencies.

The issuance of the greenback may be said to be one of them; the national banking system is another. But the primary object of this system was not to provide currency. It was to sustain the life of this Government by affording an opportunity for the sale of its bonds. In the beginning national banks were compelled to invest the larger share of their capital in bonds of the United States, a regulation which was not changed until many years afterwards. They were also regarded as a convenient agency for assisting the Government in the collection of its debts and the payment of its obligations. It would perhaps be too strong a statement to say that the issuance of currency by national banks was a mere incident of the system, but it is safe to affirm that the main object and reason for their formation was not to provide an adequate currency system.

Mr. President, I have sought thus to show that two of the most prominent forms of our currency became part of our monetary system under circumstances such that the consideration of the best way to provide for bank notes or for any form of money could not receive adequate attention.

I come now to a third form, namely, the silver dollars and the silver certificates. Mr. President, we all recall the history of that bitter controversy. Even the youngest of us can remember the days of 1896. From the very beginning the silver dollar had been legal tender at a fixed ratio with gold. From about 1835 until the commencement of the Civil War the ratio of 16 to 1 prevailed, though the question of the correct ratio was theoretical rather than practical until the act of 1873.

What was the fact during the years of the Civil War? The 16 units of silver in a silver dollar were worth more than the 1 unit of gold in the gold dollar; and in accordance with an inexorable law in any civilized or advanced country the coin which was relatively the more valuable of the two went out of use when both circulated as legal tender. It may have gone abroad, it may have gone into the melting pot, but for years a silver dollar was a curiosity.

But there was another fact more fundamental than that, namely, that the idea of bimetallism, or the circulation at the same time of two coins made of different metals at a fixed and permanent ratio, whenever those metals are bought and sold as commodities in the market, is a chimera; indeed, an impossibility. With the ready exchanges in modern commerce, the quickness of buyers and speculators to take advantage of any change in values, if the metal in one dollar is worth even slightly more than that in another of a different metal, the buyer or speculator begins his work. So in this day bimetallism is not practicable.

I do not for a minute leave out of account a certain steadying influence which the right of free and unlimited coinage gives to the cheaper metal; that is, if you have gold and silver at the ratio of 15½ to 1, as in France, or 16 to 1, as it was in the United States, and either metal can be taken to the mint in unlimited quantities, even though the value of the silver which makes up a dollar is somewhat less than the gold, the fact that it can be immediately transmuted into coins which have the qualities of legal tender has a potent effect in keeping up its value, but after that effect is secured there is still a variation, and the use of the two under any fixed or permanent ratio is out of the question.

In 1873 the silver dollar was abolished, but its abolition can only partially be ascribed to the fallacy, if I may call it such, of bimetallism. The immediate reason was that the silver dollar had long been out of circulation.

Well, then, what followed? The mining of gold diminished not only in our country, but the world over. Silver was demonetized in numerous countries and the pressure of commerce on the monetary supply caused prices to go down. To relieve that situation and to aid the very important silver-mining interests of this country the acts of 1878 and 1890 were passed. Nobody said at that time we ought to discard gold and paper money and establish silver as an ideal currency. The object was to do something to relieve a situation which had become serious.

About that time divers scientific men, including a most noted scientist and publicist, now living, Prof. Suess, of Vienna, wrote an article in which he demonstrated to his own satisfaction that the supply of gold, if not well-nigh exhausted, was diminishing, and that thereafter silver was the natural standard of value in any well-regulated monetary system. Like many other predictions of great and good men, his forecast has proved to be entirely incorrect, for with the discoveries in engineering and in chemistry gold mining became cheaper than ever before. Divers forms of rock and of quartz and tailings which could be worked over were utilized, and enormous supplies of gold were obtained from them, so that beginning about the year 1891 there was an immense increase in the quantity of gold.

Thus it appears that in 1873 it was no crime, but the logic of events, which led to the demonetization of the silver dollar, which had already become insignificant in our circulation. Again, it was the desire to relieve the situation, provide more money, and help the silver-mining interests that led to the passage of the acts of 1878 and 1890. On the other hand, it was the great increase in the quantity of gold mined in 1893 which justified the repeal of the silver-purchase act, and created in 1900 as the standard the gold dollar, providing that all forms of money issued should be maintained at a parity with the standard.

But at no time is there the slightest trace that any single line or phrase of this legislation for the silver dollar was enacted by our lawmakers with the thought that they were thereby creating an ideal or a perfect currency system.

Thus, Mr. President, I have sought to dispose of three forms of our currency and to explain that they came not as solutions of this question that is before us to-day, a proper circulating medium, but rather in response to some other demand or exigency.

Now, what are the defects of our currency system? In the first place there is no insufficiency in the aggregate amount. I want to read a few figures on that subject, showing the per capita circulation in this country as compared with other countries. These figures were prepared last November, and I have not had an opportunity to bring them down to date, but I think they are practically correct.

On December 31, of 1910, the average amount of money per inhabitant in the United States was $35.21. In France it is $37.85, due principally to the fact that their use of checks as substitutes for currency is much less.

If we include with the amount in circulation the $150,000,000 of gold reserve and the Government's assets in our National Treasury, our average amount would be $38.45 per capita, being greater than that of any prominent nation in the world.

This amount considerably exceeds that of preceding years.

Whichever method of determining the per capita circulation is chosen, the amount is greater by nearly $15 than in the period of maximum inflation during the Civil War, although at one time gold was at a premium of 180 per cent. It is also greater by almost an equal amount than in the very prosperous years of 1880 and 1881; greater also by approximately $10 than 12 years ago, and this notwithstanding the constantly increasing use of checks and other substitutes for currency.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bailey	Chilton	Heyburn	Pomerene
Bourne	Clapp	Jones	Reed
Brandegee	Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Root
Briggs	Crane	Lodge	Simmons
Bristow	Crawford	Martin	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Cullom	Newlands	Smoot
Bryan	Cummins	Nixon	Stephenson
Burnham	Curtis	Oliver	Swanson
Burton	Dillingham	Page	Townsend
Chamberlain	Dixon	Perkins	Works

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty Senators have answered to the roll call—not a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. MYERS answered to his name.

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is absent from the city on public business.

Mr. JONES. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. REED. I should like to anounce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is confined to his bed by illness and unable to be here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. BANKHEAD, and Mr. OVERMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. NELSON] is absent on a sad mission, attending the funeral of the late Senator FRYE. It does seem to me that the RECORD should show, as there are liable to be a great many calls of the Senate, those Senators who are absent on that mission.

In this connection, in view of the calls liable to be made, I also desire to state that the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is detained at home on account of illness in his family.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply desire to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is absent on the committee attending the burial of the remains of the late Senator from Maine. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] is absent attending the funeral of the late Senator FRYE, and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent attending the funeral of the late Gen. GORDON.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was at first inclined to refrain from voting on the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill, because I am a member of the commission which it proposes to abolish, but upon second thought I did not feel that my personal relation to the question could absolve me from the duty of voting according to my best judgment, and I voted against the motion of the Senator from Iowa, because I believed the bill was ill-considered, and I know it is ill-advised.

The very large majority which was cast in favor of taking the bill up out of its order, however, makes it manifest that the Senate has determined to pass it, and I shall not attempt to dissuade it from that purpose. But I will say, in justice to my associates on the commission, that Senators who have complained at its delay have overlooked the fact that it was originally made up of Senators and Representatives and that we have had two extraordinary sessions of Congress since they were commissioned to do this work. It has, therefore, in the nature of things been impossible for them to proceed with it as they otherwise would have done.

I will also say that the criticism against the expense of the commission, I think, is based upon an insufficient knowledge of the facts. I can say this more freely because no criticism about its expenditures touches me, for I have not drawn a penny from the Public Treasury in connection with it. It was, however, believed by those who were instrumental in creating the commission that if we allowed vacancies to be caused by the death or the retirement of its members there would be such a constant change of its personnel that it would never be able to make a report worthy of the subject and worthy of the Senate. It was therefore provided that the expiration of a term or the retirement of a Member from the House or Senate should not vacate his place. I can hardly think that Senators would contend that if Congress continued the retiring Senators or Representatives in their positions it could reasonably expect them to do their work without some compensation.

I believe, indeed, I am confident, that the commission will be ready to report when the next session of this Congress assembles; but, without laying before the public or the Senate any of the differences of opinion which the consultations of the commission have developed, I feel sure that I will not be able to concur in that report, because I am unalterably opposed to the establishment of a great central national bank. It is, therefore, a certainty that I would be required, if I remained on the commission, to file dissenting views. While I think it entirely probable that I could be ready to file those views on the 4th day of December, I would not take an order, sir, to do it. It might happen that the honorable chairman of the commission would bring his report in and submit it to us the 1st day of December, and under this bill it would then be necessary for me in four days to analyze that report, which the chairman with the aid of experts had been months in preparing. If I permitted it to come into the Senate without a suitable analysis, Senators on this side at least would have some cause to complain.

I am by the vicissitudes of politics and death the only Democrat left on that commission who is also a Member of the Senate, and in view of the determination of the Senate to order this report made at a particular day, and in view of my determination not to take that order, I ask to be relieved from further service on the commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Chair will put the question to the Senate. Those in favor——

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks to be relieved from further service upon the National Monetary Commission.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BAILEY. I hope Senators will not object to my request.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Texas that so far as I am personally concerned I am not at all as satisfied as he appears to be with what the action of the Senate may be upon the pending bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I am.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope the Senator will refrain from this action until the sense of the Senate is taken on the measure.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I have no disposition to criticize the Senate. The Senate has a perfect right to make this order, but I have a perfect right to exempt myself from obedience to it.

It might happen, Mr. President, that the sickness of myself or some member would intervene, and whatever work is done for the Democratic side of the Senate I will be compelled to do it. I have no doubt I will have valuable assistance from those Democrats on the commission who are not Members of the Senate, and I have set aside October and November to do this work. Men before my time have fallen sick and have been unable to do the work assigned to them. I am not willing to come in here the first Monday in December with an unfinished work. I am not willing to come in here and submit a report that I would not be willing to bear my name, and I am not going to do this work under this rule. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will not object.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, Mr. President, it was not in my mind to object for a moment, but I did hope for one at least that we would have the benefit of the Senator's labors, his report and his advice upon this matter, because I consider it a very serious proposition.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a very important one.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is a very important one, and I was hoping the Senator might see his way clear to withhold his request.

Mr. BAILEY. It is altogether too important, Mr. President, for a man to take an order to have it done on a certain day, and I am not willing to do that. I ask the Chair to submit the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Texas withdrawing from the National Monetary Commission? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, it is so ordered.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will that displace the pending bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it will displace the pending bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I very much hope the Senate will not agree to the motion made by the Senator from Utah——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a question of order.

Mr. LODGE. Is this a debatable motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is not a debatable question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assumed that it was a debatable question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. CUMMINS. We are in the consideration of Senate bill 854, and I assumed that a motion to displace the consideration of that business was a debatable matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does displace it, but the Chair thinks it is not a debatable question.

Mr. CUMMINS. However, if the Chair rules that it is not debatable, I very cheerfully submit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah to proceed to the consideration of House bill 12812.

Mr. CUMMINS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with whom I have a general pair, and not knowing how he would vote, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I will withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. Were he here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably absent and is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. GUGGENHEIM's name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when Mr. STONE's name was called). I wish to repeat the announcement I made a moment ago, that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is confined to his room by illness and is absolutely unable to be here.

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent from the city on the service of the Senate. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. WATSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WATSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. LIPPITT (when Mr. WETMORE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WETMORE] is absent from the city in the service of the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote because of my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to announce, first, that my colleague [Mr. NELSON] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], both of whom are absent attending the funeral of the deceased Senator from Maine. I also learn that my pair, if present, would vote "nay," and as I would vote that way I desire to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce that I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE.]

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce again that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] are absent by order of the Senate. This announcement will stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. PERCY] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bailey	Burton	Martin, Va.	Perkins
Bankhead	Chilton	Nixon	Smoot
Brandegee	Lippitt	Oliver	Stephenson
Burnham	Lodge	Page	Swanson

NAYS—24.

Bourne	Cummins	Kern	Reed

Dillingham	McCumber	Smith, Md.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Six Senators, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], having announced that they refrained from voting because of their pairs, making the announcement individually in each case, the number voting, with those six, discloses the presence of a quorum. The nays have it, and the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is lost.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, at the time when my remarks were interrupted I was dwelling upon the subject of the sufficiency of our currency as illustrated by the per capita circulation, and had stated that, with one exception among prominent nations, ours was the largest. The inference to be derived from this would be that no defect in our currency arises from its insufficient quantity. I shall dwell upon that subject more at length.

The circumstances which influence the per capita circulation of a country are, first, its wealth. Presumably a country of large wealth has a considerable quantity of gold and silver, and by reason of the possession of metallic money can, with security, issue a sufficient amount of paper money for all its needs.

In a valuable table prepared by the Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, on December 31, 1909, he gives the per capita circulation of almost all countries. In this list it appears that the United States has a per capita circulation of $35.21, excluding the gold reserve of $150,000,000 and gold currency in the Treasury; that France has a circulation of $37.85 per capita; Germany of $27.14; the Netherlands, a country of notable wealth, a circulation of $30.66; and Switzerland, a circulation of $30.39.

In studying this table it is necessary to discriminate between countries which have a metallic circulation or in which paper money can be redeemed in metal and those which have an irredeemable paper currency. Singularly, the countries which have the largest and the smallest per capita circulation lie side by side. They are Colombia and Venezuela, in South America. Colombia has a per capita circulation of $222.24 and Venezuela of 39 cents, but, strangely, the monetary system of Venezuela is the better of the two, because it consists of gold and silver, while that of Colombia consists almost exclusively—to speak exactly, all except 2 cents per capita—of irredeemable paper currency, which circulates at a great discount.

To illustrate further the rule that presumably countries of large wealth have a considerable per capita circulation, we may contrast China and India with the more advanced countries mentioned. India has a circulation of only 62 cents per capita and China of $1.06 in contrast with the circulation of the United States, which is $35.21, and that of France, which is $37.85 per capita.

The second determining factor in influencing the volume of currency is the extent of a country's trade. The difference can be illustrated, not only by a comparison between countries which have a very small amount of commerce on the one hand, as compared with those having a large commerce on the other, but also by conditions in the same country. If there should be a suburb of one of our large cities, composed almost exclusively of residences, the per capita circulation presumably would be small; but, on the other hand, if there was an active trading community, in which frequent exchange of commodities were made, the circulation would be large.

A third factor in determining the per capita circulation is the rapidity of exchanges. In a country in which there are only occasional transactions in the way of trade or barter, the per capita circulation would naturally be small, while in an active mart the quantity would be large. In a farming community this would be illustrated by a comparatively small circulation, while in an active commercial town the circulation would be larger.

The fourth factor is the degree in which checks and substitutes for money are used. This feature has a very important influence upon the circulation, and tends to diminish the amount of money required, and, of course, the per capita circulation.

Great Britain is the best illustration of a diminished circulation by reason of the use of checks and bills of exchange and substitutes for money. The banking system is more highly developed there than in any other country on the globe. Independent banks, or, more frequently, branch banks are located in almost every village; and in every town of any considerable size they are found on almost every corner. The result is that whatever bills or coin may be in the possession of the people go into banks for deposit, and obligations are paid by checks.

It is necessary to consider another factor, namely, the stability of the banks of England and the almost absolute confidence which the people repose in them. This also stimulates the deposit of money in banks. In our country the increase of checks has been very marked in recent years; but it is still the custom of our people to carry a very large amount of money with them in their pocketbooks—that is, I mean very large as compared with other peoples—this being partly due to the thrifty condition of the average citizen and partly to habit.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

MR. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like, in this connection, to have the views of the Senator from Ohio as to the certificate plan adopted during our last financial trouble. As I recall, about March of 1907, when there was some apprehension of financial difficulty, when certificates were thrown upon the market and the proceeds from those certificates were hoarded, the people having money began to draw it out of the banks and hoard the money, until along about October of 1907, as I remember, there was a pretty general expression of alarm regarding the financial situation. On October 22, I believe it was, after some $8,000,000 of the $68,000,000 on deposit in the Knickerbocker Trust Co. had been been withdrawn, that institution failed. On October 25 the New York Clearing House met and decided that something must be done to relieve the trouble, because other banks began to topple about that time. The Clearing House Association adopted the certificate plan; in other words, they issued certificates which took the place of real money.

On October 26, Chicago, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and other financial centers did the same thing, and it seemed to relieve the panic. I am inclined to think that perhaps the panic was at an end when the common sense of the people of the country decided that these certificates were good; they were satisfied with them; the certificates circulated like money, and the panic was over. After that it was a mere matter of cleaning up the wreckage.

In that connection, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, whether—there being no law for the issuance of those certificates or authorizing those certificates, as I understand, our experience being that that course actually did relieve the country of a panic—it would not be well to consider whether we should not legalize that sort of thing. It being in connection with the subject of circulation, with which the Senator is dealing, I thought I would mention the certificate plan which was adopted at the time to which I refer.

Mr. BURTON. I will say that those certificates performed a very useful function. I would not say, however, that they relieved the public from the panic, but they went far to alleviate the stress on that occasion. I would say further that those certificates afford a very valuable suggestion in any plan of currency which we may adopt. The general idea was that the banks should deposit commercial paper or other securities of unquestioned value with the clearing house or other central association and receive certificates to the amount of, say, two-thirds of the securities or commercial paper deposited. They were then used in settling balances between them and were counted at the clearing house in the same manner as deposits of money. It goes without saying that it would have been impossible to go through that panic without such a device, but at best it was a makeshift.

I wish to call attention in this connection to another device adopted at that time—the drawing of cashier's checks for amounts of $5, $10, and $15. These checks served as a valuable substitute for currency. They were accepted in the stores and shops; they were received without demur by workingmen. All those things go to show, however, the absence of adequate legal provision for a currency scarcity under present conditions.

I am obliged to the Senator from Florida for his suggestion. The objection to all such substitutes, of course, is that they are without legal sanction, that anyone who receives them must do so voluntarily, and that in payment of a debt the creditor could refuse to accept them. I think it may be said in justice to the clearing-house associations that their management in the crisis of 1907 was dictated by intelligence and by a commendable regard for the welfare of the public.

So much, Mr. President, for the general adequacy of our monetary supply. For ordinary uses and ordinary occasions it is clearly large enough.

A second question arises, Is our currency stable, and does it command general confidence? In this regard we have every reason for honest pride, because not only are our gold coins favorites all over the globe, but in all commercial communities as far as Hongkong and Cape Town the greenback, the silver certificate, and the national-bank note are received at their full value. An added advantage belongs to our paper currency in the excellent quality of the engraving and the clearness of the print, which secure it against counterfeiting.

I come now to another feature of our currency, which is not so free from objection, namely, its motley character. No advanced country in the world has such a variegated currency as the United States. First, there are the greenbacks, amounting to $346,000,000, made permanent by legislation in 1878; second, the national-bank notes, which amount to about $726,000,000; third, the silver dollars and the silver certificates, which amount to about $564,000,000; fourth, the gold coin in circulation, nearly one-half of our currency, amounting to $1,700,000,000.

There is neither convenience nor any of the features of a model currency system in so great a variety of moneys. Let us take up first the greenbacks. I share the opinion of those who do not believe in the greenbacks as the best form of currency. The question as to whether it is a proper function of a government to issue paper money has been discussed for many years and in many lands. In practically all the more advanced countries except our own this method has been abandoned. It is still retained by Italy, Spain, Portugal, and some countries in South America, and elsewhere, as well as by the United States. An alleged advantage is that if there is any profit to be derived from the circulation of notes which pay no interest the Government should receive that benefit. Again, the Government being the central institution which controls the destinies of the country, it is alleged that it is proper to lodge in the Federal Treasury the right to issue circulating notes.

The objections, however, are manifold. In the first place, the bill or note, however much we may become attached to it, is, after all, only a form of obligation which circulates for convenience, and which it is expected will at all times be promptly redeemed, and, indeed, in most countries has but a short life. The bill which we have in our pockets is, in its essential nature, the equivalent of a note or obligation from some individual, but for convenience we use it as currency.

There are, in addition, more substantial objections than those arising out of the general nature of the circulating notes. In the first place, no government is sufficiently in touch with trade and commercial conditions to enable it to act wisely. Circulation should be large or small, according to the volume of trade. At a time when business is slack, when men are out of employment, and exchanges are few, the quantity of money outstanding should be very much diminished; but when there are large transactions, great crops to market, and natural demands for money, the quantity should be large. There is no institution which can gauge the requirements of trade so correctly as a banking institution, and hence in England, in France, in Germany, in Switzerland, and even in Turkey—which, notwithstanding its unprogressive condition, has a fairly good monetary system—the issuing of circulating notes is left to the banks; and that, too, not as an original proposition, but as the result of long years of experience and trial, from which it has been concluded that the bank is the best institution to issue bills.

But what of the greenback? The quantity is comparatively small as a portion of our aggregate circulation, amounting to about one-ninth. The people are greatly attached to the greenback. It can be utilized as a nucleus to supply a part of our circulation. While it is not the ideal money, it nevertheless has occupied, and, indeed, now occupies, a large part of the field required for circulating notes. Smaller bills are used for minor transactions. The greenback, however, should not be considered as having those qualities which give the elasticity that is necessary to meet changing business conditions.

I shall take up next the silver dollars. There are about 564,000,000 of these, most of which are represented by certificates. Mr. President, these are much less defensible than the greenbacks, because they rest very largely upon the credit of the Government; they are midway between the gold coin, which has intrinsic value, and the greenback, which rests entirely on the faith of the Government. The $20 gold piece, if it could speak, might say, "Throw me into the crucible; melt me in the fiercest heat, and yet, when I become a shapeless mass, you have not taken away one iota of my value." The silver dollar, however, if put into the crucible and melted down, is worth 42.8 cents, and the remaining amount of 57.2 cents is represented by the motto on the coin, "In God we trust," or, to speak more correctly, that portion of the nominal value of the silver dollar rests upon the faith of the Government.

They circulate not only as coins, but also as silver certificates in denominations of not more than $5, and are used to a very great extent like many of the greenbacks for the smaller transactions of trade. So the silver dollars would become an embarrassment if it were not for the splendid credit of our Government.

We come now to the national-bank notes, $726,000,000 in amount, according to the last statement which I have available. These are issued on Government bonds. One serious defect in the circulation afforded by our national banks is a lack of elasticity. Until within a few years no law allowed the withdrawal of more than a very small percentage of the national-bank-note circulation in any one year. This provision was adopted in accordance with the opinion of those who desired an ample circulation. We could trace that opinion on the statute book from the very beginning of the Civil War—laws which have been passed to meet the demand of the people for an ample monetary supply. In many localities and, in a degree, throughout the whole country the demand has been made that the Federal Government should promote prosperity by making money plenty and by having abundant issues of paper or other forms of money. Of late this law limiting cancellation has been changed, allowing a somewhat larger withdrawal; but it is very easy to see that there is no flexibility in the amount of this national-bank-note circulation.

If a bank desires to issue an additional amount of notes, it must buy bonds bearing 2 per cent. That is not altogether a profitable or desirable transaction, because the time is likely to come when the notes are not desired; but if the notes are withdrawn, then the bank has on its hands a security that pays the very low return of 2 per cent. On the other hand, suppose a bank finds its currency redundant and wishes to dispose of part of it. If it withdraws the money, as in the previous case, the bonds are left upon its hands, with a return of only 2 per cent. Thus we find the lack of elasticity the vital defect in our whole system.

Again, I think there is another objection to the national-bank-note currency based upon a permanent and established principle. That is, that a circulation secured by bonds is not the best under any circumstances. As I said a few minutes ago, bank notes should be issued in response to the demands of trade. If you issue them on national, State, municipal, or any other kinds of bonds, you give to the circulation a rigidity which is not in accordance with the best methods.

Again, if a bank engages in the business of issuing notes, it finds it necessary in order to provide for emergencies to purchase and hold considerable quantities of bonds, even though it may desire to use all its funds for the convenience of the commercial community. In this respect we see very clearly the dividing line between bills issued upon bonds which have no flexibility or elasticity and bills or circulating notes issued upon assets that can be increased or decreased at any season of the year in response to the varying demands of trade.

When the Aldrich-Vreeland bill was before Congress three years ago I opposed that clause of it which allowed the issuance of notes upon bonds.

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NIXON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Clapp	Kern	Reed
Brandegee	Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Shively
Briggs	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Curtis	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Dixon	Nixon	Smoot
Burnham	Fletcher	Overman	Stephenson
Burton	Heyburn	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Williams
Chilton	Jones	Pomerene	Works

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is necessarily absent from the Senate in attendance on a conference committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent from the Chamber this afternoon on public business.

Mr. CHILTON My colleague [Mr. WATSON] is detained from the Senate.

Mr. BURNHAM. My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-six Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent senators, and Mr. LODGE, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. ROOT, Mr. BOURNE, and Mr. BRISTOW answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have responded to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. CRANE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 12, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 11, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, from whom cometh all good, enrich our minds and hearts with heavenly gifts, that we may abhor evil and cleave to that which is good; that we judge not our brother, but do unto him as we would have him do unto us; that we may keep a conscience void of offense toward Thee and our fellow men; that Thy thoughts may be our thoughts and Thy ways our ways; that we go about our Father's business to-day and all days in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11477. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va.;

H. R. 11021. An act to authorize the Levitte Land & Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in Drew County, Ark.; and

H. R. 6098. An act to authorize the Campbell Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River from a point in Dunklin County, Mo., to a point in Clay County, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2495) to define and classify health, accident, and death-benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON GORDON, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased at Memphis, Tenn.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

In compliance with the foregoing, the Vice President appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. BROWN, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. JONES, Mr. WATSON, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. THORNTON.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 14. Joint resolution to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States;

H. R. 7693. An act to authorize the town of Logan, Aitkin County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.;

H. R. 11022. An act to authorize the bridge directors of the Jefferson County bridge district to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff, Ark.;

H. R. 12051. An act for the relief of the city of Crawford, in the State of Nebraska;

H. R. 6098. An act to authorize the Campbell Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River, from a point in Dunklin County, Mo., to a point in Clay County, Ark.; and

H. R. 11021. An act to authorize the Levittee Land & Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in Drew County, Ark.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Commitee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 11022. An act to authorize the bridge directors of the Jefferson County bridge district to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff, Ark.;

H. R. 12051. An act for the relief of the city of Crawford, in the State of Nebraska;

H. R. 7693. An act to authorize the town of Logan, Aitkin County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Minn.; and

H. J. Res. 14. A joint resolution to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order, and if the House will indulge me just a moment I desire to first ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman wants to object, all right.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires to ask unanimous consent to address the House, he ought to make the request.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I was proceeding to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the membership of the House that the Committee on Rules has had under consideration a resolution to bring in a special rule to take up certain local emergency measures. Later on, if we find they have not been disposed of under the regular order, it is then the desire of the committee to try to take care of those local emergency bills. Pending that, we have thought it better to demand the regular order and go ahead with the call of the committees.

That is all I desire now to say to the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not exactly understand the meaning of the announcement made by the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Rules; but if I gathered the import of his meaning, it was that if the Members of the House who have bills on the calendar desire to have them considered they should proceed, hat in hand, to the gentleman from Texas and bow before him and ask him whether the bills could be considered by a special rule of the House. The gentleman announced that if the bills were not considered in the regular order, he proposed to let the House have a chance to consider those bills.

What the bills are I do not know. I suppose a Member of the House can ascertain, when he approaches the distinguished gentleman from Texas, hat in hand—according to the old expression about the Speaker—and asks permission that his bill may be considered as an emergency matter, and the gentleman from Texas will inform the Member whether or not his bill can be taken up and passed.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for one minute. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to relieve the anxiety and agony of the gentleman from Illinois, and to say that no Member has to approach the chairman of the Committee on Rules as he describes it in order to get up his bill; that the Committee on Rules will simply carry out the voice of the Democratic caucus and act as the agent of the Democratic Party [applause on the Democratic side], and at their behest bring in a rule for the consideration of the local emergency measures of the Democrats, and the worthy Republicans as well. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, after that announcement there will be no hurried legislation; and I can assure the chairman of the Committee on Rules that if emergency and Democratic matters are taken up without consulting us, he can go ahead and try it.

DOCUMENTS FROM FRENCH CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, accompanied by a letter from the President of the French Chamber of Deputies. It seems to the Chair to be a matter that ought to be laid before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 10, 1911.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a letter addressed by the President of the French Chamber of Deputies to the President of the Chamber of the House of Representatives, and intended for you, inclosing a list of documents presented to the House by the President of the Chamber of Deputies of the French Republic, which, he says, have been shipped in a box. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant, P. C. KNOX.

The SPEAKER. Inasmuch as neither the Speaker nor any of the clerks can read French intelligently, the Chair will ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ESTOPINAL] to read the letter of the French Chamber of Deputies. [Applause.]

Mr. ESTOPINAL read the letter, as follows:

EUGÈNE LIEUX.
Le Secrétaire Général de la Présidence.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what does this letter mean?

The SPEAKER. It means that they have sent us a box of books. [Applause.] These letters and the accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the letters will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will not the Private Calendar be the regular order to-day?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota is correct.

ELIZA CHOTEAU ROSCAMP.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have the first bill on that calendar, and I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of private bills. There are only two bills on this calendar. I am sure there will be no objection to the first one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 11303) for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. It is a short bill, for the relief of an Indian woman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported. We do not know what it is.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has reserved the right to object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit an explanation of the bill? I can explain it in a very short time, and I feel he will not object, because it is a matter of great importance to an Indian woman, and is an emergency matter.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a right to move to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I think after the announcement of the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] we had better consider it under the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not only have an opportunity to explain the bill, but he will have to explain it, if we go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I move that we go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. FLOOD of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11303) for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to approve an order for the removal of restrictions upon alienation from the NE. ¼ SE. ¼ sec. 10, T. 25 N., R. 24 E., of the Indian meridian, Oklahoma, the homestead allotment of Eliza Choteau Roscamp, Seneca allotment No. 184, such removal of restrictions to become effective only and simultaneously with the execution of a deed by said allottee to the purchaser, after said land has been sold in compliance with the directions of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this bill is not now in order. Paragraph 6 of Rule XXIV provides that on the second and fourth Fridays of each month preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension bills. Now, this is the second Friday of the month, and hence preference must be given to the consideration of private pension bills, and I assume, as a matter of course, that a Democratic Congress which has been in session for months will not be caught without any private pension bill on the calendar. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rule, I understand the gentleman insists that this bill is not in order because private pension bills have the preference. Will the gentleman indicate a private pension bill on the calendar which is entitled to preference?

Mr. MANN. I wish I could; and if this side of the House were in the majority there would be a number of them on the calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. As there are no private pension bills on the calendar, the Chair holds that this bill is in order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to his colleague?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I would like to know of the gentleman from Illinois if he has any bills on the private-pension calendar?

Mr. MANN. Neither I nor my colleague has any on the calendar. Although the Committee on Invalid Pensions has been organized for months, it has not reported a single bill for any old soldier in the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report, which is a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas), as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred H. R. 11303, having had the same under consideration, recommend that the bill pass. The facts are fully set forth in a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 13, 1911.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: By direction of the President I have the honor to submit a draft of proposed legislation relating to the removal of restrictions and sale of the allotment of Eliza Choteau Roscamp.

The proposed legislation is for the relief of Mrs. Eliza Choteau Roscamp, a one-fourth Seneca allottee, roll No. 184. This woman was allotted 80 acres of land with the Seneca Tribe of Indians, and on August 17, 1909, the restrictions were removed from 40 acres of her allotment, which was sold by the department and the proceeds turned over to the allottee for her benefit, and she has remaining 40 acres.

The act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 751), provides in section 1 as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon application of any adult member of either of the tribes of the Indians belonging to the Quapaw Indian Agency in the State of Oklahoma, to remove the restrictions on any part of or all the lands allotted to such applicant, and permit a sale under such terms and conditions as he may deem for the best interest of applicant, excepting a tract of not less than 40 acres, which shall be designated and held as a homestead: Provided, That this section does not apply to the Modocs."

It is the opinion of the department that in sales under this act it is necessary for the allottee to retain 40 acres as a homestead.

In view of this opinion there is no existing law that will permit of a sale of the remaining 40 acres, the homestead of Mrs. Roscamp.

The allottee is a young woman, about 37 years of age, was a student of Valparaiso (Ind.) Normal School, is a graduate of Carlisle (Pa.) Indian School, and of Bryant & Stratton's Business College, of Chicago. She is a well-educated and accomplished woman and prudent in managing her own affairs, but she has been confined to a sanitarium in San Francisco, Cal., for many months, and is now dangerously ill with dropsy, and is not likely to live very long.

She is in destitute circumstances and a charity patient, while she has 40 acres of land in Oklahoma worth, probably, $500 or $600, designated a homestead, upon which she will probably never reside, and which, under existing law, can not be converted into money for her relief. The department believes that this is a very meritorious case and should be given early and favorable consideration.

I have the honor to recommend that Congress be urged to enact the inclosed bill into law.

Respectfully, SAMUEL ADAMS, Acting Secretary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this bill was drafted in the Indian Department. This Indian woman is 37 years old and owned 80 acres of land in the Seneca Nation. She was entitled under the laws enacted by Congress to sell 40 acres, 40 acres being her homestead. She is a graduate of the Carlisle Indian School, and also of the State Normal School of Indiana. Returning to Oklahoma she taught school for four years, when she became sick and was recommended by her physician to go to California. She remained there for some time and sold 40 acres of the land to get there. When she spent this money she had to be sent to a hospital as a charity patient. She is now in the hospital at San Francisco, and according to the doctor's statement she can live but a short time. She has these 40 acres of land, her homestead, worth probably $800. She is now a charity patient in the hospital, as I have stated, and will live only a few months, and unless this bill is passed she will die and fill a pauper's grave. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of this bill. My attention has been called to this case through the Indian Department, and the bill was drafted there. If there was ever a case of charity and an urgent need of action and relief it is this case. I hope no gentleman will object to it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the report of this bill. The gentleman from Texas makes out a strong case appealing to the House. But there is one thing I do object to, and I think it is well grounded. It was well understood that there was to be a certain program of legislation to be carried out by the majority of this Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for a speech.

Mr. SIMS. I took the floor in my own right.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But I had not yielded the floor.

Mr. SIMS. Then I will wait until the gentleman does yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I want to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. As I see the gentleman from Oklahoma is not present, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I want to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Very well.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no complaint to make against this bill on its merits, but the complaint I do have to make is that some committees are reporting bills here while others are living up to the program that was adopted.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I think the gentleman from Texas ought to be able to answer that question. And the Speaker ought to be able to answer it.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will wait until I get through there may be more than one to answer. I am on the floor in my own right.

Now, if committees of this House are going to report bills that are not embraced within that program, or that were not so understood to be embraced within it——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing what is before the House. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I made a point of order that the gentleman was not discussing the matter before the House. I now make the parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not it is in order to discuss anything except the bill which is now before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas is well taken.

Mr. SIMS. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss that point of order before the Chair rules upon it. I certainly thought the Chair would give me an opportunity to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee did not indicate that he cared to discuss the point of order.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Texas had taken the floor on a point of order, and before he got off the floor the Chair ruled upon the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. It is in the Committee of the Whole to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS. Then, I suppose, as a matter of course, that the point of order is well taken as to the discussion of other matters than those which are pertinent to the matter or the bill pending, and I bow to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL], who was better informed as to the kind of a bill that was before the House than I was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want now to discuss the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may discuss the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I am going to try to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply sustained the point of order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee to discuss the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to this bill. From what I have heard I think it is a very meritorious bill, but I want to know if other meritorious bills that are not within the program of legislation can also be reported?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is out of order. The gentleman is not speaking to the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], in charge of the bill, that it is an emergency bill, which ought to be passed now. I question whether it is an emergency bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did the gentleman listen to the reading of the report?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I listened to the reading of the report as other gentlemen do. No one can tell from what the reading clerk is reading, but I have read the report. I do not rely upon the reading of the reading clerk of the report. That is a waste of time. The gentleman knows that no one listens to any report from any reading clerk, or ever did. I have read the bill and I have read the report. I question whether this is an emergency matter. Who determines whether it is an emergency matter? I am told on the floor of the House by the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] that it is a Democratic caucus that determines whether a bill is to be passed by the House or not as an emergency matter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, both Republicans, determined this matter and referred it to me, and I acted very promptly upon it, and now put it up to you to let it go through this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, there have been a very great many letters from the Secretary of the Interior, and there have been a great many communications about various other matters from various other departments. There are many old soldiers in the country to-day ready to die to-morrow and the next day in poverty, to be buried in paupers' graves, because we do not provide special pension bills for them, which should have the right of way to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman thinks it is not an emergency matter to take care of one of the old soldiers, but he thinks it is an emergency matter to provide for an Indian. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Now, I have read the report proposing to have the little remnant of property belonging to an Indian woman sold so that some one can get hold of it before she dies and take it away from her. [Applause on the Republican side.] If she lives a few months, she will then be a pauper with nothing to sustain her.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen are so greedy to take away her property that they want it where they can get hold of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas and Mr. HEFLIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; if so, to whom?

Mr. MANN. To either one of the gentlemen.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman was a Member of the House when the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed at the extra session——

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] will not make the point that the gentleman is not asking a question in regard to the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did the gentleman or anyone on that side suggest any pension legislation during that extra session, when the Republicans were in power in this House? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The fact is there has never been any legislation on pensions at an extra session.

Mr. MANN. It is a very good guide always for the Democrats to follow the Republicans. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is a wonder they do not do it more often. Two years ago, when we were endeavoring to revise the entire tariff from one end to the other, and not merely a few petty schedules and bills, we concluded it was not best to appoint the committees of the House, and they were not appointed, and hence there could be no special legislation; but these committees in this House are appointed, out of the greed of Members to have the patronage attached to these committees at the beginning of the session, and they have been sitting around the House ever since they were appointed, doing nothing when men were dying for want of pensions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MANN. Always.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did the Republicans fail to appoint those committees during that extra session for the purpose of dodging pension legislation? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. We did not. We do not dodge pension legislation. We have tried all this Congress to force you to vote on a discharge of committees Monday upon pension legislation, and you were too cowardly to do it. Now, my friend from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, a moment ago, in discussing what were emergency matters, said that it was decided by the Democratic caucus; but merely in order to get the information for our side of the House to which we think we are entitled we would like to know on our side of the House how we can ascertain which bills are emergency bills. If we have to appear at the door of a Democratic caucus on our knees or come crawling before the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Rules——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I answer the gentleman? If the gentleman will be diligent enough to notify the senior Republican member of the Committee on Rules [Mr. DALZELL] about the local emergency measures that the Republicans have on the calendars they will receive the same consideration that the bills of the Democrats do.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois has continued to repeat a declaration which I have not heard made here by any Democrat, and I would like him to give the authority for the statement that the Democratic caucus passes on what are emergency measures. I suggest to the gentleman in this connection——

Mr. MANN. Let me answer that first. The authority is the colleague of the gentleman who is now addressing me. Mr. HENRY, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, who made the statement since this House met this morning.

Mr. GARNER. I do not so understand it. I understood the gentleman to say the Democratic caucus had authorized the consideration of emergency measures and the Democratic caucus authorized only such measures as a Republican and Democratic committee should consider as emergency measures, but giving to your side of the House the same consideration it did this. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Now, let us get at the facts. I stated a while ago, after the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] that he proposed, if necessary, to report a rule fixing consideration of certain emergency measures; that under the new practice it is necessary to go before the gentleman from Texas to ascertain whether a bill could be considered and not to the Speaker, and the gentleman from Texas replied that it was the Democratic caucus which had determined which bills were emergency matters, and it did not leave it to him. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] who has just interrupted me, claim now that it is the Committee on Rules which determines what are emergency matters?

Mr. GARNER. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. Who does determine?

Mr. GARNER. The respective committees of the House. Whenever they report a bill and it is placed on the calendar they say by their action that it is an emergency matter.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all of this is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will not make that point of order. There will be plenty of time to thrash this out before the day is over. We might as well bring it out now as at any other time. If the gentleman prefers to take up the time of the House when we get on the Union Calendar, very well; but we are determined to find out whom we are to crawl to in order to find whether our bills can be taken up as emergency bills.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I can not yield. I have been taken off the floor by an arbitrary ruling, which is not in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Since that is the first time I have seen the gentleman taken off the floor, I will heartily concur.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair congratulates himself in being able to take the gentleman from Illinois off the floor.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will pass. While I am in entire harmony with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regretting that there is not certain pension legislation before us for which we may be permitted to vote, I will not let that fact prevent me from voting for what seems to me a very meritorious bill. It is said that the woman mentioned in this bill is a good woman, and the report says she is an accomplished woman; I readily believe both statements, because she is a graduate of the Carlisle Indian School.

Mr. BUTLER. Where is the Carlisle Indian School?

Mr. OLMSTED. It is in my district. She is, unfortunately, lying almost at the point of death. She has 40 acres of land which she can not rent and, under the law, she can not sell it. She is what you might call "land poor," and she is likely to die for want of support. Now, the new Acting Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Adams, a very conscientious and careful man, who would not recommend anything he did not know to be right, recommends earnestly the passage of this bill so that this poor woman may sell this property in order that the proceeds may tend to prolong her life and make her as comfortable as possible while she does live. I hope the bill will pass. I am glad the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] brought it in here. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I presume it is in order to report the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11303) for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reports that the committee has had under consideration the bill H. R. 11303, and had ordered him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and, having been read a third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following personal request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia requests leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL] a question, if he happens to be here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] makes the request.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. Reserving the right to object, I would like to make this observation; it is a matter of interest to the Members of the House: It looks as though we would have one or more veto messages from the President on bills originating in the House. A very common practice, as everyone knows, is for gentlemen going away to make pairs. Pairs on even terms on a veto measure mean two to one, and not one to one. We are giving notice on this side of the House that we will make no pairs, and will ask all pairs to be canceled that are made on the basis of one to one, so far as veto messages are concerned. While I do not object to this request in itself, if the gentleman is paired with some Republican, and only one Democrat to a Republican, I shall ask to have the pair canceled at the proper time and the gentleman recalled, if they desire to recall him from that side of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. What does the gentleman from Illinois think about the advisability of canceling all pairs and ceasing the policy of carrying pairs in the RECORD?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is practicable to do that.

Mr. GARNER. It could be done by a rule, could it not?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly. We could keep out pairs from the RECORD.

Mr. GARNER. I am asking the gentleman what his opinion is on a change of policy so as to cut the pairs out of the RECORD?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I thought it was fair to this side of the House to make this statement in reference to the matter, because we do not desire to lose out on a veto proposition by losing on pairs.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. Do I understand the leader of the minority to say that he is going to advise the minority Members to break pairs already made for the rest of the session?

Mr. MANN. To cancel pairs so far as veto messages are concerned. We could not, of course, counsel the breaking of pairs without notice.

Mr. FERRIS. Those pairs are identical.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. FERRIS. What does the gentleman think about the propriety of permitting a Democrat and a Republican to make a pair for the balance of the session and then allowing the Republican Member to break it?

Mr. MANN. I think, for the rest of the session, if you will not do the fair thing, we will cancel the pairs.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think that the notice that he is now serving on the House ought to be applied to those pairs behind him as well as those ahead of him?

Mr. MANN. We will serve notice in a proper way, both in the case of pairs made by the Democratic whip of the House and in the case of every pair in the same way.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's remarks fall far short of what he ought to do when he advises the breaking of pairs already made.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman on that side of the House goes far short of the standard in fairness when in a matter coming up requiring two votes in the affirmative to one in the negative he insists on furnishing only one affirmative pair as against one negative pair. No fair-minded man would ask that such a thing be done.

Mr. FERRIS. The statement which the gentleman from Illinois makes applies to the future, instead of the past, in the mind of every fair-minded man.

Mr. MANN. It applies also to the past, and we serve notice that two and one will be required, so far as veto messages are concerned.

Mr. BURLESON. So far as the extra Democrat is concerned, but you will not require the extra Democrat to be in the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the House has nothing to do with this pair business. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia for a leave of absence?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for leave of absence?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENSLEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for 10 days, on account of sickness in his family.

The SPEAKER. There being no other business on the Private Calendar, the Clerk will proceed to call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY TENTS FOR ASTORIA CENTENNIAL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution 31, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Astoria Centennial, to be held at Astoria, Oreg., August 10 to September 9, 1911.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee of the Astoria Centennial, to be held at Astoria, Oreg., August 10 to September 9, 1911, 100 wall tents and 100 conical tents, with poles, ridges, and pins for each: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property; the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the holding of said centennial as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and B. F. Crawshaw, general secretary of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said B. F. Crawshaw a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BOARD OF MANAGERS, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House joint resolution 146, for appointment of a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Gen. P. H. Barry, of Nebraska, be, and he is hereby, appointed as a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States, to succeed Capt. Henry E. Palmer, deceased, whose term of office would expire April 21, 1916.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The Clerk, proceeding with the call of committees, called the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO CERTAIN HOMESTEADERS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Public Lands Committee, I call up the bill (S. 3052) granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill should be on the Union Calendar instead of the House Calendar; and I make the further point of order that the bill is not before the House, because it has not been reprinted, as provided for by the rules.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman from Illinois wants to argue his points of order, the Chair is ready to rule on one of them at least.

Mr. MANN. I want to call attention to the second one. I am informed that there was a second print of this bill. That may be so. It was not in the Clerk's hands, however, because he did not report the amendments. It may be that whoever had charge of this matter did not understand that it was necessary, in presenting a report, to present one in such form that the reprinted bill and the report would show the amendments. The first print, the only one that I know anything about, did not show the amendments, and the Clerk evidently had the same print of the bill in his hands.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield, it is true that the clerks at the desk, or whoever had charge of the matter, did reprint the bill exactly as it came from the Senate originally; but as soon as we learned that we had it reprinted with the amendments.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will suspend, I will say that the Clerk read the wrong bill.

Mr. MANN. I wished to call attention to the fact that somebody had made a mistake.

The SPEAKER. The point of order of the gentleman from Illinois was well taken if the facts had been in conformance with it. The Chair will overrule the other point of order, that it was not properly on the House Calendar. Now the Clerk will report the bill and amendments.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3052) to grant leave of absence to certain homesteaders.

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have heretofore made homestead entries in the Lemmon, Timber Lake, Rapid City, Chamberlain, Belle Fourche, Gregory, and Pierre land districts, in the State of South Dakota; in the Valentine, O'Neill, and Alliance land districts, in the State of Nebraska; in the Dickinson, Minot, Williston land districts, in the State of North Dakota; and in the Cheyenne, Evanston, Sundance, and Douglas land districts, in the State of Wyoming; in the former Spokane Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, are hereby relieved from the necessity of residence upon their lands from the date of approval of this act to April 15, 1912: Provided, That the time of actual absence during the period named shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law.

The following committee amendments were read:

Amend by striking out, after the word "Dakota," page 1, line 6, all of the remainder of lines 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 and the syllable "dence" in line 1, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "In the Denver, Pueblo, Sterling, Hugo, Lamar, and Glenwood Springs land districts, in the State of Colorado; in the Valentine, O'Neill, Broken Bow, and Alliance land districts, in the State of Nebraska; in the Lawton, Woodward, and Guthrie land districts, in the State of Oklahoma; in the Dickinson, Minot, Williston, and Bismarck land districts, in the State of North Dakota; in the Cheyenne, Evanston, Sundance, Buffalo, and Douglas land districts, in the State of Wyoming; in the Clayton, Fort Sumner, Las Cruces, Tucumcari, Roswell, and Santa Fe land districts, in the Territory of New Mexico; in the Phoenix land district, in the Territory of Arizona; in the former Spokane Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington; and in the Burns, Vale, La Grand, and The Dalles land districts, in the State of Oregon, are hereby relieved from the necessity of residence and cultivation."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the bill itself and the report which I have prepared from the Public Lands Committee are amply sufficient to explain the purpose of the bill. There has been a very severe drought throughout a large portion of the Middle West during this season, and it is a matter of common humanity and an absolute necessity that the homestead settlers in some localities should be relieved from the requirements of the law as to residence and cultivation.

This is not a general bill applying to all the States, but only to certain districts in some of the Northern and Western States. It is a Senate bill, and practically all of the Senators and Representatives from those eight States and the two Territories have urgently requested the speedy passage of this bill to relieve many deserving people of those districts; and it is necessary that it should be acted upon at this special session. The showing before the Public Lands Committee disclosed a condition that demands immediate action, and therefore the committee determined to report the bill at once as an emergency measure.

Mr. MANN. I think upon reading the bill and the report there is some ambiguity about the matter. Just what does it do and whom does it affect?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Primarily it is intended to relieve the homestead filers—that is, entrymen who have made filings, but have not yet made the actual settlement upon their claims. The reason I say it is primarily for the relief of those is because there is now a law allowing homestead settlers that have actually established a residence to obtain a leave of absence from their claims for a year on account of the failure of crops; but the existing law compels the homestead settler to go and employ an attorney and make certain showings by affidavits and corroborated petitions and make the application to the local land office, and the land-office officials send it to Washington for approval and report, and so forth. These settlers can not wait until that process is gone through with, and they have no money to pay lawyers or land agents. This bill, if it passes, will allow them to immediately pack their wagons and go off and remain away until the 15th of next April without making any application, giving any notice or account to anyone.

Mr. MANN. Why should that be done?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Because the drought has been so severe in some places that the settlers are compelled to leave their claims to exist; if they do not some of them will starve to death.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that this whole country and through the Northwest is starving to death?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I only refer to certain localities, and to some of the worthy but poor people who are trying to get a home, but this year has been so exceptionally dry their crops have all burned up, and it is a human impossibility for them to live on their claims during the remainder of this year and next winter.

Mr. MANN. Here is a long list embracing almost the whole of the Northwest.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado and others rose.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I do not surrender the floor, but I will yield a moment to the gentleman from Wyoming, because this is one of the Wyoming Senators' bills. It is not a Democratic caucus measure, as some gentleman insinuates. It comes from a Republican Senator, and I may add, in reply to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a few moments ago, that all of the three bills reported by the Public Lands Committee that are now on the calendar are Republican bills. One of these Senate bills is a copy of one of my bills that I introduced in the House a week before it was introduced in the Senate, yet the committee, at my request, laid my bill aside and reported the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. I did not ask the gentleman that; it would be far better if the gentleman would furnish information that is asked for instead of giving information on something else. Why should we let off the homestead filers from going on the land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We are not relieving them of any of the five years' residence required by law, but the season is so dry and the land has become so barren that they have not and can not raise anything, and they simply must be allowed to leave. Many of them have already left, and we want to protect them from possible contests and loss of their claims. It is looked upon by the Department of the Interior as necessary to let them go away and make a living and return by the 15th of next April and try it another year. The Government does not lose anything and the homesteader does not gain any rights by this leave of absence. But the law does not contemplate, and the regulations should not require, that these settlers should do an utter impossibility.

Mr. MANN. Then, if I am correct in my understanding, it is because the crops have failed and the people have been unable to cultivate the soil to a profit, and no one now could go on the soil at these places and cultivate it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is absolutely true.

Mr. MANN. I think that has been true in these localities in the West for many years, and will be true much of the time for many years to come.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; there are many years that they can raise crops The entire North and West are developing very rapidly, but once in a while there are portions of that country that have an exceptionally dry season like this. I should, in justice to my State, say that Colorado is not as severely affected as some other, and I have only included a portion of our State by an amendment to this bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from a brief visit home, during which time I viewed over a very considerable territory of the West, the exceedingly unfortunate, the unprecedented drought conditions there existing. Over a number of the public-land States, particularly the States lying on the east slope of the Rockies, a condition of very unusual drought has existed for the last 18 months, and in much of that territory the settlers have not only not grown any considerable crops, but comparatively little grass has grown. In the portion of Wyoming in which I live there are large areas upon which, up to three weeks ago, there had been but little growth of grass this year. In some places wheat sown in the spring remained in the soil ungerminated. That condition, in varying degree, extends over, as I have said, a number of the States on the eastern slope of the Rockies. It is particularly severe in the land districts or in the major portion of the land districts referred to in this bill.

The fact is that under a general law which has been on the statute books for many years, and which is wise, settlers who have been unable to grow crops can, by application on affidavit, secure a leave of absence from their homesteads, but that requires, in the first instance, the making of an affidavit which entails some expense, and, then, the settler is required to remain upon his homestead until, through the slow unreeling of governmental red tape, the local land office shall have transmitted his application to the General Land Office, and the General Land Office shall have, in the course of time, passed upon his application, and the period for which he desires to be relieved may have largely passed before he is finally informed that he may leave his land. It is specifically provided in the rules that he must not leave his land after making an application until he has received notice that he may do so by permission of the land office.

That being the case, most of the settlers who desire to leave their lands could, through the slow process of governmental procedure and at a considerable expense, secure a leave of absence. That would not, however, apply to those who have made homestead entry, but who have not established residence upon their land. This bill, then, simply does this: It allows the leave of absence, which could be secured by the individual through an application, and it allows it without the necessity of a formal application. Further, it allows that same leave of absence to the man who has not yet established his residence within the statutory period; he would be barred under the general law. The settler is not relieved by this bill from any obligation placed upon him by the law under which he made entry. His entry is simply suspended, as it were, during the period of his absence, and after he returns he must do all those things in cultivation and in residence which are required of him under the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. And the period of his absence is taken from and not credited to him in the matter of residence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this drought extend up into Oregon and Washington?

Mr. MONDELL. The committee was reliably informed that some parts of eastern Washington and Oregon, where the rainfall is ordinarily limited, were suffering from drought this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the nature of that information?

Mr. MONDELL. The region affected is in the eastern part of the States—the dry and arid parts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it information from the department as to the conditions up there?

Mr. MONDELL. No; we had information from Members of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not usual in enacting legislation of this character to obtain official reports as to the conditions?

Mr. MONDELL. As to most of the territory, official reports have been received.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the rest of the territory is tacked on as a condition to get relief for the sections upon which reports have been made.

Mr. MONDELL. As to the great majority of the land districts named in the bill, the registers and receivers have notified the department of the unfortunate condition and recommended this class of legislation. In the case of a few districts it is possible the committee did not have that information, but I want to say to the gentleman that the leave of absence granted is in no wise a relief to the settler from any of the requirements of the statute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, I understand it does this: It permits the entryman, before he goes on the land at all, to have leave of absence and——

Mr. MONDELL. So far as that is concerned, it does grant a right which is not granted under the general law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And should not be granted except under very extraordinary conditions.

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman as to that, and I think comparatively few cases are affected by it; but I will say to my friend from New York, from my knowledge of conditions there, they are appalling. No man could be expected to move on the land and attempt to do anything this fall.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A State that is covered with alkali is entirely different from Washington and Oregon, where they have, I understand, a heavy rainfall, and men will be tempted to take advantage of legislation of this character to make entries and speculate in them.

Mr. MONDELL. There are many regions of the very best character of soil in the West——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARDWICK). The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. MONDELL. There are regions where the drought conditions are such that it is utterly impossible to plow. While I was home I saw localities where attempts had been made to run power plows ordinarily carrying eight plows each. Half of the plows had been taken from the gangs and yet it was impossible to secure power enough from these heavy machines to pull half the ordinary number of plows through the hard soil. It is a condition that is widespread. While we have had droughts in that country before, we have never had anything equal to the present conditions.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt there is great suffering in these districts. Now, the question in my mind is whether they have included all of them in this bill. Have you included some and not included others, because they are unfortunate enough not to be——

Mr. MONDELL. Members of Congress from the districts have appeared before the committee, and the department was called upon for information, and the committee have included in the bill the districts which have been most unfortunately affected, and in this connection I want to pay a tribute to the courage of the men who are confronted with these conditions in the West. [Applause.] I talked with men who have not raised a crop for two years and have no hope of employment in the locality in which they live, have absolutely nothing to live on, yet they are courageous, hopeful, and determined, and this legislation will give these men an opportunity to go away from their lands to secure employment and to return in the spring to continue in the conquest of that semiarid region. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to further answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that the Committee on Public Lands have taken this matter up through the representatives of all these land districts throughout that country, and we have included all the districts in all the States that have made any request for this relief. We are not shutting out any locality that wants this act, and we believe we have fairly covered all the districts that ought to be included in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. These conditions, I believe, are unusual?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. In some localities this is the dryest season that has been known in 20 years.

Mr. BUTLER. Are the rains expected to come at certain periods of the year; are there periodical rains in that country, or do they come at any season of the year?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, we expect to have some rains in the spring of the year and occasionally during the summer; but in some parts of the Northwest they had no snow last winter and have not had a rain this year. The streams and wells have dried up.

Mr. BUTLER. It only suggests itself to me that in fixing a definite period—April 15—you may have fixed it too early to relieve the condition of these people. They may not be able to get back by April 15, inasmuch as conditions may not be favorable.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is the time they hope to come back to do their spring work, and I understand they are satisfied with that date.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to utter one or two words in reference to this measure. The drought in the West this year has been severe. I am only one of a number of others who can testify to that fact. I do not desire unnecessarily to inflame the minds of the people about this, but I wish to say that the land there is very, very dry.

This act does not cost the Government a cent. It does not give the homesteader any advantage he is not richly entitled to. It allows him to get away from his homestead and to work with his hands to get enough to go back in April and make a crop for another year.

I want to call attention especially to a few of the fellows in question in my State. The homesteaders in my State are not homesteaders in reality. They were compelled to buy Indian lands at the highest bid and at the same time homestead them. They bought on the average at $10.50 and $12.50 an acre and had to homestead the land as well. Congress has helped them with some extensions, and it has been necessary to do so. If you let them go off the land this winter, they can get back when the spring opens, and plow and sow and reap when conditions are favorable next year. I do not see any harm that can come from any source, and it may do a great deal of good to a great number of people.

Mr. DYER. I want to know if these conditions prevail in the Lawton, Woodward, and Guthrie land districts as they do in Colorado?

Mr. FERRIS. Perhaps not as much, but they are severe there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HANNA].

Mr. HANNA. Mr. Speaker, we have before us for consideration a bill granting leave of absence to settlers in certain land districts until April 15, 1912. This bill is a meritorious measure and should pass. Included in this bill are certain land districts in the State which I have the honor to represent—Bismarck, Dickinson, Minot, and Williston land districts—and at the proper time I intend to offer an amendment to the bill to include also the Devils Lake land district.

Under the provisions of this bill, should it become a law, it provides that the time of actual absence of the settler from his land shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law. This means that any settler taking advantage of this act will be required to make up any time that he might be absent by reason of having availed himself of the opportunity offered under this proposed bill. This bill provides that it shall apply to all persons who have heretofore made homestead entries. This means that people who have already made their homestead entries and are living upon their lands are entitled to the benefits of this proposed law. It also applies to those people who have initiated or have filed upon land and who under the law have six months from time of filing in which to establish their residence. They are given additional time to establish their residence until April 15, 1912.

I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that this year in certain western sections of my State we have had exceedingly dry and exceedingly hot weather. This has damaged the crops, and in some cases the crops will be a total failure. This necessitates the settler who is living upon his land, or the settler who has filed, but who has not yet established his residence, going out and endeavoring to obtain work where the crops and conditions are better than in his own locality. The soil in the western part of North Dakota is excellent—a deep black loam, generally underlaid with clay and very fertile. With a normal rainfall, which the settler has the right and good reason to expect year in and year out, it will produce the very best of crops. Unfortunately this past year has been, as stated before, hot and dry, but all that is needed is to give these new people an opportunity to leave their land for a while without danger of contest. Give them a chance to go and earn a little money to help themselves and their families, and they will be back in the spring, ready for the new year and the new crop. Many of the settlers have put valuable improvements on their lands, have broken up and put under the plow a large part of their homesteads, have built houses, barns, granaries, dug wells, put out trees, and made many other improvements, which have run into large amounts of money.

Now, if they leave the land for the purpose of obtaining work, they stand the chance of having their claims contested in their absence. These people have no money, owing to the failure of crops, with which to fight contests, and I regret to say that in the western part of our country, where the larger part of the public domain lies, certain men make a business of contesting the honest settler. I have in mind one instance that came to my knowledge of where one man had instituted 31 contests. Twenty-nine of them were withdrawn, and the supposition is, of course, that he made some proposition or arrangement with the poor settler to withdraw the contest for a less amount than it would have cost the homesteader to have hired an attorney to defend him.

We want to keep the people in my State who have settled upon their lands. They are pioneers; have opened up a wonderfully rich, fertile country, and all they need is the chance and the opportunity, and this proposed bill will be a great measure of relief to them.

From personal experience I can say that in the eastern section of my State, in which I settled some 30 years ago, at one time years ago very much the same conditions prevailed as those which now prevail in the western section. We had a succession of dry years and many of the people left the country, but those who had the courage to stay, to go through the hard years with their discouragements, are the ones to-day who are the prosperous, well-to-do farmers in the eastern sections of North Dakota, and I believe the same will prove true as to the new settlers in the western part of my State; that while the dry, bad years make it exceedingly difficult to go on and to face the trials and the hard experiences that go with the conditions that are now prevalent there, yet I believe, as happened in the old days in the eastern part of North Dakota, that the men—and the women, too, for that matter—who have the courage to face the situation and to meet it, to stick to it and stay by the country, will come out all right in the end.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will be of untold benefit to the new settlers in a vast area of country. The bill is right and fair. It does no injustice in any way whatever to the Government. It should become a law, and I hope and believe that it will have the unanimous support of every Member of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON].

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the district in Washington that has been taken in in this bill is north of Spokane and north of the Spokane River, a part of the State that is arid. I think the United States is fortunate to have men to go onto that land and try to make a home. As I understand from the Senator of the State, who lives in that country, it applies very largely to men who have filed applications for homesteads, but have not had the opportunity to go on the land. It has been so dry there that if the men did go onto the land they would not get even enough water to drink, let alone to farm with.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in behalf of this bill. Under its provisions the settlers in three Oklahoma land districts—Guthrie, Lawton, and Woodward districts—are granted leaves of absence from their claims from the date of the passage of the bill until April, 1912. All of the Woodward district and a part of the Guthrie land district are within my congressional district. When this bill was before the Committee on the Public Lands I asked that it be amended so as to include the Guthrie and Woodward land districts. While I have not been home during this session of Congress, I know from reliable information which I have received that the country there has suffered very severely from the drought which has extended generally throughout the western country. As the Government can lose nothing by the passage of this bill, I can see no possible reasonable objection that can be made to its passage. While there may be many homesteaders who will not need to avail themselves of the privilege granted by this act, there are unquestionably hundreds of them in my district who will be largely benefited. Under the terms of this bill the settlers can be absent from their claims for 7 or 8 months without securing special leave by individual application. The absence is permitted largely through the winter months, when presence on the claim is not so necessary, as it is not the season for cultivation. During this time the settlers may go to the towns and cities, secure employment, and earn money that will enable them to carry on farming more successfully next season. I speak not simply in behalf of the homesteaders of Oklahoma, but for the intelligent and patriotic citizens living on the public lands in every section of our country. These men out on the frontier, in the arid and semiarid region, are confronted by many obstacles. They necessarily endure many hardships. They and their families make many sacrifices. The Nation reaps the benefit of these sacrifices. The National Government should lighten the burdens of its homesteaders in every reasonable and proper way.

The pioneer settlers have contributed much toward the greatness of this country. A striking example of what pioneer farmers do for a country has been witnessed in my own State. Twenty-two years ago the first lands in Oklahoma were opened to white settlement. At various times thereafter reservations were opened. To-day we have a great, rich State, with a population of 1,700,000. A large portion of our lands are highly improved and under a high state of cultivation. Under the recent United States census the farm lands and buildings in Oklahoma are valued at $736,473,000. And it was with great satisfaction that I read a statement a few days ago showing the value of farm lands and buildings in 16 Southern States, which showed that in the value of the farm lands and buildings Oklahoma was excelled by but two of these 16 Southern States, viz, Missouri and Texas. The statement, published in a Washington paper, was as follows:

The 16 States of the South have more than doubled in the value of farm lands and buildings in the 10 years from 1900 to 1910. The valuation at present is $8,964,782,000, as compared with $4,077,291,000. The average increase for the entire section is 125 per cent. The greatest gain was in Oklahoma, where the value of farm lands and buildings increased 331 per cent.

The following table has been prepared by Clarence J. Owens, commissioner of agriculture of the Southern Commercial Congress, and is based on the reports of the Bureau of the Census. It shows the present value of farm lands and buildings:

Alabama, $287,673,000; Arkansas, $308,129,000; Florida, $117,623,000; Georgia, $477,603,000; Kentucky, $633,782,000; Louisiana, $238,682,000; Maryland $240,774,000; Mississippi, $330,295,000; Missouri, $1,710,505,000; North Carolina, $455,715,000 Oklahoma, $736,473,000; South Carolina $331,833,000; Tennessee, $479,606,000; Texas, $1,822,713,000; Virginia, $530,918,000; West Virginia, $262,458,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this shows the remarkable growth in the value of lands in Oklahoma, and this growth is largely the result of the persistence, pluck, energy, sacrifices, and intelligence of the pioneer settler of our State. So the Nation owes the settlers in Oklahoma and elsewhere a debt of gratitude for the part they have played in making us the greatest Nation on earth. And, in view of the fact that the difficulties of reclaiming the unsettled lands are greater now than they were in the past, because now most of these lands are in the arid and semiarid region, we should be liberal in enacting laws that will aid these men in every way possible. For these reasons I hope this bill will pass without a dissenting vote.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], because it is only on account of a remark he has just made denoting surprise that such a rich and fertile region as Colorado should ask aid of this kind from the Federal Government that I take the floor; for I want to explain to him, as well as the whole House, that all of the land under cultivation there that can be supplied by irrigation water is already taken up, and the titles to it in Colorado have passed to individuals, and the owners of such are not embraced in the representation of the committee nor included in the bill. It is only that class of people who are trying to make a living by the dry-farming system, known as the Campbell process, that would be affected.

The most of this land is in my district, and in addition to the drought that has prevailed throughout the plains section for almost a year there has arisen another calamity that has come to them since this bill was before the committee, and that is that clouds and clouds of grasshoppers have come in there and eaten up what was left of an unprecedented meager yield. I have a letter from a constituent, a gentleman of prominence and reliability, residing in one of the richest of those valleys. He calls my attention to the true situation, and I read you what he says:

STRASBURG, COLO., August 1, 1911.

DEAR JUDGE: I would respectfully call your attention to a bill now before Congress for granting a leave of absence to homesteaders, which I see mentioned in the late Washington dispatches.

This is an absolute necessity to most of these people in eastern Colorado, in your district, if they are to save their lands and live. I am a homesteader, but personally I do not need it, having a small income; but that is not the case with nine-tenths of this class, and they are now seeking work elsewhere.

There is an almost absolute failure of all crops and grass. I am located in the richest grass valley in eastern Colorado, and there will not be 10 tons of hay cut on Coal, Runny, Kiowa, or Besons Creeks, nor east of that to the Colorado line. It may be a trifle better on the northeast corner of the State. The homesteaders in my immediate vicinity are quitting and hunting for work. It is worse in the Bennett and Byers locality.

This is, so far as I can learn, the true situation throughout the eastern part of the State.

I see by the dispatch referred to that Mr. TAYLOR has asked to have eastern Colorado included in the bill before Congress, and I do hope you will cooperate with him in getting the bill passed at the extra session.

Excuse me for bothering you in these reciprocal, wooly, and cottony times; also our fearfully hot times in Colorado, and I know from my past experience in Washington City there are few cool waves there.

Truly,

J. S. STANGER.

You will observe he is not personally interested, and you can see he is telling the unvarnished truth and is speaking and pleading for his unfortunate neighbors. He says he has his title, and he says he has an income besides.

That condition is not general throughout the State, because in that section of the country where the land is fed by irrigation waters we have had the most abundant crops in Colorado. It is only those people who have in the last few years undertaken what is known as the dry-farming process who are suffering. Heretofore they have been exceedingly successful, and it looks as if in any year, whatever time the rainfall will come, by reason of cultivation of the soil, as distinguished from the cultivation of crops, they will finally be able to make a great success in their farming pursuits. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I have investigated how the Department of the Interior obtained the information upon which it based its recommendation that such legislation as is provided for in the pending bill should be passed, and I was informed that that information is based largely—not entirely, not over all the localities covered by the bill—upon the reports made by special land-office agents traveling through all the districts and examining the various claims to ascertain whether the entrymen are complying with the law.

Now, that is the most reliable and the best information obtainable, and it is disinterested and official, so that it ought to be considered as conclusive. The conditions over all of the area covered by the bill are not, of course, uniform. The conditions are not uniform over the area of one single land-office district. In some localities in a land-office district the crops are pretty fair. In some places they are good, and in some places they are excellent. It is so in the districts in the State of Nebraska included in this bill. The conditions are not uniform as to individual homesteaders in the same small locality for various different reasons.

Even in two small localities, say, neighborhoods adjoining each other, one may have enjoyed rainfall to an adequate extent, while crops in the other have suffered for lack of sufficient moisture. As a general rule, it is a question of longitude. This is so, in a degree, for a normal season. It is well established by the reports of the Weather Bureau that the amount of average rainfall decreases after getting west of the Missouri River, say, commencing at the one hundredth meridian and extending thence westward toward the Rocky Mountains. Of course rainfall varies more or less even in this vast region, owing to natural reasons other than the question of longitude. The district in Nebraska which I have the honor to represent extends east and west a distance of 300 miles. I do not pretend that there has been such a lack of rainfall in my district as in Wyoming, farther west, or in portions of Colorado, which are covered by this bill. In our Nebraska sixth district it is only a small percentage of the people who will be affected by the bill. To start with, it is only a small percentage of the lands that have not been patented, and, again, it will be only a small percentage of homestead entrymen who have yet to secure their patents who will find it necessary or desirable to take advantage of the provisions of this bill. None of them can afford to take advantage unless they have suffered crop failures.

If a vote had been taken by the electors in my district, everyone determining his vote upon the question of whether he himself needs the relief provided, an overwhelming majority would have voted against the bill, and at the start, when publicity was being given to the pendency of the bill in the Senate, the predilection of the people of my district was against being included in the bill. But the Secretary of the Interior, upon reports made by special agents, became convinced that there was a percentage of the homesteaders in my district who would be benefited by the bill, and accordingly recommended to the Senate Committee on Public Lands that some of the local land-office districts in the sixth congressional district of Nebraska be included in the bill and others excluded, and the bill passed the Senate in that form. For the purpose of ascertaining for my own advice the sentiment of my constituents, I wrote representative persons throughout my district for information, and while there was a conflict in the views expressed, the consensus of opinion in the different land-office districts confirmed the advice given by the Secretary of the Interior. This was so at the start, but as the pendency of the bill gained further publicity, and the question of whether Nebraska needed the relief became more and more discussed, the sentiment gradually changed in the districts not included out of consideration for the very small percentage who needed such relief, that the two districts not included in the bill had better be included. A number who wrote me at the start, advising that these two districts should not be included, after more mature reflection wrote me a second time, in substance expressing their views that even if it was a very small percentage indeed of entrymen who stood in need of the relief provided by the bill, that the districts had better be included. This latter advice was in conformity with my predilections at the start, and yet I had respected the advice given me when I appeared before the House Committee on Public Lands, leaving one district not covered by the bill. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly plain that to afford relief to the few who actually need it can not possibly be of any disadvantage to those who do not need it; and it is also a very reasonable proposition that the many who do not need the relief should not be permitted to stand in the way of relief for the few who have suffered crop failures to such an extent and whose property and financial means are so limited that they can not remain during the fall and winter months upon their claims to an advantage. There is in Nebraska employment to be had for all who have suffered failure of crops, and in many cases, if not in most cases, in the same counties where their claims are situated. Plenty of employment can be found in the State, and plenty of money, and good wages will be paid them, and the unfortunate entrymen ought to be allowed to avail themselves of the opportunity thus to be afforded.

Mr. Speaker, on the whole, the State of Nebraska will come out pretty well this year with its crops. Speaking generally, in the eastern half of the State, and maybe as much as the east two-thirds of the State, the crops are perhaps as good as in any State in the Union, and it is much the same in the larger portion of the western part of the State. But, as I have just stated, there is not a uniformity as to results, and there are small localities here and there where the relief contemplated by this bill is proper and justifiable. Generally over the State our oats crop was below the average, and our Nebraska potato crop is going to fall short. Even in the greater portion of the sand-hill area, which is covered by the one-section homestead law which the Fifty-eighth Congress, I am pleased to say, generously and wisely enacted, the relief contemplated is not needed by entrymen, and they can not afford to avail themselves of it; in fact, I think the sand hills have probably produced the largest potato yield this year of any part of the State. In any event, they produce the best quality of potatoes, and produce just as good a quality of potatoes as is produced anywhere on earth. If it were not for the danger of raising a side issue with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who has charge of the bill—having in mind the very high reputation of the Colorado potato—I would venture to say the sand hills raise the best quality of potatoes that are raised in the Union; but, to avoid such a side issue, I will say that no better potatoes are raised anywhere in the Union than in the Nebraska sand hills, and this much has already been established by the prices paid in the principal markets where the brand, "The Nebraska sand-hill potato," has become well known.

Mr. Speaker, I have overlooked what I intended to say—that our Nebraska wheat crop will come nearly up to the average and that our corn crop, usually a very great crop and Nebraska's most valuable crop, may be above the average.

Mr. Speaker, while only a very small percentage of my constituents will find it profitable to avail themselves of the relief afforded by the bill, I feel warranted in having the Nebraska district's name included in its provisions, and I rest my position upon the proposition that good fortune—the good fortune of those who have good crops—should not be permitted to stand in the way of relief from misfortune—the misfortune of those who have suffered crop failures.

I wish to call attention to another feature of the effect of this legislation. It gratifies me very greatly to contemplate that the absence authorized will afford families who reside too far away from schoolhouses to permit of their availing themselves of school advantages in their own districts, the districts in some instances, on account of being sparsely settled, being very large, to move to the railroad towns and send their worthy and promising children to good schools without fear of their entries being contested because of such absence. And I also reap satisfaction from the thought that worthy school-teacher entrymen, of whom there are many, of small means or no means, may safely be absent from their claims for the purpose of teaching and at the same time earning money with which to improve their homesteads and cultivate crops for 1912. The provisions of the bill will bring relief to worthy home builders of the West, and no more meritorious a measure has been passed or will be passed during the present Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, the homesteaders upon the remaining public lands have had a pretty hard row to hoe. In times past when better lands were available both Congress and the Supreme Court declared repeatedly that the homesteader was deserving of kind and liberal treatment at the hands of the Federal Government. There are additional reasons at this time for adhering to that policy.

The bill under consideration simply grants a leave of absence to all homesteaders in the land districts enumerated until April 15, 1912. On my request the bill has been amended to include the Vale, Burns, La Grande, and The Dalles land districts in the State of Oregon.

There has been no unusual drought in those land districts during the past year, but I favor the passage of the bill anyway, including these districts, because it does manifest a spirit of liberality on the part of the Sixty-second Congress toward the actual settler who is attempting to build up the West and make it a greater country. The bill does not relieve these settlers who may take advantage of the leave of absence from final compliance with the law in full. It simply gives them a chance to go away during the present year and earn money with which to complete their period of residence and cultivation hereafter. The passage of the bill would be a gracious act on the part of Congress. It would cost the Government nothing. It would benefit only the poor people of the country. For these reasons I hope the bill will pass.

FOREST RESERVES IN OREGON, PROPERLY ADMINISTERED, WILL REDUCE TAXES ONE HALF.

Oregon has a total area of 61,000,000 acres. Less than half of that amount is in private ownership. More than one-quarter of the State is already included in the permanent forest reserves and will remain public land forever. Another quarter of the State, and a little more, is public unappropriated land, the exact amount being 17,580,573 acres.

Oregon is entitled to have the quarter of the State that is included in the forest reserves so administered as to give to that State her just and equitable share of the proceeds from the sale of ripe timber and grazing privileges. On April 10, 1911, I introduced a bill in this House (H. R. 2980), providing for a permanent forestry policy which will give to the States a measure of home rule and all of the net proceeds derived from the forest reserves within their borders. The bill further provides that not one acre of the forest lands shall ever be sold to private individuals.

If this bill becomes a law it will reduce taxes in the State of Oregon at least one-half. The 16,000,000 acres of forest reserves in that State are worth to-day at least $500,000,000. If properly and economically administered those forests will never decrease in amount, but will keep up to their present standard. At the same time the income for all of the long future from the sale of ripe timber and grazing privileges will amount to at least 5 per cent of the total value of the forests, or, in other words, the annual net income to the State, if my bill becomes a law, will be at least $2,500,000. These figures seem incredible, but the value of the 16,000,000 acres of forests I have placed at a low figure, and anyone familiar with the timber industry well knows that this great asset of the State of Oregon, properly administered, will pay 5 per cent per annum for all time to come.

GREATER LIBERALITY SHOULD BE SHOWN HOMESTEADERS AND LESS TO SPECULATORS.

As to the 17,000,000 acres of public lands in the State of Oregon outside of the forest reserves, they should be disposed of to homestead settlers under most liberal laws. Upon all of the remaining public lands east of the Cascade Mountains a homesteader should be allowed to take 320 acres. Any homesteader should be allowed to commute at the end of 14 months' residence without being charged with fraud. The whole stringent policy of the General Land Office toward the actual settler should be reversed and made more liberal. The whole liberal policy of the General Land Office toward speculators and scrip applicants should be reversed and made more stringent. I have introduced bills covering all of these points, which will be considered by the Public Lands Committee during the regular sessions of the Sixty-second Congress.

RECLAMATION FUNDS SHOULD BE EXPENDED WITHIN STATES MAKING CONTRIBUTIONS.

I have also introduced a bill requiring the Reclamation Bureau to give to Oregon the benefit of her own irrigation money. Since the reclamation act was passed—June 16, 1902; nine years ago—Oregon has contributed to that fund $9,412,067.39, while the Bureau of Reclamation has expended in the State of Oregon during that time only $2,711,134.39. Therefore the balance of the irrigation money justly due Oregon at this date is $6,700,933.

EMIGRATION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS TO CANADA DETRIMENTAL TO DEVELOPMENT OF THE WEST.

While Oregon has been greatly favored by nature, it has a population, after 51 years of statehood, of less than 1,000,000 people. In recent years the State has been discriminated against. It is the purpose of the land legislation that I have introduced and which is now pending to rectify these wrongs to that State, and I have every reason to believe, and do believe, that I shall succeed.

The following table shows the number of American citizens who have emigrated to Canada during the past five years:

Fiscal year ended March 31—	Number.
1907	59,273
1908	58,312
1909	59,832
1911	121,464

According to the immigration officers of the Canadian Government, each one of these American citizens carried into that Dominion, either in money or property, $1,000, so that during the past year 121,464 of our people went to Canada and took with them out of this country the enormous sum of $121,464,000, either in money or property. Under these circumstances, I say that it is right and proper that this Congress should show more kindness and liberality to those of our citizens who seek homes upon the public lands in the western part of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] three minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the only question in the matter before the House is with reference to the policy to be pursued by the House in relation to those who live in these semiarid regions, where irrigation is necessary. It is hard for those who have not been in that country to realize that in one valley the inhabitants may be supplied with water, because of the rainfall and the winter snows, while right across a mountain range there may be an extent of 100 miles long and 25 miles wide which is suffering from a condition of drought.

The bill now before the House does not affect the length of a man's residence upon his homestead, namely five years, and it does not affect his cultivation. In the district under consideration here they did not have sufficient snow last winter, and did not have the ordinary amount of rain, and as a result of these conditions the streams are dried up. The springs are dried up, and they have no water for their stock or for themselves. All they ask of this Congress is that you give them until April, 1912, to go back upon their homes; that in the meantime they may go out to various places and work in the hayfields, on the farms, and in the mills to obtain money with which to improve their places that they may take their families back there next year. The Government loses nothing. The homestead law does not permit a man to be absent from his claim more than six months at a time without showing cause therefor. This simply extends their time a few months in order that they may earn sufficient money to assist them to make their improvements and perfect their title by complying with the requirements of the law. I submit that it is a meritorious measure. Knowing that country as I have for so many years, I believe this Congress ought to give these men this opportunity to leave their homes for the time specified.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is little that I can add to what has been said, but my relation to this matter is a little different than that of the others who have spoken. Nearly all of them are personally interested through their constituents. The bill does not affect my district or my State in any degree. I thought perhaps you would like to hear from some one who had no particular interest in the matter.

I was convinced by what I heard in the committee that this bill ought to pass and that it is an emergency measure. The reasons have been stated to you, and perhaps only one point has been omitted. I want to call attention to that. Five years are given the homesteader in which to perfect his title. This bill will extend the time to five years and a half. Most of those who are acquiring homesteads in this way are poor people. They have not the means to live when their crops fail. The bill will give them the right to leave their homesteads, to take their families with them to earn a living elsewhere, and come back next spring to plant a crop. You might ask, as I did, why they could not do that anyhow. If they did, they would have to temporarily abandon their homesteads and others might come onto their homesteads and claim them, and when the first entryman came back he might find himself confronted with a contest which he would not have the means to meet. This bill simply enables them to go away and relieves them from the danger of having a contest on their hands when they come back.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. Most assuredly; I will yield to my colleague.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will yield to the gentleman time enough to answer a question.

Mr. GRAHAM. It might take a long time, as my colleague is capable of asking some pretty hard questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that this is for the purpose of preventing contests, and that the existing law covers the men now on their homesteads; that the primary purpose of this is to cover those who have not yet entered on the land. Does the gentleman think that anyone who filed an entry on these lands under these conditions is running any great risk about having a contest from some one else? Who else would endeavor to go on the land this fall under these conditions?

Mr. GRAHAM. My colleague is in error; his premises are unsound. This bill does not apply to anyone who has not initiated a claim who is not already on the land.

Mr. MANN. Then I am entirely mistaken in the purpose of the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. It affects only those on the lands now. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to have him answer the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. I would like to have the gentleman answer the question put by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], to whom this bill applies. Whether it applies to those who are now upon the land or those who have simply made claim and have not yet entered on the land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is a bill that applies to both, to those who have made a filing but not made any settlement; it allows to the 15th of next April to make the settlement. To those who are on the land and lost crops it gives them until the 15th of April without subject to a contest or having their absence the ground for canceling their entry.

It is true, as has been stated, that those upon the land can apply to the land office, but poor people can not go to lawyers. And the worst of it is that when they make application to the land office the land office does not grant it, but sends it to Washington, and they may have to wait six months. That is a great hardship, and is a denial of their right entirely.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman is probably aware that there is a class of people who indulge in the business of filing vexatious contests.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And where people apply for this leave and go away there might be a contest filed by such a class of people simply for the purpose of compelling the entryman to give them something to withdraw it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; a pure hold-up proposition.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And the passage of this bill says to every homesteader you do not have to reside on your land until April 15, 1912.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is correct; but also says to them that if they do take advantage of this they must yet put in five years' residence. Now, everybody is anxious to get his title as soon as he can, and they will not go off the land unless it is absolutely necessary. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments, but first I want to yield to some gentlemen for an opportunity to offer some other amendments.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the reprinted bill, page 2, line 6, after the word "Williston" add the words "Devils Lake."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman's proposed amendment an amendment to the committee amendment or to the bill?

Mr. HANNA. It is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the gentleman recognized to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He was.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman from Colorado has yielded the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I have not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's hour had expired anyway.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between the words "O'Neill" and "Broken Bow" the words "North Platte," followed by a comma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendmnt was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the Senate amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, page 2, after the word "Buffalo" insert the word "Lander."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Wyoming if there is any land district in that State that is not now inserted in the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. There is not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I now move the adoption of the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs without motion on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call still rests with the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest that the gentleman modify his request so that they may extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill for some specific time, say, five days, or something like that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I suppose five days is long enough.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman so modify his request?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that all who have addressed the House on this bill be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD for the period of five legislative days on the subject of this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have no authority to call up any other bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the next call.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE, ETC., TO CERTAIN HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13044) extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders in the Rosebud and other Indian reservations in South and North Dakota, and I will yield the floor to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, let the bill be reported first.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 3152 and substitute it for the pending House bill. The bills are identical as reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 3152 be substituted for House bill 13044, and that the House bill do lie on the table. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the bill be first reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota stated that they are identical.

Mr. MANN. We would like to have the bill read, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has heretofore made a homestead entry for land in what was formerly a part of the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota, authorized by act approved March 2, 1907, or for land in what was formerly the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations in North and South Dakota, authorized by the act of May 28, 1908, may apply to the register and receiver of the land office in the district in which the land is located for an extension of time within which to make payment of any amount that is about to become due by filing an affidavit, duly corroborated by two other persons, setting forth that, by reason of drought, loss of crop, sickness, or other unavoidable cause, he can not make such payment, and if the register and receiver are satisfied that the facts are sufficient to justify the granting of an extension, and that such person can not make such payment and that he is acting in good faith and is complying with all the provisions of the homestead laws, they may grant an extension of such payment for a period of one year by the payment of interest for one year in advance at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due, and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year upon the same terms: Provided, That the last payment and all other payments must be made within a period not exceeding one year after the last payment is due. That all moneys paid for interest as herein provided shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the land.

SEC. 2. That failure to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payment at or before the time to which such payment has been extended as herein provided will forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out section 1 and insert the following:

"That any person who has heretofore made a homestead entry for land in what was formerly a part of the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota, authorized by act approved March 2, 1907, may apply to the register and receiver of the land office in the district in which the land is located for an extention of time within which to make payment of any amount that is about to become due, and upon the payment of interest for one year in advance, at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due, and payment will be extended for a period of one year, and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in the same manner, and on payment of interest annually in advance as aforesaid: Provided, That the last payment and all other payments must be made within a period of not exceeding one year after the last payment is due. That all moneys paid for interest as herein provided shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the land."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders in the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the bill was amended by the committee. The Clerk did not read the substitute for section 1, but the bill as amended is identical, word for word, with Senate bill 3152; therefore I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3152 be substituted for the House bill and the House bill do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota renews his request that Senate bill 3152 be substituted for the House bill just read by the Clerk, and that the House bill do lie on the table. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman will permit me, the amendment proposed by the committee has not been reported.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me say to the gentleman from New York my only purpose for asking or making this request was to save time. The bill as amended, I have already stated, is identical with the Senate bill. Now, if we substitute the Senate bill 3152 and it is read, then we will get the House bill as amended, and if the House does not see fit to pass the bill I presume they will defeat it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that the bill as introduced in the House provided that extensions might be made upon proof showing that the payments due had not been made by reason of the drought, loss of crops, sickness, or other unavoidable causes. That expression, of course, might include everything, but the committee proposes an amendment by which no showing whatever is required for the extension, but simply the application must be made, and when it is made it is granted, provided the interest is payable in advance. Now, I am opposed to the practice of permitting homesteaders, without some good cause being shown, to delay the payments to be made; and as the gentleman proposes to have substituted the Senate bill, which eliminates all reference as to good cause being shown, for the present I shall object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists upon his objection, then, I presume, the question may be submitted again if the House adopts the committee amendment to the House bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If he objects——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we have gone at some length into the question of the great drought-stricken country of the West in the bill which has already passed the House, and we have shown the House beyond all question that a severe drought has extended all over the West, including South Dakota. The Rosebud Reservation, where these lands are situated, is now, in the main, in the hands of settlers, having been bought from the Indians; and those people are now settlers on the land and have made part payments and have made a failure of their crops on account of the great drought prevailing in that country; and they are unable to make a payment this year, and we are asking an extension at this time for the reason that they can not make this annual payment; and the land will be forfeited unless it is promptly paid. It is evident that it will be an advantage to the Indians to have the extension made. Under the present law the Indians only receive 3 per cent interest on the money that is put in the Treasury; under this bill they receive 5 per cent for the deferred payments; so it is a benefit to the Indians to the extent of 2 per cent.

It is impossible, so the committee was informed, for the settlers to make this payment. It has been abundantly shown by many men upon this floor to-day that the conditions are peculiar, because of the unprecedented drought. I have recently been through Kansas and Oklahoma and Texas, and I know that this drought does prevail in the West, and many of the old residents of the country say that they have never witnessed a drought equal to the present one. I hope, therefore, that the bill will pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time the extension has been made of time for these settlers on the Rosebud Reservation, is it not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; this is the second year's extension, and for the same reason; and I will state this year, as I understand it, the condition is much worse than last year. Any one who has been through that country and knows the conditions will sympathize——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not, and I do not suppose the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have been over part of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman explain the reason for the committee amendment which eliminates the necessity for these homesteaders to show some sufficient reason for the extension?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 13044, which is the bill now under consideration, you will notice, proposes to affect lands in what was formerly the Rosebud Reservation and the Cheyenne and Standing Rock Reservations in North and South Dakota. The bill as amended in committee eliminates the Cheyenne and Standing Rock Reservations in North and South Dakota, because of no emergency existing as to those reservations at the present time. The payment that the settlers agreed to make when they made their entries in 1910 will not be due until 1912. There is no question at all but that there will be a necessity for extending that payment, but there will be plenty of opportunity to secure the legislation in the next session of Congress; and, therefore, there is no necessity for including it at the present time, no emergency existing, so far as those reservations are concerned.

Now, in the Rosebud Reservation there was a payment due from the settlers upon the land in 1910 that was extended until 1911. In the month of August last year the first payment became due. Consequently, in August of this year there are two payments due, and it is an absolute impossibility for the settlers to meet them. We have just passed a bill relieving the settlers from residence because of the extreme conditions which prevail there. This simply refers it to the Rosebud Reservation, where they have two payments due, in order to relieve them from making those payments upon payment of interest at 5 per cent in advance upon the amount due.

As the chairman of the committee has already stated, if this money was to be paid at the time it was due by these entrymen, the money would go into the Treasury of the United States and would draw interest at 3 per cent per annum. Under this bill there will be paid interest in advance at 5 per cent. I want to call attention to a brief letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, showing that there has been received from the lands in this portion of the reservation that is affected by this bill already $1,671,416.79. The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 2, 1911.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 31st ultimo, inquiring as to the balance to the credit of the Rosebud Indians from the proceeds of sales of lands in the Rosebud Reservation, S. Dak., under section 5 of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1231), I have the honor to advise you as follows:

Rosebud Reservation 3 per cent fund	$1,000,000.00
Proceeds of Rosebud Reservation	671,416.79
Total	1,671,416.79

Respectfully,

J. F. CURTIS, Assistant Secretary.

The same tribe of Indians received about $1,800,000 from the sale of that portion of the reservation that is located in Gregory County. They have individual money on deposit in the banks in that locality of more than $1,000,000. No hardship, no injustice will be done to the Indians by the passage of this measure. On the contrary, they will benefit to the extent of 2 per cent interest.

As to the change in the bill by the committee so that the extension is made regardless of any condition, it was made because of the fact that the bill as drawn practically amounted to giving an extension to everybody, but it would necessitate their employing a lawyer, of going before the register and receiver of the local land office, making a showing, putting them to expense, and many of them perhaps would not know that they had that privilege and perhaps would lose their lands by reason of a default. So the committee thought, and, I think, wisely, that the bill ought to be general in its character and extend the payment upon merely the condition of paying 5 per cent interest in advance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this bill affect the lands in Gregory County or only in Tripp County?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This bill only affects the lands in what is known as Tripp County, which is the county west of Gregory County. Let me say to the gentleman, because he remembers the legislation pertaining to Gregory County, my understanding is that at the present time every acre of land has been acquired and the last payment has been made, and I want to say for the information of the gentleman, because he opposed that legislation for fear that the Indians were not going to receive $1,140,000, which was the amount they were to receive under the treaty they made with the Government, that they have received actually more than $1,800,000 for those 400,000 acres of land.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then the Indians were lucky in this instance is all that I can say.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And I want to say to the gentleman, further, that the remnant lands that were not taken by homesteaders along the Missouri River and that were thought to be almost worthless were sold to the highest bidder at $4.70 an acre.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has there been a drought in Tripp County since these lands were opened?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There has not; and I will say that this is an unusual condition, so far as South Dakota is concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the second time that this matter has been brought up. In my section of the country and in other sections of the country people are induced to go onto these western lands and to pay high prices for them, and are continually finding out that, instead of that country being a land of plenty, where nature is bounteous, nobody is able to live on the land. They struggle along, continually appealing to Congress for their relief. I wondered whether this was the usual condition in Tripp County, or whether it was really an unusual condition.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have already said to the gentleman the settlers in there have managed to pay $1,671,000 for the benefit of the Indians. And I may say also that they probably took most of that money in there with them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from New York that the information before the committee and the evidence given was to the effect that there was a land boom on at the time these lands were sold. They had a great run there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The evidence before the committee was to the effect that the land was much more valuable than the price finally fixed in the bill under which it was thrown open, and the contention was made by some gentleman that the Indians ought to be pretty well satisfied if they got $1,000,000 out of it; that that was enough for the Indians. Others of us thought they ought to get the full value of the land. I am glad if it is so that the settlers have paid more for the land than was anticipated. I am very well pleased with the result.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Could the gentleman inform the House what the Indians received from the sale of Manhattan Island in New York? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the Federal Government never owned Manhattan Island, and had no control of the Indians at that time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman inform the House what the Indians received in return for the title to Manhattan Island at that time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was not present. The gentleman can inform the House if he knows. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand that history records that they received an equivalent of about $24.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They were overpaid. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For a question, I will. What time have I, Mr. Speaker? How much time has been exhausted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Forty minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. I read from the report that "Great drought prevails in portions of South Dakota this year, and many of the settlers affected by this bill will be unable to meet their payments and may lose their homes unless relief is granted." We passed a bill a moment ago, when gentlemen advocating it stated that a great drought prevailed in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, Montana, North and South Dakota——

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. And Texas——

Mr. MANN. Kansas, Nebraska, Arizona, and Minnesota, I believe.

Mr. GARNER. West Texas.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. I am coming to Oklahoma. We have another bill on the calendar, and in the report on it it is said that three successive crop failures in Oklahoma, resulting from severe droughts, have left the Indians of that State in a deplorable condition. Quoting from a letter in which a man sets out the situation in detail, I may say it is stated that there is an unfortunate condition now prevailing among the Oklahoma farmers and those depending upon them on account of three successive crop failures. There is another letter which refers to the want of the necessities of life resulting from the unprecedented drought in Oklahoma, and in another place in the same letter it is stated that—

> From the foregoing it will be seen that during the last four years this country, Oklahoma, has had to contend with one flood and three droughts, with more or less damage to the crops which escaped the flood or withstood the droughts from hailstorms.

Now we learn, also, that we have grasshoppers in addition. In the city of Lawton, Okla., water is purchased at 5 cents a bucket. And yet a few years ago these gentlemen were urging the people to go from our cities and farms to enter upon an Eden, the garden spot of the world, in this drought-ridden and flood-afflicted portion of the country; and having obtained the settlers there, buying Indian lands at high prices, paying from $4 to $10 an acre for land which is not worth and was not worth 75 cents an acre for any practical purpose, they necessarily have to come now and ask, in this case, to have the time extended, and in the Oklahoma case to have the Indians supported out of money now in the Treasury. The Indians had lived for years on this land; but, lo and behold, after one flood and three droughts they are no longer able even to care for themselves, but we have to take money which, it is true, belongs to them out of the Treasury to take care of them in this Garden of Eden. [Laughter.] I want the people in our part of the country to know that a man who goes out into that God-forsaken country of droughts takes his life in his hands.

Mr. GARNER. Send them to Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No; but the remarks I have made are largely applicable to Texas. [Laughter.]

A few minutes ago we passed a bill to extend the time of homestead settlers down in New Mexico, adjoining Texas, on the ground of drought there. Every one familiar with the situation knows they have had more rainfall in New Mexico this year than they have had for years past. Yet we passed a bill to relieve those settlers because of the drought there.

Mr. SIMS. They never have enough rainfall there to justify homesteading those lands.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to pass these bills. I think anyone who goes from our portion of the country, where we really can raise things, into the arid region, risking his life and the lives of his family, is entitled to every consideration when he gets there. In fact, I think he ought usually to be cared for in a lunatic asylum. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3152) and to substitute it for the pending bill, and that the House bill do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill (S. 3152) be substituted for the bill (H. R. 13044), and that the House bill lie on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill has never been read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has heretofore made a homestead entry for land in what was formerly a part of the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, authorized by the act approved March 2, 1907, may apply to the register and receiver of the land office in the district in which the land is located for an extension of time within which to make payment of any amount that is about to become due, and upon the payment of interest for one year in advance, at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due, and payment will be extended for a period of one year, and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in the same manner: Provided, That the last payment and all other payments must be made within a period not exceeding one year after the last payment is due; that all moneys paid for interest as herein provided shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the lands.

SEC. 2. That failure to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payment at or before the time to which such payment has been extended as herein provided, will forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FORT CLARK MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 13120) to transfer a portion of Fort Clark Military Reservation to the State of Texas for a tuberculosis sanitarium.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, why do we not proceed with the call of committees?

The SPEAKER. At the end of 30 minutes after that call begins it is proper for anyone to move to go into Committee of the Whole, and it is a privileged motion. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 13120.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13120) to transfer a portion of the Fort Clark Military Reservation to the State of Texas for a tuberculosis sanitarium, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer and convey to the governor of the State of Texas, for the purpose of a State tuberculosis sanitarium for the treatment of persons afflicted with tuberculosis, such portion of Fort Clark Military Reservation, in the State of Texas, as the governor of the State or his representative may select: Provided, That not more than 500 acres shall be conveyed: And provided further, That should the State of Texas in any event refuse or fail to use the property herein authorized to be conveyed, or any portion thereof, for the purposes designated, then such land and property shall revert to the United States and become a part of the public domain thereof.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Amend the bill as follows:

"In line 3 strike out the word 'President' and insert in lieu thereof the words 'Secretary of War.'

"Strike out the words 'the governor of' in line 4, and strike out in lines 6 and 7 the words 'for the treatment of persons afflicted with tuberculosis.'

"Insert in line 9, after the word 'select,' the following, 'including the improvements thereon and the water supply, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.'

"In line 12, after the word 'use,' insert the words 'or abandon.'"

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire how the bill will read when you strike out the word "tuberculosis," and whether it requires the State of Texas to maintain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill as it would read if amended.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be heard unless some other gentleman wants to make some remarks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment after the committee amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest one amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after the word "or," insert the word "shall."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the Chief of Staff says in his letter upon this bill that the department should reserve the right to use the water supply of Fort Clark if it becomes necessary at any time in the future to do so; that right is not reserved in the bill.

Mr. MANN. In that connection, if the gentleman will yield, I propose to offer an amendment by inserting after the word "directed," page 1, line 4, the words "in his discretion and in such terms as he may deem proper," so that it will read—

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion and in such terms as he may deem proper, to transfer, etc.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all right. It will enable the War Department to reserve the right to use the water supply and anything else on the granted lands deemed advisable.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that some of the provisions in this bill are somewhat ambiguous. The bill seems to vest no discretion in the Secretary of War, except that he shall approve something. Approve what? The way the bill is drawn and submitted to the House for consideration the Secretary is directed to convey such land, not exceeding 500 acres in area, to the State of Texas, which land the governor or some other State authority may select, subject to his approval. What does that mean?

I heard the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to amend the bill, but it seems to me that his amendment would be conflicting. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey land, and so forth. What is the use of the word "directed" if we are to say "in his discretion"? Are we going to direct an officer to do a thing in his discretion?

Mr. MANN. It might be better to strike out the word "directed."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think if the gentleman's amendment will include the striking out of the word "directed" and then put it "in the discretion" of the Secretary of War to protect the Federal interests, it will be better. The way the bill is written now he has no efficient discretionary power at all.

Mr. BURLESON. I have no objection to the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Indiana. I will state to the gentleman that it is the purpose of the War Department to abandon this reservation, and was so declared by the Chief of Staff and the Adjutant General. We have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then it should vest in the Secretary of War the discretion. The purpose of the bill is beneficent. Of course, the Secretary will make the conveyance and approve of the selection made by the governor of Texas, if it is wise to do so.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will say that the President himself told me that it was entirely agreeable to transfer this property to the State of Texas for the purpose of a tuberculosis sanitarium; that they intended to abandon the post for military purposes; and pursuant to that intention they have abandoned posts and transferred them to the Interior Department, and they have become a part of the public domain. Any amendments that will aid the transfer of this property is agreeable to me. I do not care how much discretion you leave in the President or in the Secretary of War.

Mr. BURLESON. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois covers all those things.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I know, but we are legislating, and our legislation should stand the test of criticism from every standpoint. We ought to include in the bill the discretionary feature as a matter of self-protection. I do not know much about the real facts, but with the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested, I have no objection to the bill at all.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like some information from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] as to the improvements on this land and the water supply. What is the water supply and the buildings, and the value of them?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the water supply, I would say to the gentleman, is from a spring known as Los Moras. It is as fine water as is in the world. Most of the improvements are what are known as adobe houses and constitute an old post, one of the earliest posts in Texas—old Fort Clark—and I may say to the gentleman, in my judgment one of the best that has ever been seen in the Southwest, from the standpoint of health. However, it is the intention of the department to abandon it. The estimate for rebuilding Fort Clark submitted to the Military Committee two years ago, when I undertook to have the fort rebuilt, was quite a large sum.

Mr. DAVIDSON. What is the estimated value of the property now?

Mr. GARNER. The post is in such condition now that it must be either improved or abandoned; and, following the policy of concentrating the troops into larger posts, the Government has decided to abandon all of those smaller posts in that section of the country and move them to Fort Sam Houston.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some information from the gentleman from Texas. As I understand it, the State of Texas is prepared, if the Government gives it this right, to operate and maintain a tuberculosis sanitarium at this place for the benefit of people who are living there or who come to that portion of the country.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of my colleague [Mr. GARNER] I will state that a few years ago a question arose in our State as to what policy should be pursued with reference to people afflicted with tuberculosis coming there from other States. As is well known to everybody, people afflicted with this disease who live in sections of the country where the climate is more rigorous than it is in Texas have been coming there, believing that there a cure would be found. Many have come and many have been cured. Some of them, coming there too late for the climate to effect a cure, after a time find their resources exhausted, and they have become charges upon certain counties said to be favorable to this disease where they have located. The representatives in the legislature from those counties raised the question as to what should be done for the care and support of those people. One of our health officers suggested in the public print that Texas ought to quarantine against people afflicted with this disease. The legislature declined to take such action, but by proper action took steps looking to the establishment of two sanitariums for the treatment of these unfortunates. A board was appointed, consisting of three prominent citizens, of which Dr. Ralph Steiner, the chief health officer of Texas, was made the chairman. This board has recommended the location of one of these sanitariums at a place called San Angelo, and have recommended the location of the other on the Fort Clark Military Reservation, provided it can be secured from the Government for that purpose, having heard it was the intention of the Government to abandon it for military purposes. Having reached this conclusion, at the request of the governor of Texas and the State health officer, some time ago, I took the matter up with the War Department.

I consulted with the Adjutant General and the Chief of Staff and ascertained that it was the intention of the War Department to abandon these outlying military reservations. I then introduced a joint resolution providing for turning over a part of this reservation to the State for the purpose I have indicated. Subsequently, my colleague [Mr. GARNER], the reservation being in his district, introduced a similar resolution, which has been amended, and as amended is thoroughly satisfactory to me, carrying out the purposes I had in mind, and conforms to the wishes of the State authorities. If we can secure this land sought to be turned over to the State by this bill, the State within the next year or two can make provision for the care of a great many more of these afflicted people than it could if it had to start an institution anew, without any improvements or buildings. This reservation is in the section of our State that is said to be especially suitable for the cure of this disease, and I feel quite sure that it is not only to the interest of the State of Texas, but to the interest of the general public good, that the action sought to be taken by this bill introduced by my colleague shall be taken.

My colleague [Mr. GARNER] provides in the bill for a transfer of the amount of land that was asked for by the State, or that the board was authorized to purchase under the terms of the resolution creating the board, but, I believe, that for this institution we ought to have a few more acres than 500. I think we ought to have at least 640, if not 1,000 acres. As was suggested by Mr. GARNER, when he made his argument before the Committee on Military Affairs in support of this bill, and as is well known to all the Members, an abundance or, rather, an ample sufficiency of nutritious food is one of the essentials in the successful treatment of this disease. When I prepared the first draft of the resolution I introduced, I provided for 640 acres, but at the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. SLAYDEN] I reduced the figures. I now believe more than ever that we should have at least that amount, and at the proper time will offer an amendment to secure a full section of land.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice the reservation has about 4,000 acres. Is this any land that could be used for grazing at all?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that I am not familiar with the character of the land there, but I heard my colleague [Mr. SLAYDEN], a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, who is familiar with it, state that it is semiarid, and that it is necessary to irrigate it in order to grow fruits or vegetables, but that it can be utilized for grazing purposes, and that it is worth approximately—how much an acre?

Mr. GARNER. Say, $4 or $5.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman says about $4 an acre.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows, or if he does not, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and I both know that a tuberculosis sanitarium ought to have a dairy.

Mr. BURLESON. That is the very point I am——

Mr. MANN. I would give the whole of it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURLESON. In a moment, as I have stated, I will offer an amendment to increase the acreage to a larger amount——

Mr. GARNER. I want to make a suggestion to the House and see what they think about it. I have a letter here from the gentlemen who are locating this sanitarium, and their idea was simply to ask from the Government of the United States the use of this amount for which the bill asks. Mr. Connollee, of the committee, asked me to ask for the entire reservation in order that they might have enough to take care of the cattle, sheep, or anything else that might be necessary in order to assist in its successful conduct as a tuberculosis sanitarium, and I want to say in this connection if this entire tract could be used for the purpose it would not be a detriment to the Government and at the same time would give that much more room, but the State of Texas having limited them to purchase 500 acres I thought I would limit in the bill the number of acres to 500, but I do not see any detriment that could come to the United States Government by giving these people a permit to use the entire reservation.

Mr. MANN. We can do that later.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This particular location is a highly salubrious one, is it not?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What has the gentleman to say of the attitude of an administration, with an army of 80,000 men enlisted and a necessity of having them recuperated after service in the Philippines and tropical countries, as they will be, at different places, that has no objection to giving away the most desirable location it has for its troops to recuperate, instead of reserving it for them?

Mr. MANN. They would not send them to Texas.

Mr. BURLESON. I have already stated to the gentleman that the Federal Government has a tuberculosis sanitarium located at some point in New Mexico that is ample for her purposes——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not inquiring in regard to a tuberculosis sanatorium, but as to this being such a salubrious place.

Mr. GARNER. This is especially suitable for a tuberculosis sanitarium. Is the gentleman going to select invalids out of different regiments of the United States and put them at Fort Clark? Is he going to organize an invalid regiment and send it to Fort Clark because it happens to be a healthy climate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But after the regiment has served in tropical countries and returns to this country, it is usual to send them to some healthy place.

Mr. MANN. But some other place besides Texas.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to say to the gentlemen from Illinois and New York that when they are sent to Fort Sam Houston, near San Antonio, Tex., that is one of the most salubrious climates and delightfully healthy sections to be found in all this country.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] a question.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, and then I will answer the gentlemen with pleasure.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if this is to be entirely a charitable institution conducted by the State of Texas?

Mr. BURLESON. Entirely so. It will be a State institution, all the expenses of which are to be borne by the State.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is it the intention to confine it only to the residents of the State of Texas?

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I want to know.

Mr. BURLESON. Undoubtedly; the State of Texas does not want to and will not assume the burden of supporting tuberculosis patients from other States, but we do not propose to exclude any citizen of the United States that is now a citizen of Texas. And I will say further that 75 per cent of the people now in Texas afflicted with this terrible disease, and who will go into the tuberculosis sanitariums, were originally from other States and are not natives of Texas.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is it the intention of the State of Texas to provide quarters where those outside of the State may be taken and treated by paying for their treatment? Or is it entirely a charitable institution?

Mr. BURLESON. I am not familiar with the entire scope of the State law, but I do not think that is in contemplation to admit other than Texans to these sanitariums. It is for those now in the State of Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement at that point?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the disposition of the committee amendment first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], which is an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "or," at the end of the line, insert the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. Let us adopt the committee amendment first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 11, page 1, by striking out, after the word "than," the words "five hundred," and inserting in lieu thereof "twelve hundred and eighty."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, here a moment ago my genial friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] was begging Members of the House that they agree to an amendment to increase it from 500 to 640 acres. Why not increase it to 10,000?

Mr. BURLESON. Because there are not 10,000 acres there. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman that I offer this amendment largely as a result of the persuasive argument made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and his colleague [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. How many acres does that leave now?

Mr. GARNER. About 2,800.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] yield to me?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withhold my amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I am very confident that when this tuberculosis sanitarium is established the Secretary of War will give the State of Texas the use of the balance of this reservation for whatever purposes they may want in connection with the sanitarium, or else he will transfer the balance of it into the Interior Department and the State of Texas will be able to buy it. I think it ought to be 1,280 acres. You will need that much for the cattle and sheep and other things necessary with which to run a tuberculosis sanitarium, because it takes about 10 acres of land to each cow in that section of the country.

Mr. MANN. It will take a great deal more land than a section. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] that he modify his amendment. Here is a case where it was referred to the War Department——

Mr. BURLESON. I will modify the amendment, making it 640 acres, as I originally intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "than," strike out the words "five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "six hundred and forty."

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that any increase in the area here should have the consideration of the War Department. This measure in its present form has had their consideration, and they have agreed to 500 acres. I think that is an important matter. It has been stated by the gentleman who has charge of this bill that they can get any amount beyond 500 acres. Why not let it stand in its present shape? I have had considerable experience with tuberculosis hospitals in the State of Pennsylvania, and in my judgment it does not require any considerable area for the exercise of patients.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 1, line 1, by striking out the words "and directed" and inserting the following: "in his discretion and upon such terms as he may deem proper."

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] moves that the committee do now rise and report the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13120, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are we in the House or in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. We are in the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The eagle or mace that usually sits at the right hand of the Speaker when he presides over the House is missing. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks for the purpose of placing in the RECORD a communication from the citizens of Brackettville.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

BRACKETTVILLE, TEX., August 5, 1911.

To the CHAIRMAN MASS MEETING ASSEMBLED:

We, your committee appointed to draft resolutions of protest to a certain bill introduced in the House of the National Congress, beg leave to submit the following:

Whereas it was reported in the San Antonio Express of date August 5, 1911, that a bill to provide the State of Texas with a part of the military reservation of Fort Clark as a site for a tuberculosis sanitarium, introduced by the Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, Texas, had been unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, and that it was highly probable that said bill would be placed upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar and be passed at this session of Congress: Wherefore

Be it resolved by the business men of Brackettville in mass meeting assembled, That we earnestly protest the passage of said bill for the following reasons, to wit:

First. Fort Clark is too valuable a military reservation, being one of the best military posts owned by the Government, as is recognized by the present commanding officer and all of his predecessors, on account of the abundance of water and natural sanitary advantages, in addition to the fact that its proximity to the boundary line of the United States and the Republic of Mexico gives it a strategic value, especially at this time on account of the unsettled conditions existing in the Republic of Mexico.

Second. A tuberculosis sanitarium located on any part of said reservation would absolutely ruin the town of Brackett from a business standpoint in this, that ranchmen and farmers residing near said town would do their trading at other points because of their fear of the dreaded disease, tuberculosis.

Third. If a tuberculosis sanitarium is established on any part of the said reservation, it must necessarily be at the source of the water supply for both town and post, thus converting one of the most healthful towns in the State into one of the most unhealthful on account of the close proximity to said town and possible contamination of the water supply by the disease.

Fourth. With this statement relative to our objections in the matter, we wish to be understood that we are in hearty sympathy with the movement to secure a suitable site desirable in every way for the purpose and with those who are anxious to provide the unfortunate afflicted with relief. And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished each of the United States Senators of Texas, Congressman, State senator, and representative of this district, respectively; and we earnestly request that they each use their best efforts in defeating said bill.

Respectfully submitted.

JOS. VITTMANN,
O. F. SEARGEANT,
F. J. GILSON, Jr.,
Committee.

The above and foregoing resolutions were submitted, approved, and adopted by the mass meeting assembled.

FRANK LANE, Chairman.
JOS. R. DE WITT, Secretary.

IMPROVEMENT OF BLACK WARRIOR RIVER, ALA.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 943; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on that bill be considered as closed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN], chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 943; and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not make the latter request. I understand a few gentlemen desire to discuss the merits of the bill at greater length than under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think we can extend their time a little.

Mr. MANN. I do not think anybody will take up time uselessly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Florida, that the House resolve itself in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 943) to improve navigation on Black Warrior River, in the State of Alabama, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this bill when it was before the House a day or two ago several objections were urged against it, and I should like very much to call the attention of the committee to some of those objections that are not well founded.

In the first place, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this bill is very necessary in the interests of navigation. It is an urgent necessity that some legislation be passed at this session of Congress, for reasons which I will state.

Congress has already authorized the improvement of this river by the construction of three locks and dams, Nos. 17, 18, and 19. The Chief of Engineers has made a contract for the construction of Dam 17, and the contractor has already expended about $70,000 in the prosecution of that contract. The contract as let provides for a 21-foot lift at Lock 17. The engineers propose now to build a dam there with a lift of 63 feet, and they ask permission to change the contract so as to provide for a lift of 63 feet at Lock 17. If that is done, it will do away with the necessity of constructing the other two locks that have already been authorized, and two other locks and dams which have been favorably recommended, and which Congress, without doubt, would authorize hereafter.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there to be more than one lock in connection with this?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; there will be two locks, with a lift of 31½ feet each.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to suggest that it would not be practicable to have one 63-foot lock.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They are going to put in two locks there.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, as a matter of fact, you will not do away with as many locks as you anticipate.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. You will make 2 locks and 1 dam at 17 do the work of 5 locks and dams, with an initial saving to the Government of $257,000 in first cost.

The other items of cost that will be saved to the Government by the construction of this 63-foot dam will be as I am about to state. Some gentlemen seem to have an opinion that this is an additional expenditure that is being called for, and I ask such gentlemen to pay attention to these figures, because if this project is adopted, it will save practically a million dollars, consisting, first, of the item of $257,000, which I mentioned a few moments ago. If this contract is let, this company agrees to pay for flowage rights to the amount of $150,000 for land that will be overflowed by reason of the extra height of the dam at 17. The Government will have to pay for those flowage rights if the company does not.

Mr. MADDEN. There would be no flowage rights to pay for if the dam was left at the original height, would there?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; there will be exactly the same. The 63-foot dam is going to do exactly what the other dams would have done. There will be no difference at all in that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I judged from the discussion of this bill on another legislative day that the objection was not to the deducting the number of locks, but it was to giving to a private monopoly, a corporation, the use of the dam and the right to sell the power as they see fit, and for prices that they may see fit to ask.

Now, let me ask the gentleman from Mississippi, if it is so important for that occasion that these locks should be reduced, why not strike out that provision of the bill that relates to giving consent for 50 years' lease to this corporation? If that was done, the bill would pass in 15 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The suggestion I made as to that legislation to which the gentleman refers was that the House ought not to strike out the enacting clause, but ought, if they were opposed to letting the contract, to simply strike out the provisions which related to the contract, and by all means pass the bill and authorize the engineers to change the now-existing project, and that to my mind is the important part and the only matter that makes this urgent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I feel certain that if the gentleman from Mississippi will offer that as an amendment, the amendment will be agreed to and the bill will pass in 15 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will not offer it myself. I believe it is a good thing for the Government to enter into the contract, but if other gentlemen do not agree, I hope the House will not agree to the proposition made the other day to strike out the enacting clause, but simply amend the bill by striking out the provision as to the contract.

Now, as to the contract. We let the contract to the company named in the bill, and it has been objected that the matter ought to be left open so that if others cared to come in and bid for the privilege they would have an equal opportunity to do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What effect will the change of the locks have on the surrounding land—how much additional area will be covered by the dam?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Two thousand acres.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Two thousand acres will practically be appropriated by the dam. Is the Government made responsible for the flowing of that land?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the bill is amended as the gentleman stated; but that is always the case wherever we build locks and dams, we have to pay for flowage rights. But this company proposes to pay those flowage rights. If we do not adopt this plan but go upon the plan recommended by the engineers, the Government will have to pay not only for these 2,000 acres but for the flowage rights over several thousand more acres. Now, the company comes in and agrees to pay all flowage rights, estimated to be about $150,000. This particular company is named in the bill for this reason. The State of Alabama has granted to this particular company whatever rights the State could grant, and these rights include the right to build a reservoir and dam up at Sanders Shoals, some 35 or 40 miles above this lock—that is, it may have to be done hereafter in order to conserve the navigation interests. It may be necessary in the future for the Government to go and build this dam, because at times there may not be enough water there to meet the demands of commerce in the pools created. It is one of the possibilities, if not the probabilities, that the Government itself will have to build a dam at Sanders Shoals at a cost of a million and a half dollars as a storage reservoir.

Now, this particular company has secured from the State of Alabama the right to build this storage reservoir dam up there. They have acquired all the rights. No other company can come in and develop power at Lock 17 unless they first buy out this particular company that is already in there. Now, that is the reason why this particular company is mentioned in the bill.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SWITZER. What assurance have you that the water company will accept this contract?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. We have the assurance that if this bill passes it will authorize the engineers to make the change in the plan and build a 63-foot dam at Lock 17. If the company does not accept the conditions, if they think the conditions imposed are too hard, well and good.

Mr. SWITZER. Then the Government will have to pay for the overflowed land?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; but even then the Government will be saving several hundred thousand dollars over the old project as it now exists. If we do not pass this bill the 21-foot dam will be put in at Lock 17, and then hereafter it will never be possible to develop any water power there. If the company does not accept it, the Government will go on building the 63-foot dam provided for, without any extra cost, and provide for sluiceways that may hereafter develop water power, and if this company does not accept it the next Congress or the Congress 10 years from now can make the same advantageous contract with some other company. But if the bill is defeated and a 21-foot dam is put in at 17, then it will never be possible to develop water power there at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman some time during the course of his remarks about an amendment that I wish to offer. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman if he is not ready for that now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am ready for it. I have no particular course of thought mapped out.

Mr. MANN. In reference to the power to control the charges which are to be made by this company, would the gentleman, or, so far as he knows, those in favor of the bill, be willing to accept an amendment providing for the insertion in the bill of a condition that there shall be inserted in the contract a provision that the Secretary of War shall have the right at any time after hearing to prescribe the reasonable maximum charges which shall be made by the company for the sale, lease, or other disposition of the power not furnished to the Government?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; personally I should be very glad to see that amendment adopted. I am sure the amendment will be acceptable to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say that we have one similar to that.

Mr. MANN. It may be a better one than this, then. Of course, the gentleman knows that, under this bill, there is no provision for the enforcement of any of the provisions in it. There is no forfeiture, no anything, no method of enforcing any provision of the bill or the contract, unless the Government goes into court and files a suit for a mandamus or something of that sort. Does not the gentleman think we ought to have a provision in this bill requiring the company at its risk to carry out the provisions of the bill and the contract?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not anticipate any such danger as the gentleman suggests. I think, under the provisions of the bill, this company will have to pay or they will not be permitted to use the water. They have to give a bond first in such amount as the Secretary of War deems right.

Mr. MANN. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not mistaken in that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; but after they have done certain work it may be reduced to an amount not to exceed $50,000.

Mr. MANN. And that means that it will be the amount of the bond. Suit on a bond is a very idle luxury.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. My suggestion is—and I expect to offer it at the proper time—an amendment providing this:

The determination by the Secretary of War of the amount of rental due to the Government from the company at any time shall be conclusive and binding on the company, and if the company at any time fails to pay to the Government the amount of rental due within a time to be fixed by the Secretary of War, or fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act on its part to be complied with, or fails to comply with any of the provisions of the contract on its part to be complied with, or fails to comply with any regulations or directions which the Secretary of War may lawfully make or give, or fails to observe the charges for the sale, lease, or other disposition of its power which may be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of War, then the rights herein granted shall become null and void as to the company and shall thereby become vested in the United States. At the end of the period of 50 years hereinbefore provided for all rights, interests, and property of the company acquired under or by virtue of this act shall pass at once absolutely to the Government, unless Congress otherwise provide.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the floor for one hour.

Mr. SIMS. Fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi was granted 15 minutes by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield 15 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman from Florida has any time. He used his time the other day.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. At any rate, I am recognized for the next 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing, but I was trying to find out what my rights were.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear the gentleman's amendment read, and, personally, I will say this: What I am very anxious to have is authority granted to the Chief of Engineers to change the existing project.

Whether I believe the gentleman's amendment ought to be adopted or not I would be willing to accept it in order to prevent the defeat of this measure. I can not say offhand whether the gentleman's amendment ought to be agreed to or not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not contend that the Engineering Department believes that the plans of these locks and dams ought to be changed unless somebody is to use the water power?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find in the report of the engineers exactly the reverse.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; the gentleman thinks not.

Mr. MANN. It is in the report as printed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The engineers hold that they ought to be authorized to make the change for the 63-foot lift for several reasons. First, because it will be cheaper to the Government in its initial cost; second, because it will be much cheaper in maintenance; third, because it will take a very much less time, and in that way conserve the interests of navigation.

The engineers do believe that there ought to be such foundations laid for this dam as will make the production and development of horsepower hereafter possible; and, of course, they believe—I suppose we all believe—that whenever a favorable contract to the Government can be made that power ought to be developed hereafter, and that, of course, will still further reduce the comparative cost between the two projects in favor of the 63-foot dam. But the material thing is to authorize the engineers now to change the project so that this contractor will not go on—as he certainly will go on—and complete Lock No. 17 with the 21-foot lift, and thereby render it impossible hereafter ever to develop any water power. And, as suggested by my friend from Alabama, the engineers do think this is a favorable contract.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think I understood the gentleman from Mississippi a short time ago to say that one of the main reasons why the engineering board would like to change the plan of the project is that under the old plan they would have difficulty in finding a sufficient quantity of water to provide for the necessary navigation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I said the engineers suggested that as a possibility of the future.

Mr. MADDEN. And that the engineers think it might be necessary for them to be authorized to build a reservoir dam for the creation of a reservoir above.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They thought possibly in the future that there might be such commerce developed there that in low water there would not be enough water to operate the dam successfully.

Mr. MADDEN. Had the engineers in charge in mind the difficulty of procuring sufficient water under the project which was formerly adopted to admit of any kind of navigation under this plan which they first recommended?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The engineers, just as I stated a moment ago, suggested it as a possibility of the future that there might be such commerce developed there that would require the locks to be opened so frequently that in periods of low stages of water it might be desirable and might be in the interest of navigation to construct a reservoir at Sanders Shoals. They do not recommend it now at all, and they have never recommended it; they simply suggested that as one of the possibilities.

Mr. MADDEN. And because of the possibilities of the future they want to abandon the plan which they originally recommended.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, no; the gentleman is very much mistaken about that. That is not the moving consideration at all in the engineers' report.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I hope I have made that plain to the gentleman. The 63-foot dam will have an initial cost of $257,000 less than the cost of the others and will save, in numerous items, all of which I could read here, which will amount almost to $1,000,000, by adopting the 63-foot project in place of the project of five locks and dams.

Mr. WILLIS and Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. MANN. In that connection will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Referring to the report of the Board of Engineers, printed on page 5 of the report of the committee, this language is used:

> The increase in cost, as compared with the plan recommended by the district officer, is estimated by him at $150,513 for a 66-foot dam, and would, of course, be less than this for a 63-foot dam.

Now, is not this a plain statement that this plan proposes a cost larger than the district officer's plan does?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not think the gentleman understands it.

Mr. MANN. I understand the English language quite well.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is an increase over another project—to put at Lock 18, instead of a 14-foot lift, a 42-foot lift.

Mr. MANN. Very well. It is an increase to the Government over the plan recommended by the district officer?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But not over the plan adopted by the Government.

Mr. MANN. I understand that part of it. You are seeking now to force us to adopt a 63-foot lift plan, which the engineer officer says would cost more than the plan which the district officer recommended. They not only say it there, but in three or four other places.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman is mistaken. There is a proposal for a 42-foot lift at Dam 18. If the Government builds that, they will have to pay $150,000 flowage up there, for instance, that will not be paid if they build the lock at No. 17, 63 feet. The proposition to build a 42-foot dam at No. 18 would effect a saving of about $400,000—I do not recall the figures—over the original project which has been adopted. The gentleman understands that they have adopted another project?

Mr. MANN. Suppose the original project has been adopted. The gentleman proposes now to have another specific project adopted, and says it will cost less than the original one, but I call his attention to the fact that the district officer has recommended a third project, which will cost less than the 63-foot project.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The initial cost will be $150,000 less. But when we come to the 63-foot dam, if the contract is let with this company, the company will have to pay $50,000 toward constructing that dam, which will be for the foundation for the power house which will be part of the dam, and the company will also pay for flowage rights, which we will have to pay otherwise and this will amount to $150,000. We will further save $6,000 a year over the 42-foot dam proposition in the cost of operation, and if this is capitalized at 4 per cent—and the gentleman can not suggest capitalizing it at a higher interest, that will be $150,000, and we must remember that a 42-foot dam produces no water power. So, as a matter of fact, the 63-foot dam will cost less money than the 42-foot dam.

Mr. MANN. Then the engineer officer does not know what he is talking about. He says the increased cost, referring to this plan you speak of——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. That is the district engineer.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is the report of Col. William T. Rossell, of the Corps of Engineers, and of the board of engineers for rivers and harbors.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. He is quoting from Maj. Flagler's report.

Mr. MANN. He is not quoting from anybody.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is the only way he could have gotten the information.

Mr. MANN. He may have gotten it from the district engineer, but he does not so report.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will read the report——

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman read it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have read it several times. Is the gentleman familiar with it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, I think I am. And I have personally consulted with the engineers frequently on the subject. That report you have in your hand, of Col. Rossell, recommends the 63-foot project.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It does not recommend anything of the kind. What the senior officer says, and what the Board of Engineers says, is:

> The increase in cost, as compared with the plan recommended by the district officer, is estimated by him at $150,513 for a 66-foot dam, and would, of course, be less than this for a 63-foot dam.

Then they figured the interest on that, and the board says, in order to justify the original expenditure and to enable the power development to be made—that is, adopting the plan which the gentleman urges—that a minimum annual payment of $5,000 should be required after the completion of Lock and Dam No. 17. That is what I wished to call to the attention of the gentleman when he said we ought to change the plan, regardless of whether we utilize the water power or not. The board of officers say we ought not to change the plan unless we know we will receive a rental from the water power.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to explain the difference, and I think I have made it plain to this committee, that whereas the 63-foot dam costs $150,000 more than the 42-foot dam as an initial proposition, it costs $6,000 a year less to operate it, which, capitalized at 4 per cent, would be $150,000; and that would wipe out that difference, and in addition to that the company comes in and proposes to spend $50,000 in the construction of the 63-foot dam, which will make it, therefore, cost $50,000 less than the 42-foot dam. And in addition to that, they propose to pay $150,000 for the flowage rights, which is a saving of about $200,000 over the 42-foot dam.

And in addition they propose to pay a minimum of $15,000 a year for the water power, and that, capitalized at 4 per cent, would be about $400,000. It will be a saving to the Government, if this bill is adopted now, of approximately a million dollars; and the provisions which the gentleman suggested which will enable the War Department to regulate the charge that this company may make against its customers will be accepted. And that being true, I submit that there can be no valid objection urged against it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. On page 3 of the report the statement is made by the Chief of Engineers, which says, "The consideration being the exclusive grant to the company of the right to use and dispose of the surplus power." Now, to my mind the crux of this whole business is not how much the Government is going to save just now, but it is this—and that is what I want to know about—what is there in this bill to protect the rights of the consumer? We are proposing to give to this company the rights of the people. How are the rights of the people protected by this bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the amendment suggested by the gentleman is acceped, the Government or the department will have the right to regulate those charges. I have stated heretofore a good many times before this debate, as well as during this debate, that that provision ought to be in every bill, but it was not put in this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not hear that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This is not a very large water power to start with. Another reason is that it is in a country where coal is cheap and plentiful. The Government wants to save a million dollars by entering into a contract. The contract is to run only 50 years, while heretofore such rights have been granted for a term of 99 years, or in perpetuity, and these were the considerations that moved the committee to leave that provision out, because they feared that this company would not, as they claimed, be able to finance their proposition if too many handicaps were put on them.

Now, in this particular section, where coal is plentiful and where coal is cheap, it was not believed that they could extort unreasonable charges.

Let me make this further statement: The gentleman understands that we are dealing with this proposition not as a sovereign but as a property owner. The Government of the United States can not act there as a sovereign. The only rights which it has there are the rights of a property owner. This is in the State of Alabama. The Government has gone there and bought the property upon which to erect a dam, and this power company is to locate its house on our dam. The power is to be sold exclusively within the State of Alabama. They will not be able to produce very much. The estimate is 16,000 horsepower, and we provide that they shall pay us for 15,000 horsepower as a minimum.

Mr. WILLIS. What does the gentleman think of the policy of the Government of the United States spending its money for an improvement and thereupon entering into a partnership with a private corporation? Does he think that is good policy for the Government of the United States?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is a pretty broad question.

I think it is good policy for the Government of the United States in the performance of a function which is clearly Federal. When we go there solely to conserve navigation interests, and in the prosecution of that purpose we build a dam which necessarily creates water power, we must either let that water power run to waste, give it away, or sell it. I think the wise thing for the Government to do is to sell it.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman has been very kind, and I will not interrupt him further. If the wise thing to do is to sell the power, why is it not better for the Government to go on and make this improvement and then sell this great power for whatever it is worth—sell it to the highest bidder, instead of committing ourselves beforehand to a monopoly?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. For the reason I stated a few moments ago.

Mr. WILLIS. I was absent from the Hall and did not hear it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This company has gone to the State of Alabama and secured from that State all the rights to construct this dam, the reservoir, and so forth, and no other company could bid against them until they bought them out. That is why this particular company was named.

But what difference does it make to us what company gets it? We are going to fix the rate that they shall pay us. What difference does it make whether it is the Birmingham Power Co. or some other company, when we ourselves propose to fix the rate at which they shall take the power from the Government.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield on that proposition, as to the rate they pay?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. This bill provides that they shall pay $1 per horsepower per annum, does it not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. What is the usual price per annum for horsepower?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Government is charging from 61 cents to $2.85.

Mr. JAMES. What do the power companies get for it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. About $20 a year per horsepower, as I understand, as a rule. It depends entirely on the circumstances. In some places they charge $20 and in some places more.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not true that they sell this horsepower for from $35 to $40 per annum?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I think not.

Mr. JAMES. I am informed by a gentleman here who represents the Buffalo district that as high as $75 per horsepower is paid.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. JAMES. I do not suppose my informant is mistaken about his own district.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Possibly not; but the testimony here——

Mr. JAMES. I was informed by a Representative from Pennsylvania that horsepower is sold there for from $35 to $40 per annum.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. All through the South it sells for $20.

Mr. JAMES. I want to direct the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that you single out one corporation or individual.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The State of Alabama singled out that corporation.

Mr. JAMES. You single out this corporation and give it this right for this low price of $1 per horsepower. Now, then, if the Government is going to sell this power—and I reckon it has the right to do it—why would not it be a good idea for the Government to give everybody a chance and let this thing be submitted to the highest bidder?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have tried to explain that.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to suggest, in regard to the gentleman's explanation, that if the State of Alabama had any right to dispose of before the Government could construct a dam over a navigable stream, I am not informed of what that right is. I do not believe it had any.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman did not catch the force of my explanation. As to the price of the water power, the testimony before the committee from quite a number of gentlemen from Buffalo, gentlemen who were engaged in manufacturing enterprises and who were customers of the water-power company at Niagara, was that it cost them $40 to produce a horsepower by coal, and they could purchase it from the Niagara people for $20 a horsepower. If anybody pays $75 a horsepower, it occurs to me that they are paying a great deal too much. But I am sure that this particular company will never be able to produce any power that they can sell in that particular locality for $75 or $40.

Mr. JAMES. Now, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But whatever they do sell it for, the Government has the right to look at their books, not only the books where they produce and sell the water power developed at 16 and 17, but at the reservoir dam which they have the right to build under the laws of the State of Alabama, and which the State of Alabama did have the right to give them—the privilege to go in and build until the Government of the United States acts.

Mr. JAMES. With the action of the United States the right of the State of Alabama ceases.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Absolutely, if the two conflict.

Mr. JAMES. So that this corporation has no right by reason of the action of the State of Alabama superior to the rights of the United States Government. Now, what business is the Birmingham Light & Power Co. in besides that which its name would indicate; are they in the coal business?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have no knowledge of that; I have no information about the company. I know that the company has got from the State of Alabama the right to build this dam at Saunders Ford. The only power the Federal Government has in the world is to say that the dam shall be so constructed as not to interfere with navigation. They have secured that right from the State of Alabama, and no power company on this earth can go there and develop water power profitably at 17 unless they do construct this dam at Saunders Ford and create a great reservoir that will enable them to have a continuous flow, so that they can produce water power at a profit. It is immaterial to the Government who that corporation is. It is entirely immaterial to us, so long as we have the right to say you shall pay us thus and so, and if you do not do it you can not get the water.

Mr. JAMES. I understand; but there is such a thing as the Government getting better paid where it has many purchasers than where it only has one.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly.

Mr. JAMES. And you eliminate that where you specify but one company and put in the provisions as to what it shall pay.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Would the gentleman vote for this bill if a provision were incorporated in it authorizing the Federal Government to supervise and regulate the charges which the corporation could make?

Mr. JAMES. As to how I shall vote on the bill will be determined largely by the way it is amended. In the first place, I want to say that I do not take kindly to legislation that names the corporation in the body of the bill and offers to give it certain rights without submitting it to the rivalry of different individuals or corporations that might want to undertake the same work and pay the Government more money.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JAMES. This bill, when it was first brought in, did not offer to the consumer any protection at all. Then if the Government is going into a business of this sort and giving a corporation the right to handle the power I am utterly opposed to turning that corporation loose on the public to extort such charges as they please. Then, again, I do not take kindly to a bill that gives a corporation a franchise for 50 years. I think it is against the enlightenment of our civilization. This Government has not been here three times 50 years. Fifty years is a long time and many things can be developed in that time, many changes occur, and I do not think it is right that the Government of the United States shall take the course of spending millions of the people's money or hundreds of thousands of it in building a project of this kind and then turning it over to a corporation for $1 per horsepower per annum, when the corporation sells this power to our citizens for from 35 to 50 times the amount they pay the Government for it. I do not believe I would vote for it even if the limit of 50 years were brought lower, and I surely will not if the 50-years limit remained. I believe in leases under strict regulations of the charges to be made upon the consumers—the people. Then, too, we should let these rights out under competitive bids and not favor special corporations by legislation; and the leases should be for short periods.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, as to the 50-years' limit, heretofore Congress and the States have granted these franchises without any limitation whatever. Corporations which come to this Government asking this privilege, so far as I am advised, have all come with a franchise from the State which was perpetual. A few years ago we began to put some limitations on the franchises and limited them to 99 years. Afterwards Congress took the matter up and passed a general dam act and incorporated in that act a provision that hereafter there should be a limitation of 50 years.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Not now. In the State of Mississippi, from which I hail, corporations may be chartered for 50 years. I think that is the rule generally everywhere. When this bill came from the Senate there was a limitation of 99 years fixed, and we struck that out and made it 50 years. In addition to that, it is not an easy matter to finance one of these great companies, and if we put an unreasonable limitation on it, they will not be financed at all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not this company already financed?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is in existence.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is incorporated.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And has very valuable rights, as the gentleman just said.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So that it does not seem to me that the difficulty of financing it should cut much figure.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I stood here in the last session of Congress and opposed a very great proposition, similar to this, except very much larger, because the franchise was for 99 years. I insisted upon a limit of 50 years. I am delighted to know that now there are so many gentlemen here who think that even 50 years is too long; but here is another consideration. We have a contract with these people that authorizes them to go in there for 50 years. Every 10 years we are to readjust the rental that they are to pay us. When the bill is finally perfected by this committee, I hope we will have all the power that the Federal Government ought to have to regulate the price that the company can charge, and to safeguard all of the interests of the people. If this is true, what difference does it make whether it runs for 50 years or 40 years, or, as some gentleman suggested, 30 years? I imagine that no gentleman wants to make it less than 30 years, if he really wants the power developed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask if the committee considered the Government creating and utilizing this power and selling it to the people in that locality?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have the drainage canal in our State that the State has control of, and it has been found to be a blessing to the people of Chicago and Illinois, due to the fact that the drainage board has brought down the price of power being utilized in that locality. It has been a great benefit to the manufacturers.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is no question of the power involved in that. Of course, the State of Illinois has the right to do that, to sell the water power to the people.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Has not the Government got the same right where it is creating the power?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is a very serious question whether the Federal Government has the right to go there and install a plant, develop the power, and retail it to the people.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact, where the Government creates this power by creating the dam, that it has the same right the State has when it creates the power?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I think not.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. It has been asserted here a good many times yesterday and day before yesterday and to-day in regard to developing power. Now, there is not any development of this power except what the Government does, and the building of the dam develops the power; that is all there is to it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And all this company has to do, or anybody has to do, is simply to attach their machinery to the power already developed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And when they are prevented from using it any longer they simply take their machinery away and can use it in another place.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Absolutely.

Mr. RAKER. And therefore the Government is giving about $4,000,000 to these people to use——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I think not.

Mr. RAKER. I mean by that——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The dam does not cost $4,000,000; the dam does not cost half that much.

Mr. RAKER. How much does this dam cost raised to 63 feet? I understood it was to cost about $4,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; about $2,000,000. Approximately $2,000,000; but the gentleman understands we are not building it for the purpose of creating water power.

Mr. RAKER. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The dam is put there for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Warrior River, and whether power is developed or not developed we are going to put the dam there.

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And we are not giving this dam to this company, we are selling the use of the water power to the company; they are paying us $150,000 for flowage rights and they are putting in a million and a half reservoir dam, $50,000 toward the construction of the dam at Lock 17, and are to pay us at the rate of not less than $15,000 a year for the water. In other words, in a few years, if we make this contract, the Government will be reimbursed for all the money it will have spent to improve the navigation on that river simply by the sale of power.

Mr. RAKER. The only question involved is that the Government is going to improve this river by raising the dam to 63 feet.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. It is better for navigation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And puts it in a better condition than the way the plans are drawn now by the engineers. The Government, therefore, expends this money and the only question is this: To whom shall we lease or give the right to use this power? Is not that the question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes——

Mr. RAKER. That is all there is to it, whether it shall be at public auction at a price or whether it shall be contracted to a private individual with the price fixed in advance. That is all there is to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Not a single horsepower will be developed by the building of the dam to 63 feet. All the power that is to be developed here is to be developed by raising that dam by flashboards 3 feet, and all the power that can be used under this bill is provided——

Mr. RAKER. But you could not raise the water by the 3-foot flashboards without the 63-foot dam; and, therefore, the Government raises the dam to 63 feet and develops the power for navigation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. It does not develop any power, because you can not use it as long as you use it for navigation. You have to keep that 63 feet of water. It is the water of the dam above that goes above 63 feet that makes one single particle of power.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman merely in regard to a question brought out by the gentleman from Kentucky as to the terms of this franchise. The only argument that I have heard from any member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors against reducing the term of this franchise has been as to the difficulty of financing the proposition. Now, I want to know in the first place whether or not this proposition is not already financed? I understood from the gentleman that a dam had already been built.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No. They have a right from the State to build it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I gathered from the name of this corporation that it is already a very large corporation, engaged probably in supplying heat and light to the city of Birmingham?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes. I would like to know.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the company so far is nothing but a company authorized as a corporation by the State of Alabama for the purpose of building a dam above Sanders Shoals in what is now the navigable part of that river, and decided by the engineers so far to be unworthy of navigation at any time, with authority to develop power from that dam. Further than that, the corporation has done nothing except to make the necessary investigation to find out whether it would pay to develop water power at that dam. The company has not expended any money yet. It has not built a particle of that dam. It has not done anything but to try to decide whether or not they could develop power sufficiently there to make it a business proposition. On the investigation of the engineers that they have had there from the State of New York, it is reported that they could not make that a paying proposition, that the only way they could develop power on the Black Warrior River was by the use of that dam in connection with the Government dam, provided the 63-foot lift dam was made at Dam 17. Then the proposition came up as to whether or not this company could obtain a contract with the Government in cooperation with the Government in the working of the water power to be developed at Lock 17.

That is the situation. The engineers have proposed to finish this work by the erection of five dams. When this proposition came before them as to raising the dam at 17 to a 63-foot lift, they investigated it and found that as a navigation proposition it was the best one that had been offered, and that it saved money and saved time. As anyone will know, it is an easier job and a quicker job to erect one dam 63 feet high than to erect five dams at a distance of 5 to 10 miles apart, in an inaccessible country, without any road, and without any navigation until you make the navigation by water or build railroads, as the present contractor at 17 has done, for the purpose of carrying out the contract to make at Lock 17 a dam with a 21-foot lift. Now, that is the situation, and I hope that I have answered the gentleman. If not, I would be glad to continue and to answer any question that the gentleman is disposed to ask. In my judgment this power company will never move, so far as the coal proposition is concerned, and has no idea of investing in coal. My best information is that it owns no coal interests. My information is from investigation, and I believe I have had it pretty thoroughly done, that when three years ago they got the right from the State of Alabama to build that dam they believed they would have power enough, and upon investigation they found that it was not worth a bawbee; that they could not develop power there at that time in paying quantities. That dam has no number, because it does not belong to this system. It is not a dam for a lock, but a dam for the development of power beyond the point of navigation in the river.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I desire to thank the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] for yielding to the gentleman from Alabama for this lucid explanation. He has given me information which I did not have before. I was merely inquiring as to what kind of a corporation this was. I was not aware at the time. Do I understand it is on paper and with no tangible asset whatever?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. So far as I know about the Birmingham company, it has simply been incorporated under the laws of the State of Alabama and has secured from the State this right to construct a dam at Sanders Ford.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How recently was that incorporated?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Between two and three years; and the first and only step, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, and in my judgment the first and only step that anybody else could have taken in order to get into this business, was to employ engineers to investigate the situation. They never had until last May—I mean of this year; or it may have been April, though I am not certain—a report from the engineers upon their proposition.

It was satisfactory to them to go further into the investigation. In other words, when the Government goes to build a lock, when the Government goes to improve a river, the first thing is a survey and an estimate. We have surveys and estimates now, down in our State, and probably the gentleman from Ohio has them in his State, that have taken years to secure reports upon. In the gentleman's river, the Ohio River, they have been 70 years at it and have not finished it yet.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It has been a long time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. And if the condition had not been changed two years ago, when I joined the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, it would be 125 years.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I heartily approve the action of the gentleman in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended, if that is permissible.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. He yielded to me for an interruption awhile ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to assure the gentleman from Mississippi that there appears to be no difference of opinion upon this bill on the question of navigation. The sole difference is as to the grant of these water-power rights to a private corporation. Inquiry made both of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] and of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] has failed to reveal the capitalization of the Birmingham Heat, Light & Power Co., the nature of incorporation, the names of the officers, or any of those particulars which would tend to show the responsibility of the company which seeks this great privilege from the Government.

Now, may I ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether he knows if there is anything in this bill that would prevent those gentlemen who constitute the Birmingham Heat, Light & Power Co. from disposing of their franchise to another great corporation the moment after the contract is signed?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, nothing at all. I think unquestionably they have that right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not possible, in view of the fact that there is just some degree of uncertainty in regard to this company, that there might be a question a little later on as to those who were the real promoters of the company? Is not that possible?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi I do not think I catch the gentleman's question correctly. There may be some question as to who they are. There can be no more question about it than there is in my mind at this moment. I have not the remotest idea who the incorporators are, and, from my standpoint, it is utterly immaterial. It is utterly immaterial also from the Government's standpoint as to who composes this company. So long as we have the Government's rights safeguarded, it is immaterial to me whether this, that, or the other gentleman composes this company, or whether this is a subsidiary company of some other company.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the Government's capital in this enterprise is going to be at least a million and a half dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Government outlay will be very materially reduced.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman means it will be reduced by the change of plans?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; and if we adopt this bill we will save money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; you will save money on the authorization. The Government has authorized an expenditure—that is to say, the Congress has authorized an expenditure—of a certain amount of money for four locks and dams. By a change of plans, such as is proposed in this bill, one dam would be constructed which would cost less than four dams. Therefore the saving of money would be wholly in the future.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But the money has been authorized and appropriated, and the contractor has expended $70,000 in the prosecution of his contract at Lock No. 17.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it not influence the gentleman somewhat in his opinion of this bill if I were to recite to him some of the recent sensational stories in magazines and newspapers concerning the grant of certain franchises and rights to companies, the names of whose officers have not been satisfactory or reassuring to the public, in Alaska and elsewhere?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That would not influence me any.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not possible that if the grant of water-power rights should be made to this specified company it might in course of time be developed that some great syndicate, like the Guggenheims or the Standard Oil or the United States Steel Corporation, might be behind it all?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I do not think that would be an embarrassment to the gentleman from Mississippi. I think it would be a great calamity if the Federal Government should permit the water powers of this country to be given away or to pass into the control of any corporation or company beyond the regulating power of the Government. It is a source of much satisfaction to me that at the last session of Congress I was the first to raise my voice against such a possibility when it was proposed to give away, on the St. Lawrence River, the greatest water power which man has ever undertaken to develop. The debate which has occurred here during the past few days has been most satisfactory to me. This present project is a small one, but there are others which are standing at the door, and the spirit manifested here in this debate convinces me that when they are admitted it matters not who may stand sponsor for them or how big the project may be in its commercial possibilities, the rights of the people, who are the owners of all our water powers, will not be given away, but will be safeguarded so far as the power lies in this House to safeguard them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, when this bill first came up for consideration the other day, I had no idea of making any remarks upon it; but the trend of opinion expressed upon the floor of the House in the discussion of this bill has, I admit, earnestly attracted my attention. I believe it to be a very important measure, and one that establishes a very vital and important precedent. From my knowledge and study of the great question of conservation, I believe that this bill is directly and intimately connected with and represents the true theory of that great doctrine as promulgated throughout this country, as I understand it, and as I have tried to assist in its development.

It has never been declared by the leading men who have promoted this doctrine of conservation that the Federal Government goes into matters of this kind for the sole purpose of putting restraints and conditions on the granting of the right to develop its property or its great privileges, as would destroy or even delay its development for the benefit of the public. It is not intended to do that. As I understand the meaning of conservation, the Federal Government intends to see to it that its available resources shall not remain in the same unused condition that they were when "the morning stars first sang together," but that it shall give the people the benefit of the development of its resources, safeguarded always with the proper regard for the rights of the people. That is what it is intended to do. That is what "conservation" means.

But if you read this discussion from beginning to end, it seems to me that in the estimation of many gentlemen the question is whether $1 per horsepower should be paid by the company to the Government or whether a limit of 50 years is a proper one.

In my judgment, that does not at all reach the purpose of conservation, which is to develop this power which has been running to waste for years and years and doing nobody any good. In view of the inadequacy of the facilities of transportation of railroads, and for the benefit of the public, the Government comes in and says: "We will take a hand in this matter for the purpose of developing the navigation of these public streams and converting them into useful highways of transportation." When my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] was interrogated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] he did not give the full answer that I would have given. In my judgment, it will be, and ought to be, the policy of the Government to charge these companies or individuals something for the use of the electrical energies or power generated by the dams which the Government builds by the use of public moneys. Do you tell me that it is a common-sense proposition, or a proper one, that the Government should spend millions of dollars in constructing a dam for the purpose of aiding navigation, which at the same time incidentally produces water power, and then that some individual or company can come along and appropriate that power and make money out of it, and the Government get no toll or rental from that company? Why, no. Nobody contends that.

And I go further and say, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], that upon the same principle, upon the same theory, and upon the same reasoning, the Government has the right to enter into a partnership with an individual or corporation in constructing these dams, always looking to the improvement of navigation upon the part of the Government, but also to improve navigation in conjunction with the development of water power. I ask you the question, What is the difference in principle whether the Government builds the dam and rents it, or whether it allows an individual or a corporation to come in and contribute part of the expense of construction and ratably adjust the toll rental or excise ratably according to the amount contributed?

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman did not quite understand the point I sought to make.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thought I did.

Mr. WILLIS. What I was getting at was this point, that here we are entering into a partnership with this corporation. My contention was that there was nothing in this bill to protect the consumers. There is nothing here reserving any right to fix the rate to the consumer of this power. What does the gentleman think of that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think there is no question but that this bill makes provision for that.

Mr. WILLIS. How so?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because it puts it under the control and direction of the Secretary of War. Are you going to presume that anything wrong can be done through him in such a proceeding as that?

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will look at the bill he will see that it is put under the control of the Secretary of War only so far as the rates charged the company. I am talking about the rates that the company charge to the consumers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no fear of that. I have given that some study, and I say that in a district like the Birmingham district, one of the greatest coal regions where coal is so abundant, everybody knows that coal is a competitor that stands at the door of that water-power company all the time, and you never can get rid of it. Whenever you sell electricity for less than the market price of coal, that minute the company goes to wreck. It has no other alternative. So that coal is a competitor in that section, and not only is coal a competitor, but there is a large acreage of wood. The charge for electricity must necessarily underbid coal. And, gentlemen, we are losing sight, as I fear, of the underlying principle that the Government is governed in the control and conservation of its resources. It is to advance the public interests. We must not be too eager to throw so many restraints, restrictions, and obstacles around the grant of these franchises that our country can not be developed. If so, all of these forces will run to waste as they have in years past been doing.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want the gentleman from Alabama to straighten me out if it is possible. I am confused as to what right the Federal Government has as to the use of the water there for any other purpose than the purpose of navigation. The power to run machinery with the water is not a navigable right. What interest or right has the Federal Government in the water for that purpose?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will answer the gentleman, and also the gentleman from Kentucky, that the State has a very valuable right and, in direct answer to your question, in its power to improve navigation can aid in developing water power. I could easily give instances.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is the State or the Government the owner of the riparian rights at that point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not answer the gentleman particularly about that. The State of Alabama is the riparian owner, unless some other right superior intervenes. The State not only owns that, but it owns the bed of the river from low-water mark.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield to me to answer the gentleman?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Before dam and lock 17 was authorized, or at the time it was authorized, the Government was authorized to buy whatever land was necessary.

Mr. GRAHAM. What Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The United States Government, and it bought between 22 and 25 acres on both sides of the river at Lock 17. I do not know how much it bought at Lock 18, and I do not know how many acres it got at Lock 19, because I have not seen the deeds of those particular locks and did not make a memorandum of the amount of acreage bought by the Government. The gentleman's question, as I understand it, is a very pertinent question. The Government of the United States is the riparian owner of Dam and Lock 17.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is nothing in the bill or report to show it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. There is nothing in the bill, necessarily. The report was very short, and there is nothing in that.

Mr. GRAHAM. The gentleman has answered fully the difficulty that I had in my mind. The Government of the United States is the riparian owner.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The owner, whether it be the Government, the State, or an individual, is the riparian owner.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield to me to answer the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Ohio asked what provision there was in this bill to safeguard the rights of the consumer, and called attention to the fact that the Secretary of War had the power to fix the rates against the lessee and that that power might not be sufficient to regulate the charges that the company might make to the consumer. I take it that the Federal Government, as the proprietor of this dam, and as the riparian proprietor as shown here, when it grants to any company the right to use the power generated by the dam can attach to the lease such conditions as it chooses, among which it can attach the condition that it shall have the right to regulate the charges made by the lessee to the private consumers of power. And that power is a proprietary right and not a legislative or sovereign right. As I understand it, the United States has no sovereign right to exercise power over water in a State except for navigation.

It gets that right, if at all, by virtue of its ownership of the dam, and its consent to the use of that dam as the owner of the dam for other purposes. The sovereignty over that water is in the State of Alabama, and the State of Alabama has plenary power to regulate the charges of public utilities. If there was not a word in this bill regulating the charges of public utilities to the private owner, the State of Alabama still has the power to regulate the charges of this public utility to the consumers within the State of Alabama, and unless the State of Alabama chooses to relinquish that power, she ought to retain it, and I doubt very much whether as a general principle the precedent ought to be established that the State must relinquish the power over the control of the charges of public utilities whenever the United States Government undertakes to make use of the powers generated by dams erected by the United States Government. It seems to me a matter of precedent that the State has the right to retain the control over its State corporations, over their charges to the citizens of Alabama, over the use of public utilities within the State, wherever a power exists, except the Federal power of navigation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no question about the rights of the State. What Alabama has done in the interests of the development of water power will be referred to later on.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, if the Government of the United States is going to put into this bill a provision permitting the United States Government to regulate charges, then that is incidental to the bill, but whether that is a precedent that ought to be established in all cases is a very grave doubt in my mind. I am heartily in favor of conservation, where it means some benefit to the people in control by the government of these great utilities, but whether that power ought to rest in the local or the Federal Government is a matter that ought not to be established as a precedent in this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Just in response to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has said. In view of the language on page 11, line 6:

> And for converting to its own use, benefit, and profit the power developed,

And so forth.

And in view of what is admitted here in the report of the committee, or rather in the report of the Army engineer at page 3 of the committee report, where it is said that the consideration is the exclusive grant to the company of the right to use, and so forth—in view of those statements does not the gentleman think it would be wiser and safer to have in this bill a definite provision reserving to the United States the right to regulate the rates to consumers? Ought not that to be in the bill?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield any further. It is just this kind of diversions that is carrying the minds of a great many of the Members away from the real questions at stake here. What is the question before us? It is that this bill provides for a dam with a 63-foot lift, eliminating Dams 18 and 19. Those three dams were provided for by the Congress through the Rivers and Harbors Committee. A man who has ever been before the Board of Engineers—and I have been there a number of times—knows how difficult it is to get them to indorse a project.

This board of review has come forward and indorsed this report, that it was to the interests of the Government to eliminate these three dams and build one with a 63-foot lift; that such a policy would save the Government about $250,000 and equally promote navigation as the construction of the three would do. That is about navigation now. That is on the subject of navigation and nothing but navigation. The board of review recommends the building of one dam instead of three, and the Government will save money by so doing. All of this hubbub and to-do about the water power and power and light company of Birmingham, Ala., comes in as an incident. There it is. It saves an expense, according to the report of the board of review of the River and Harbor Committee. But it so happens that in the construction of the 63-foot lift dam a water power will be developed generating about 15,000 horsepower, which would be otherwise forever destroyed if the original plan adopted by the Government for the construction of three dams was adhered to. A board chosen from the different sections of the different States, from the ablest engineers of the Government, has made this recommendation. A plain and sensible proposition. But it is significantly asked if this bill is defeated will the Government pursue its first recommendation of building the three dams. I say I believe it will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman speaks of the Birmingham company being an incident. Does not the gentleman recognize that a very great change of policy is involved in this bill? That is to say, that a precedent is being established putting the Government in control of water rights in a manner which has not existed heretofore in the form that is now proposed in this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, I do think it is a great and important policy, and it is one that I am trying to impress, that we ought to establish a right precedent in this case along the lines of broad and patriotic conservation, although it involves but 15,000 horsepower, for there are a great many public utilities of that kind throughout the whole country that involve very much larger electrical power.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Might not it be advisable, in this extra session of Congress, where only urgent business is being considered, to leave aside for the present, until it could be given more careful consideration, a question which involves an entirely new matter of policy so far as the Congress of the United States is concerned—that is to say, the control and regulation of water power?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I appreciate what the gentleman from Pennsylvania says because the gentleman and I have generally agreed in such matters.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Alabama is in favor of developing the country as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, and no one in the House wants to see improved this particular section of the country to which the House now directs its attention more than does the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does not the gentleman agree with me that the Government does not intend to throw such restrictions and conditions around the granting of these powers as will prevent the development of them?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the Government, of course, should be protected against an entangling alliance with a private corporation——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does not the gentleman think the Government, in view of the fact of the increased prosperity, the multiplication of valuable industries and wealth of the section where the water power is developed and navigation improved, ought to be willing to contribute to help the development and improve the prosperity? That is what I understand conservation in its last and true analysis means.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I surely desire to see the Government contribute to the development of every section of the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And it does not enter into it, does it, as a money-making project; it is not intended to be a money-making transaction on the part of the Government?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman does not see the danger signal I raised a moment ago, not offensively, I hope—because that never animates me in discussing any bill in the House—but the danger signal I raised a moment ago was this: That you come in here with a bill proposing that the Government, after an expenditure of $1,500,000, shall grant a franchise, which is the result of that expenditure, to a private corporation; and that while the local environment may be entirely satisfied with that grant, and it may be highly commendable and desirable so far as that particular locality is concerned, yet if the bill passes it will be wholly possible for any corrupt combination, for any scheming individual, for any man who seeks to control water-power rights or the power of electricity, to come into this House hereafter through this great Committee on Rivers and Harbors and say we want the Government to expend money on the improvement of navigation in Alaska; we want the Government to expend money in the improvement of navigation in Nevada, in Idaho, in the canyons of Arizona; we want the power that results from that expenditure granted to an individual or to a specific corporation, which may sell that power the moment the franchise is granted, and thus establish a monopoly which this House in its enacting of legislation ought to provide against. I want the gentleman to understand why I asked the question I did a moment ago.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know the gentleman asked the question in perfect sincerity, and I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no more objection to granting a right to a corporation than granting one to an individual. I have no fears about corporations or combinations of capital when the franchise is properly governed, controlled, and regulated by reasonable safeguards in securing the public from the evils of an evil and greedy monopoly. We should most vigilantly guard against granting these public franchises, against the manipulations of grafters, or under the control of undesirable citizens. But do not in an abundance of precaution forbid altogether by unreasonable terms the blessings that a full development of these franchises will bring to the people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, may I ask the gentleman this question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does he not think, in view of the growth of electricity, all of which has come in less than 50 years, and this marvelous development of ours due to the generation of electricity, that it is advisable before we pass bills granting special privileges to corporations for a term of years, that we shall have a fixed policy with regard to the Government's interest in such franchises, and with regard to the rights of the consumers who will be affected by the use of the franchise?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are only going to get a fixed policy in this way. We have created already the National Waterways Commission, and we have not anything in the way of a fixed policy as to water-power development in conjunction with the improvement of navigation, as I am advised. Congress is not going to reverse itself on this question that is coming up; and, therefore, I think this small matter of 15,000 horsepower is so important that we ought to weigh it and consider it carefully. I have this faith, that if the Members of this House make a mistake, we will in due time correct it. I think you will see that the bill, when you read it, follows strictly the line of conservation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submit to the gentleman that conservation is still a vague proposition. We have nothing tangible in regard to it, and no direct lines to work upon. And, perhaps, before we attempt conservation on a particular basis, so far as this Congress is concerned, we had better have a defined policy, rather than to proceed to prove it by special legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This water-power company will spend some $2,500,000 for its plant, appurtenances, and other expenses. What does the gentleman say is the first question that an agent who represents a water-power company has to answer on Wall Street or anywhere else where he goes to sell his bonds? What is the first question that the bond buyer propounds to him? The water company has to finance the project by the sale of bonds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assume the bond buyer wants to know what is behind the bond.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; he wants to know "what is behind the bonds." He wants to know what each horsepower costs him to develop. That determines the negotiability of his bonds—the reliability of the investment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is what he wants to know, because his bonds are resting on that, and if he answers, "My horsepower costs me $125 or $150 per horsepower," the capitalist turns around and walks off, saying, "I am not engaged in that business right now." Suppose he answers him, "It costs me not quite $100 a horsepower"? You will see him sitting down and negotiating with him. What gives the man who represents these companies the right to put it that way? Would 10 years' franchise, or 15 years, enable him to get capital and get credit? Why, no. He can not get it. It is the length of the franchise. Why, you know probably better than I do that great numbers of water development power companies have failed in the last few years after having spent untold millions. Why? Because the Government put such restrictions, obstacles, and restraints on them that they were unable to finance their bonds and their company. And yet we are making the argument here to-day that the trouble is because of the term of 50 years. Why, I will not hesitate to say that the matter of time of franchise, properly guarded, with proper restrictions around it, with a view of the development of these great powers that are lying idle and running to waste in our country ought not to be a material matter in this business. I would grant 50 years or more with proper power and supervision in the government of conditions necessary for development required by such a grant. I would not hesitate about it. It is not sacrificing anything on the part of the Government at all.

The Government must be protected; it must be guarded; it must be safeguarded in every way with such discretion and judgment as the Secretary of War and the men in charge of the War Department can throw around it. And I mean by the "Government" the public—the people. They have, as I said before, sir, that great competitor, coal, that stands at the front and back doors of these companies all the time. They are never without that competition. They are bound to undersell it or they go out of business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman, as I understand it, wants substance behind the bonds, so that the water company may be able to make proper representations to those who would buy the bonds?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it is a part of the Government's duty to aid them, by granting a franchise of adequate length, and be generous in behalf of the public in considering the great difficulties these water power companies encounter in the beginning.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not, I assume, in the sale of the bonds, but in the establishment of a franchise that will have some value behind it. May I ask the gentleman just this: Whether in the event of the passage of this law and the attempt of this company to sell these bonds it would be able to represent that it had substance, or that it had the value the subscribers to the bonds would be expected to inquire about?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Suppose the large dam is not built and the small dams are built, what will become of the water? Will it go to waste?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If this bill does not pass, the engineer is going to carry out the policy already inaugurated and go right along and improve the river by the building of the dams, three in number, heretofore recommended.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And there is nothing there for the consumers to get?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; the navigation of the river will be improved, but that policy destroys the water power forever. That is what has been understood here all the time. Is there any reason for the Government to destroy such an asset when it can be preserved and utilized without expense and with profit to the Government?

Mr. TRIBBLE. The consumers do not get any benefit, and the Government does not get any benefit unless you build a large dam. Is that correct?

Mr. RICHARDSON. You are forgetting the fact that the Government has authorized the building of three dams there already as a part of a great project. If this bill fails, the engineers will go along and build the dams. The Government has the benefit of navigation.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The Government has a waterway?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They have a waterway now.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I understand; but that is the purpose of this dam?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why, it is to dam the river, build locks, create slack water, and improve navigation, and the building of the high dam will aid in developing water power.

Mr. TRIBBLE. But if you build a large dam, then this corporation will come in and use the power.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If you build a large dam, you get rid of the other two at a less expense to the Government, as I am informed, and at the same time you develop that water power.

Mr. TRIBBLE. But if you do not build this dam, could anybody else come in and consume that power?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; it would be destroyed or wasted.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is what I want to bring out.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I submit this inquiry in good faith, because I am sure the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] will answer it if he can. The gentleman spoke a few moments ago about the financial organization of the company and about having such conditions preceding the grant as will enable the concern to get credit. I presume it is organized in the State of Alabama, because if it is not a chartered company I suppose the Government would not deal with them. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama if there is an Alabama law which prevents public-service corporations and stock companies from issuing securities in excess of the actual investment? I have a particular purpose in mind in making the inquiry. Is there anything in the Alabama law which would prevent this company from issuing bonds, stocks, and securities to the amount represented by the investment, plus the value of this 50-year franchise?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, I am not sufficiently informed as to the Alabama statute on that subject as to be able to undertake to answer that question with accuracy. I have been out of the active practice of the law for some years, and I admit that I have not kept up with the State legislation, and I can not answer positively about that.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The statement was made the other day by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that there are now existing in the vicinity of this proposed improvement four or five power companies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I remember what the gentleman said about that, and I am quite sure he was correct in his statement, except that there are other water powers in Alabama than those Mr. UNDERWOOD mentioned.

Mr. COX of Ohio. My inquiry is based upon that statement to a certain extent. There should be a safeguard in this bill so that this company can not sell out to any other corporation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does not the gentleman think the War Department will make such wise regulations as shall be in the interest of the public? I take it for granted that the Secretary of War is going to act in the interest of the people. He is not going to allow any advantage to be taken of it. We should not load down the bill with all that minutiæ.

Mr. COX of Ohio. We thought that would be done with respect to Alaska, but unfortunately it seems not to have been done. We are the representatives of the people, and since we can in full propriety, and acting within our authority, protect their rights now, then this is the moment to exercise our vigilance. One great weakness in our system of government is the temptation thrown about administrative officers through a lack of care and caution in framing the laws which are to be carried into effect by the departments. If ever a moral lesson was carried to the Congress and the people it came through the experience of the past year, when a lack of vigilance on the part of the lawmakers in the first instance almost enabled designing interests to steal priceless possessions in Alaska.

There are two feature in this bill which should be changed—one reducing the term of the franchise from 50 years to not more than 25 years, and then some power of the Government should be exercised in regulating the price charged for the use of the water power. Both of these precautions have been demonstrated as the part of wisdom and expediency in every large city in the country. The gentleman from Alabama has doubtless not been so circumstanced as to be able to observe the operations of public-service corporations in the large cities where valuable rights belonging to the people have been given away without consideration. No franchise should be granted for 50 years. The burdens of taxation are becoming so great in this country that relief in part must be procured by public-service corporations paying into the public treasuries some return and in an amount at least commensurate with the value of the rights which they enjoy under authority of Government. It is the abuse of official power which is bringing about a popular demand for a more genuine democracy as opposed to a representative government. In our State of Ohio two things have been influential in determining public opinion. Not long ago the State legislature passed what was known as the Rogers bill, giving large street railway corporations 50-year franchises in the city of Cincinnati; then the ever-recurring exposure of corruption in municipal and State legislative bodies has convinced the people that it can only be removed by lodging final authority with the electorate.

Jefferson, in his observation on the corruption that had crept into our Government in its earliest days, said that the only cure was the placing of final authority in the people, because not only the integrity but the good judgment of a vast majority could always be relied upon. If final authority be lodged in the people, especially in municipal and State affairs, it will be useless for any member of a legislative body to demand money for his vote on a meritorious measure, because appeal can be made to the people. Likewise it will not avail designing interests to purchase the passage of improper legislation, because it also can be submitted to the people for revocation. If any man can devise any other method of uprooting legislative corruption, then there may be no necessity for the adoption of the initiative and referendum, but experience has not only demonstrated the wisdom of the plan as a matter of high ethics, but as a sound economic principle.

It is said by those in opposition that there will not be sufficient care and deliberation in working out a result by the ballot. In the Ohio legislative session of 1910 there was an average of 4 laws a day passed, a total of 310. In New York there were over 800 laws enacted. If State legislatures can pass 4 laws a day, can the people in a 4-month's campaign of education wisely pass on a safely assumed average of 6 or 8 submitted by the initiative and referendum?

If the percentage of voters required for petition is low enough to both facilitate the correction of abuses and initiate obviously necessary legislation and high enough to escape momentary caprice, there is no possible danger to any legitimate interest or purpose in any State. As a detail in perfection of the plan, a shorter ballot should be devised by centering authority in fewer executive and administrative offices and thus permit the voter to approach the ballot with a lesser degree of confusion. The professional man, the manufacturer, the business man, the farmer, and the intelligent laborer make a prepondering majority in the State and Nation, and their grasp of public matters is not questioned. Bring to them an increased responsibility and they will meet their duty with a degree of intelligence and patriotism that justifies a republican form of government. To deny this is to admit a tendency toward monarchy.

Some people seem to believe that the principle of the initiative and referendum is an experiment. The truth of the matter is it is just the reverse. No one will deny that the fundamentals of common sense would suggest that in government the people act for themselves. In delegating the power to some one else, in short, when they resort to representative government, then they are working an experiment. The provision in the Constitution for the election of the President of the United States by the electoral college was doubtless inspired by the lurking belief in certain quarters that the people themselves could not be trusted to meet this responsibility. Originally it was the intent that the electors so chosen could act in pursuance of their own wishes, independent of the expressed desire of the people. In a very brief time the people did away with this, and without making a single change in the Constitution of the United States. Custom is always created by public opinion, and it was not long until the electors, when they met in their respective States, cast their votes in exact and precise harmony with the will of the majority as expressed at the previous election. The same sense of caution on the part of our fathers doubtless resulted in the archaic plan of electing United States Senators. Advancing civilization, however, has demonstrated the wisdom of placing this responsibility directly with the people. The two plans described were experimental and both found to be failures. Correction was made by lodging the authority directly with the people.

The initiative and referendum have been adopted by constitutional amendment in the States of Oregon, Oklahoma, Nevada, Missouri, Montana, South Dakota, Colorado, Arkansas, and Maine. In Utah the initiative and referendum amendment has been adopted, but the legislature has failed up to this time to enact the necessary legislation to put it into operation. The initiative and referendum amendment has been submitted by the legislatures but has not yet been voted upon by the people in the States of California, Washington, Wyoming, North Dakota, Nebraska, Florida, Idaho, and Wisconsin. The Oregon plan of popular election of Senators has been adopted in Oregon, Nebraska, Nevada, Minnesota, New Jersey, Ohio, Kansas, California, and Wisconsin. As indicating the hold that the great subject of popular government has upon public interest, I submit the following observations of a distinguished Ohioan and an able authority on the initiative and referendum:

One of the important events of 1912, which may affect profoundly the currents of our national life, is the constitutional convention, which is to be assembled in Ohio next January. Already this matter is of State-wide interest, although the delegates are not to be elected until November. What will Ohio do with the issues of progressive government, which must be raised in that convention? The issue is more clearly defined than that. What will Ohio do with the initiative and referendum? This has already become the overshadowing question. Every delegate must face it. No public man can escape it.

But there is no doubt what Ohio will do. The initiative and referendum is as popular as the Declaration of Independence. Moreover, it is not only popular—it is right. It is not only right—it is imperative. It is imperative that the people should have the instruments with which to preserve the representative character of their government. Of course there are those who becloud the issue. It is said that the initiative and referendum is an attack upon representative government. But this is completely answered by the wise provisions which are being urged for the initiative and referendum in Ohio. These provisions are worthy of note.

It is proposed that the signatures of 8 per cent of the electors of the State may be required to sign petitions demanding direct vote upon an act passed by the legislature. That means a petition of over 80,000 voters. If less than 80 men in the Ohio Legislature can make laws, it would seem to be safe to allow 80,000 men, outside the legislature, to demand a popular vote now and then upon what the legislature may do. But one never hears any dissent to the referendum. The opposition is all centered upon the initiative. It is hardly conceivable, however, that any person not hostile to popular government itself could object to the form of the initiative which is being urged in Ohio.

It is provided that any desired law must first be submitted to the legislature in order that it may be subjected to the discussion of a deliberative assembly. The measure may be defeated or passed in any form approved by the legislature. Then, if there is any dissatisfaction with the course of the legislature, 10 per cent, or 100,000 electors, may petition for a popular vote on the bill as originally introduced, with or without any of the amendments favored by the legislature. Thus on motion of one-tenth of the electors an appeal may be made from the legislature to the citizen body.

Under such guaranties of publicity and deliberation, what becomes of the claptrap about popular passion and mob rule? Such a measure would make for the perfection of representative government. This is true political conservation. It changes the letter to preserve the spirit of our Government. It is further proposed that constitutional amendments may be submitted to direct vote on petition of 12 per cent of the electors of the State. Under Ohio's constitution, now 60 years old, 13 senators can, by withholding the necessary three-fifths majority, prevent the submission of any constitutional amendment. Is it any wonder that the constitution has not yielded to necessary changes when special interests need only muster 13 votes in one branch of the legislature to prevent any modification of the fundamental law? Which is more hazardous, to allow 13 senators to prevent the submission of amendments or to permit 120,000 citizens to propose them?

The initiative and referendum under such provisions as these have come to be regarded, and justly so, as the cardinal test of the progressive faith. It is the next great step in the evolution and perfection of free institutions. Two more provisions are insisted on. One is that this principle of direct legislation shall be applied to every political subdivision of this State. There is but one panacea for society. That is liberty. It is the inalienable right of every community to rule itself, even to make its own blunders. There is no sounder statesmanship than this. Finally, it is insisted that when questions are submitted to the electors, whether in the State at large or in smaller communities, such questions shall be determined by a majority of the votes actually cast upon them. There is a particular reason for making this demand. Under the present constitution, all amendments must be submitted at a general election, and a majority of all the votes cast for candidates at such election are required to adopt any amendment. This is a cunning device to throw the whole weight of the ignorance and indifference of the State against change. It is a favorite play of the special interests to endeavor to encumber the initiative and referendum with this provision. Their shibboleth is "majority rule." They want nothing done, they say, without a majority of all the votes. What their contention amounts to is this: That an illiterate voter, who is able to do no more than to put a mark under the bird on the ballot, is counted, entirely without his knowledge, against any amendments submitted at that election. The ignorant voter, without voting, counts as much as an intelligent citizen does by voting. This is not majority rule. It is a device for permitting a reactionary minority to rule by always counting on their side all who neglect to vote for anything but candidates.

But neither this nor any other trick of the lobbyist is likely to prevail at this time. There is no measure before the country so universally favored as is the initiative and referendum. It will come in Ohio as in the last 10 years it has come in 10 other States of the Union. When it comes in Ohio, it will not be delayed long anywhere. To assist the people in their fight for a government of their own, patriotism can have no higher duty than this.

Ohio, I predict, will not countenance a crank constitution. She will not take up the fads and isms of the hour, but she will provide for a real representative government, safeguarded and secured by the initiative and referendum. Thus, on account of her great influence in the sisterhood of the States, she will lead, with her new constitution, the progressive hosts of 1912.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say that I have faith in our public officers. I am confident that they would look after the interests of the Government and of the people. It is, I think, a great mistake to burden a statute of this kind with unnecessary details. That is what makes trouble and lawsuits. Have faith in your public servants.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman is ready, I want to ask him a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In one moment. We ought not to forget, in the consideration of these questions, that there are two parties in interest. One is the water-power company and the other is the Government. The State comes in, but it does not exercise any of its control in this matter. As I said, the State owns the riparian rights and the bed of the river at low water and has control of it. The Government has no right to anything in the world except the running water. You can take any public stream in the country to-day, and any construction that does not interfere with navigation the Government of the United States has no right to remove.

Mr. MANN. Awhile ago a statement was made about an amendment that would be offered, giving the Secretary of War the right to regulate the charges that would be exacted. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to this proposition in the bill:

For a period of 20 years the rate shall be $1 per annum per horsepower, subject to readjustment by the Secretary of War at the end of that period, and thereafter at the end of every 10-year period.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think that is right.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that that gives the Secretary of War the power, after 20 years, to fix the rates?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think so. I do not believe the Secretary of War, when given that power, in view of the conditions and surroundings, would ever fix the rate for the sale of electric power lower than the sale of coal, because it is a competitor.

Mr. MANN. This gives the right to the Government to regulate the rates. I do not think it confers the power to fix the rates. I think it only confers upon the Secretary of War the power to make an agreement as to the rates.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The report says $1 per horsepower for 20 years.

Mr. MANN. But it assumes that after this period of 20 years it may be worth more than $1 per horsepower. I should like to inquire whether the gentleman would be willing to change that by striking out "readjustment," and making it read:

For a period of 20 years the rental shall be at the rate of $1 per horsepower developed, which rate shall be subject to be changed or fixed in his discretion by the Secretary of War at the end of that period, and thereafter at the end of every 10-year period—

So that the Secretary of War shall have the power, not to make an agreement with the company changing the rate, but to fix the rate?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am just as willing as is the gentleman from Illinois to throw every safeguard and protection that I can in behalf of the consumer, the man who buys the power, if it will not interfere with or hinder or obstruct the development of that enterprise. I am perfectly willing to do that. But I am one of those who want to see these great utilities made available, and I believe that we ought not to restrict them in such a manner as to hinder or delay in any way the development of this project, or make it financially impossible for them to engage in it. Does not the gentleman from Illinois agree with me?

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman fully that power ought to be utilized wherever it can be utilized, and that the right to utilize the power ought to be granted by the Government, if the Government itself does not undertake to do it; but that in granting the right, the Government should see to it that the Government is treated fairly and that the consumers of power are treated fairly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course. I do not think there is a man on the floor of the House who differs with the gentleman on that.

Mr. MANN. I hope so; but I can find nothing in the bill, and there is nothing in the bill, which covers the point that I have suggested.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are not going to get up a project here in which the Government is going to be treated unfairly. I do not think the gentleman means that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has been a very distinguished and able member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for many years. It has been a great pleasure for me to serve with him up to within a recent period, and I wish I were able to serve with him now. The gentleman is familiar with the general dam act. Does he not think it would be wise to provide in this bill that, except as otherwise provided herein, all of these works shall be constructed in accordance with the general dam act, so that all of the provisions of that act safeguarding the rights of the Government shall become a part of the law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I very heartily indorse the general dam act. I voted for it and aided the gentleman from Illinois to the best of my ability in securing its passage.

Mr. MANN. I have an amendment prepared, to be added as a new section:

Except as herein otherwise specially provided, the construction, maintenance, and operation of the dams and accessory works which are by this act authorized to be constructed, maintained, and operated by the company shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of the general dam act—

Properly describing it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not see any objection to that at all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The bill itself says that the dam at Saunders Shoals shall be constructed in accordance with the provisions of the general dam act.

Mr. MANN. The bill says that the dam shall be constructed in that way, but my amendment proposes to cover more than dams. It covers the accessory works which are covered by the general dam act, and the committee have not covered those in this bill. Nothing is covered in this bill except the dam, whereas under this provision all the works constructed by the company will be covered by the general dam act.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What does the gentleman call "accessories"? How does he define them?

Mr. MANN. Everything that they construct in connection with these dams are accessory works, under the language of my amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Government is to construct a dam at 17 and the company is given certain privileges.

Mr. MANN. Let me state to the gentleman my amendment: Insert the words "except as herein otherwise specially provided, the construction, maintenance, and operation of the dam, and the accessory works which are by this act authorized to be constructed, maintained, and operated by the company, shall be subject to the provisions," and so forth.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Let me state what my objection to the gentleman's amendment is, or rather what my construction of his amendment is. The company is authorized to construct only one dam, and that is at Saunders Ford.

Mr. MANN. On the contrary, the company is authorized to construct flashboards across Dam 17, and it is authorized to construct various accessory works in connection with Dams 16 and 17.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understand that, but the language of your amendment, if I understand it, would not reach the point that the gentleman aims at.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the dam constructed by the Government could not be put under the private-dam act, but the dam and the accessories that this company is authorized to build can be put under the provisions of the dam act which absolutely reserves the powers in the Secretary of War.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The only dam authorized to be built by this company is the one at Saunders Ford, and under the provisions of the bill the general dam act does apply to that particular dam, so in my opinion the gentleman's amendment is useless.

Mr. MANN. We authorize the company to erect accessory works at 16 and 17.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is on the ground which is owned by the Government adjacent to the dam.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman wish to ask me a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The State of Alabama has granted certain rights to this company to build a dam across these shoals above this place at a cost of a million and a half dollars. I want to ask the gentleman whether he would be willing to compel this company, as a part of the consideration of the control of the water power, to build this dam about which all this talk is being had and which the Government is proposing to build?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That, I imagine, would hardly be practicable from several standpoints. I have this to say in conclusion: There is not a State in the Union that has come up with more generosity and magnanimity than has the State of Alabama, and ceded all the great water powers in its State, all the rights it has, without demanding one cent of rental and exempting them from taxation for 10 years. That is the interest the great State of Alabama has shown in the development of the water power and the improvement and prosperity of the people. Alabama realizes that the water powers on her rivers will yet in the near future be as valuable to her as her coal and iron. I know that by a general act it surrendered all its rights to water powers that may be developed and exempted them from taxation for 10 years. Therefore, we expect the Federal Government to come with the hand of generosity, not for the purpose of restraining and putting obstacles in the way of utilizing these water powers that have been running to waste since the beginning of creation, but we expect a liberality and a generosity from the Federal Government, not for a moment forgetting that the Federal Government ought to be safeguarded in every respect in all of its rights; that the people ought not to be made liable to imposition by monopoly. We will do that, and we will work out the great purpose of conservation on the broad lines of the public good, because Members of Congress will appreciate and understand it when they come to the discharge of their duty, as I believe they will.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 943) to improve navigation on the Black Warrior River in the State of Alabama and had come to no resolution thereon.

POST OFFICE AT CHARLESTON, W. VA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills on the Union Calendar reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I will modify that by asking that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of one particular bill. It is a bill upon which we can not suspend action any longer.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to ask unanimous consent to consider that bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I shall not object.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole the bill (S. 2932) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to sell the old post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., and, in the event of such sale, to enter into a contract for the construction of a suitable post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., without additional cost to the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I think you better have the bill reported first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That existing legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into contracts for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the United States post office and courthouse at Charleston, W. Va., within a limit of cost of $225,000, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, in lieu of the enlargement, extension, remodeling, and improvement of said United States post-office and courthouse building, to sell said building to the city of Charleston, W. Va., or to persons acting in behalf of said city, at not less than reasonable value of such of the materials of which the building is composed as would be suitable to be reused in remodeling, enlarging, extending, and improving said building, and to apply the proceeds derived from said sale as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That in the event of the sale of the present United States post office and courthouse at Charleston, W. Va., as hereinbefore authorized, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts, or to modify any existing contracts without the necessity of readvertising for proposals, for the construction of a suitable building for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Charleston, W. Va., upon the land acquired for the site of the present post office and courthouse: Provided, That the limit of cost of said new post office and courthouse, including heating and ventilating apparatus and approaches, complete, shall not be in excess of the limit heretofore fixed for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the present building, together with such sum as may be derived from the sale of the present building.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, the sum of $225,000 has been heretofore appropriated for the remodeling and enlargement of the post office and courthouse at Charleston, W. Va. It was found that on account of the character of the material of which the old building was composed, it could not be enlarged and remodeled. Consequently contracts were let for the construction of a new building within the limit of cost already established, the old building to be torn down and the material used in the construction of the new building. The people of Charleston are very much attached to the old building. This bill simply provides that the building shall remain intact and shall be sold to the city of Charleston instead of being torn down and the material used in the new building. The only change is that instead of the old building being torn down and the material used in the construction of the new building, the old building will be sold, under the control of the Treasury Department, to the city of Charleston, W. Va., and the proceeds of the sale applied to the construction of the new building.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is proposed to remove the old building intact from its present site?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is proposed to remove the old building intact from its present site, across the street to a new site.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is possible?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; and if the old building should be destroyed the material, being composed of brick and stone laid in hard mortar, will be practically destroyed, because when they endeavor to clean the mortar from the brick and the stone these materials will largely be broken up. The Government really will be the gainer by the transaction. The able gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] has labored most earnestly for this measure.

Mr. MANN. It is proposed in moving the old building also to avoid the moving and the destruction of an old and beloved vine which is attached to the old building.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes. That is one of the things giving a sentimental value to the old building. It is a vine that was planted by the widow of Senator Kenna.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. SHEPPARD (at 5 o'clock p. m.), the House adjourned until Saturday, August 12, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a deficiency estimate for an appropriation for the Architect's Office in connection with public buildings (H. Doc. No. 102), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. YOUNG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 13492) to amend sections 1, 2, and 3 of chapter 647 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, volume 1, second edition, the same being an act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 13493) to provide a parcels post on rural and star routes in the United States; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 13494) to encourage and promote the granting of letters patent to certain citizens of the United States, or to those persons who have declared their intention of becoming citizens, upon new processes, any manufacture, agricultural methods or devices, useful arts, life-saving devices, or upon any improvements thereon, if any letters patent previously granted, that will tend to cheapen the cost of production without harmful or disguised deterioration of quality, and which must show an ultimate resulting economy to the consumer of these varied products or processes in the aggregate; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 13495) to provide for the erection of a public building at Aurora, Nebr.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13496) to provide for the erection of a public building at Wahoo, Nebr.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 13497) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jacksons Hole, Wyo.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13498) to provide for photolithographing plats of public-land surveys, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MADISON: A bill (H. R. 13499) to regulate the judicial procedure of the courts of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 13500) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: A bill (H. R. 13501) providing that the United States shall in certain cases make compensation for the use of certain public roads of the States for the purpose of transporting free rural-delivery mails; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LLOYD (by request): Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) providing for statistical and other information affecting the Congress; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. FIELDS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 152) proposing an amendment to Article II of the Constitution increasing the term of office of the President; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) proposing an amendment to Article I of the Constitution, providing for the election of Representatives in Congress triennially; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri (by request): Memorial from the General Assembly of Georgia, protesting against the 6 per cent dock for tare on cotton baled for market; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also (by request), a memorial from the General Assembly of New York, favoring the abrogation of the treaty with Russia concluded at St. Petersburg on December 18, 1832; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANSBERRY: A bill (H. R. 13502) granting an increase of pension to James R. Oldfield; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAMERON: A bill (H. R. 13503) to confirm title to the township of Hachita, N. Mex.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13504) granting a pension to Lauchlin S. Medlar; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 13505) granting an increase of pension to Charles J. Kuebler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13506) granting an increase of pension to John T. Flowers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13507) granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Patton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13508) granting an increase of pension to James Boyland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13509) granting an increase of pension to Marcus D. L. Neal; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13510) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Shellman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13511) for the relief of John C. Stuebe; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COOPER: A bill (H. R. 13512) granting a pension to Elmer A. Cutter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 13513) for the relief of Michael Griffin; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DIFENDERFER: A bill (H. R. 13514) for the relief of Franklin W. Hilt; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FOSTER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 13515) granting a pension to Sarah Jane Boggs; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, resolutions of the State Board of Health of Rhode Island, regretting the proposed removal of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, and urging full consideration of his official acts; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 12, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following telegram, which will be read by the Secretary.

The telegram was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., August 11, 1911.

JAMES S. SHERMAN,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the National Monetary Commission.

FRANK P. FLINT.

PRINTING OF ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the two treaties of arbitration with France and Great Britain, from which the injunction of secrecy has been removed, be printed as separate Senate documents. There is a great demand for copies from the document room. (S. Docs. Nos. 91, 92, 93, and 94.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order will be entered as requested, without objection. No objection is heard.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against certain information being given assessment companies and others as to returns made by corporations, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented 115 petitions of citizens of New York City, N. Y., and petitions of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on lemons, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Salem, Ohio, praying for the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COUNTING A QUORUM.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, my attention was diverted, and I do not know whether the Journal has reference to the particular matter to which I now wish to ask the attention of the Senate.

I was necessarily absent yesterday on business of the Senate, and was not present when certain action was taken which I find in the RECORD, on page 3827, and which I will read. After giving the names of the Senators voting and not voting upon the proposition presented, the RECORD is as follows:

> The VICE PRESIDENT. Six Senators, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], having announced that they refrained from voting because of their pairs, making the announcement individually in each case, the number voting, with those six, discloses the presence of a quorum. The nays have it, and the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is lost.

I do not desire, Mr. President, to take any action by making any motion in regard to it, but I am unwilling that that should pass without dissent; otherwise it might hereafter be taken as an action of the Senate sub silentio. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that this question in its substantial form was before the Senate on the 19th day of December last, when a similar ruling was made by the Chair; that the then Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the vote was taken on that appeal by yeas and nays; and the result was that the Senate, by a vote of 37 nays to 17 yeas, decided that the decision of the Chair should not stand as the judgment of the Senate.

I repeat, I do not now desire to raise any issue upon it or to make a motion in regard thereto. As stated by Mr. Hale, the former Senator from Maine, upon that occasion the ruling was without precedent in the history of the Senate, and he appealed from it. I content myself simply with calling attention to it now, because I do not wish that by passing it without its being challenged it should appear to have had the sanction of the Senate, even in a negative or, rather, in a passive way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 6747. An act to reenact an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across St. Croix River, and to extend the time for commencing and completing the said structure (Rept. No. 135);

H. R. 4682. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Glenhayes Station, in Wayne County, W. Va. (Rept. No. 136);

H. R. 7690. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Snake River at the town of Nyssa, Oreg. (Rept. No. 137);

H. R. 7263. An act to authorize the counties of Bradley and McMinn, Tenn., by authority of their county courts, to construct a bridge across the Hiwassee River at Charleston and Calhoun, in said counties (Rept. No. 138);

H. R. 8146. An act to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois (Rept. No. 139); and

H. R. 11723. An act permitting the building of a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River between Burnett County, Wis., and Pine County, Minn. (Rept. No. 140).

CLAIMS OF KENTUCKY.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to report favorably a resolution sending to the Court of Claims a couple of cases in which it is necessary to make corrections in titles, the matter having already gone there, but there being a mistake in the titles.

The resolution (S. Res. 134) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the claims of the county of Nelson, State of Kentucky (S. 396), and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Louisa, Ky. (S. 895), now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Tucker Act. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this is a special case, or whether he desires to have it reported differently from what has always been done in the past.

Mr. CRAWFORD. These cases have already been referred to the Court of Claims, but there are defects in the titles, and the court requested that the correction be made. This resolution is sending the matter over with the correct titles.

Mr. SMOOT. Simply correcting the titles?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PORT OF BROWNSVILLE, TEX.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 2925) to extend the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Brownsville, Tex. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for information.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. From the Committee on Privileges and Elections I report a resolution, and I desire to say that I do so under the direction of that committee at a meeting held this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont reports from the Committee on Privileges and Elections a resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 136), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against ISAAC STEPHENSON, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, and to report to the Senate whether in the election of said ISAAC STEPHENSON as a Senator of the United States from the said State of Wisconsin there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices; that said committee or subcommittee be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate, to hold its session at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ stenographers, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or chairman of the subcommittee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

FLORIDA EAST COAST RAILWAY CELEBRATION.

Mr. ROOT. I am directed by the Committee on Industrial Expositions, to which was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 7, submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], relative to the celebration in January, 1912, at Key West, Fla., to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the substitute, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit in the name and on behalf of the city of Key West, Fla., to all foreign nations an invitation to visit that city and participate in the celebration of the completion of the Florida East Coast Railway Co.'s line connecting the mainland of the United States with the said island city of Key West, both by their official representatives and citizens generally, and particularly to invite such foreign countries to send such of their respective naval vessels as may be practicable and convenient to participate in such celebration so to be held, beginning on the 2d day of January, A. D. 1912: Provided, That before the extending of said invitations the President shall be satisfied that suitable provisions have been made by said city for the entertainment of the parties or representatives of such governments or countries so invited.

Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to direct such portion of the Army and Navy of the United States as may be convenient and practicable to be present at Key West at the time of such proposed celebration and participate therein.

Resolved further, That under no circumstances is the United States to assume, be subject to, or charged with any expense of any character whatsoever in or about or connected with such proposed celebration.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRYAN:

A bill (S. 3212) to provide for the purchase of additional ground for the site of the public building in the city of Pensacola, in the State of Florida; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WETMORE:

A bill (S. 3213) granting an increase of pension to Frances E. Peabody (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 3214) granting a pension to John T. Drinkwater (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3215) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Dickover (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3216) granting an increase of pension to Robert F. Catterson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 3217) for the relief of Robert Letherby; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. CUMMINS. I propose certain amendments to House bill 12812, being the bill for the revision of the cotton schedule, which I send to the desk and ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit certain amendments to House bill 12812. They propose a revision of the chemical schedule, reducing the rate 25 per cent on an ad valorem basis from the present duty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

EXTRA MONTH'S PAY TO EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CLAPP. I introduce a joint resolution, and, as I understand it ought to be disposed of in the manner I request, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 54) to reimburse the officers and employees of the Senate for mileage and expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate borne on the annual and session rolls on the first day of July, 1911, including the official reporters of the Senate and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Clerk, as reimbursement for mileage and expenses and for extra services during the first session of the Sixty-second Congress a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid to them by law, the same to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be immediately available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the joint resolution go over.

Mr. CLAPP. I have no objection to its going over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah objects, and the joint resolution goes over.

COTTON-CROP STATISTICS.

Mr SMITH or South Carolina. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 135) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, instructed to furnish to the Senate detailed information as to the methods employed in obtaining a report on the condition of the growing cotton crop; the persons employed in obtaining such information, their names, and post-office addresses, by States;

Also, the classes into which these reporting agents are subdivided;

Also, all information as to the methods employed in arriving at an estimate of the probable yield of the cotton crop from the condition of the growing crop;

Also, the method employed in arriving at the increase or decrease in acreage planted to cotton from year to year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask what is the purpose of the resolution? What is the use to be made of the information?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All those who are interested in the cotton-crop reports have no detailed information as to the method by which they are arrived at, and we merely want that information for our benefit.

I will state to the Senator from Ohio also that it is essential for us to get the proper persons to report on the conditions of the crop. The head of the department is not as familiar as Members here about getting the information, and we could in that way aid him materially in procuring it.

Mr. BURTON. Would it not be possible that local interest would be brought to bear to modify the reports if the names were known and that the department would thereby be embarrassed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think that that could possibly be the case. Involving large interests, as the cotton crop involves, I can not see how it would embarrass anyone or how it would cause any less fair report. In fact, it would operate toward having a fair report if the names of the individuals become known. I know the conditions in my State, and I know that a fair and just report would be more easily obtained if the proper individuals were employed to report. Besides, if the effort I am making succeeds, involving, as it does, the method of arriving at the condition of the crop, the fact would be known to the Senate. I am quite sure those on this side of the Chamber who are interested in the production of cotton have no detailed information as to how the report is arrived at.

Mr. BURTON. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina, if he will yield for that purpose, whether there has ever been any difficulty in obtaining the names of the reporters or the sources of information from the Agricultural Department? Could not that information be obtained readily by consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, and in such consultation could not the question be considered whether the accuracy of the statistics might not be impaired by giving out this detailed information?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator from Ohio that where the names are known the proper weight can be given by the trade to the report; and there are some instances, I am sure, where persons are not familiar enough with cotton cultivation and the production of cotton to give the proper information to the Agricultural Department. I think that will be found to be the experience of practically everyone.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think I shall object to the resolution being called up on Monday, but I should like to have it go over for a day, in order that it may be examined.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the objection of the Senator from Ohio, the resolution goes over until the next legislative day.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

The motion was agreed to.

FUNDS OF THE KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE INDIANS.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3115) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the funds of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, and for other purposes. It is a bill the passage of which is desired by the Department of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I object, unless the amendment to the bill I have heretofore suggested be made.

Mr. OWEN. I have an amendment that I am going to propose, which will meet the wishes of the Senator from Kansas.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 5, before the words "the funds," to insert the words "so much of."

Mr. OWEN. There I should like to have inserted the words "an amount not to exceed $50 per capita out of" in lieu of the words "so much of."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment on page 1, line 5, by striking out the words "so much of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "an amount not to exceed $50 per capita out of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "Oklahoma," to strike out the words "or so much thereof."

Mr. OWEN. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, in line 6, after the word "thereof," by striking out the words "as he may deem necessary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 1, in line 8, after the word "Oklahoma," to insert the words "nearest the home of said Indians," and, on page 2, line 2, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," to strike out the word "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "Indians," to insert:

Provided, That this shall not apply to the Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche 4 per cent fund of approximately $2,600,000 now on deposit in the United States Treasury under the act of June 5, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 213), or subsequent acts of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, Mr. President, I should like to have the bill read as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States an amount not to exceed $50 per capita out of the funds of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and deposit the same in such banks of Oklahoma nearest the home of said Indians as he may select, under such regulations as he may prescribe, and thereafter use so much of the said funds for the benefit of said Indians as he may deem proper: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior report to Congress at its next session the amount of such funds so used for the benefit of said Indians: Provided, That this shall not apply to the Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche 4 per cent fund of approximately $2,600,000 now on deposit in the United States Treasury under the act of June 5, 1906 (34 Stats, p. 213), or subsequent acts of Congress.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think it would be better to provide for a direct payment, but I have no objection to the money going into the banks and letting it be paid out as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit. The intention, however, as I understand, is to make a payment to relieve those Indians from their unfortunate condition, the result of a drought down there.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on the bill and all amendments thereto at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m. on Monday next. I make this request with the hope that an hour, or perhaps more, will be available after the termination of morning business on Monday for further discussion of the bill. I should like to occupy some considerable time myself.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Ohio mean that he desires to occupy time for debate on Monday after 1.45 or before that hour?

Mr. BURTON. Before that hour.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope very much that the request of the Senator from Ohio will be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the intention of the Senator from Ohio that at 1.45 p. m., on Monday next, the vote shall be taken without further debate?

Mr. BURTON. That the vote be taken without further debate on the bill and all amendments thereto at the time named.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on Monday next, at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., without further debate, a vote be taken upon Senate bill 854 and upon the pending amendment and any amendments to be offered to its final disposition. Is there objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not rise to object, but I rise to express the hope that the request of the Senator from Ohio will receive the approval of all Senators. It is not my purpose in this bill to disparage the work of the commission. I very much want the Senate to utilize the accumulated facts which the commission has gathered during the course of its investigation. I do want a report, and a report speedily, so that Congress can do whatsoever is necessary to remedy the defects in our financial system.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 112, being the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I sent to the Secretary's desk a few minutes ago, which I ask to have read. I desire the amendment relating to the revision of the metal schedule to be first read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. —. The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out paragraph 121 of Schedule C thereof and inserting the following:

"121. Beams, girders, joists, angles, car-truck channels, T. T. columns and posts, or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, whether plain, punched, or fitted for use, or whether assembled and manufactured, one-quarter of 1 cent per pound.

The said Schedule C in the act aforesaid, being paragraphs 117 to 199, both inclusive, is hereby further amended as follows, to wit:

"From and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles mentioned in paragraphs 117 to 151, inclusive, 159 to 163, inclusive, and 171 of said Schedule C, when imported from any foreign country into the United States, or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), 60 per cent only of the rates of duty which are in and by said paragraphs of said schedule prescribed; but the foregoing shall not apply to paragraph 121, which is hereinbefore repealed and a substitute reenacted therefor."

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles mentioned in paragraphs 152 to 158, inclusive, 164 to 170, inclusive, 172 to 199, inclusive, of said Schedule C, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila) 70 per cent only of the rates of duty which are in and by said paragraphs of said schedule prescribed: Provided, however, That if any article embraced in said schedule shall by an act of Congress passed by the Sixty-second Congress, second session, be placed on the free list, this act shall not apply thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the amendment acted upon at once?

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire, Mr. President, to address the Senate at some length, as briefly as possible, however, upon this amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the cotton bill is the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is not yet, unless it was the understanding of the Senate that the unanimous-consent agreement did away with Senate bill No. 854, which was under consideration as the unfinished business.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I am concerned, it was my understanding that the bill relating to the Monetary Commission should be displaced as the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that was the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any doubt about it, I will move to take up the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion will be entered as agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is not expected, I believe, that the session shall continue for any great length of time this afternoon. I do not want to enter upon the address that I have in my mind to make upon the amendment to the bill now under consideration. I ask that the Secretary shall report the amendment I have proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. CUMMINS's amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 2932. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to sell the old post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., and, in the event of such sale, to enter into a contract for the construction of a suitable post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., without additional cost to the Government of the United States; and

S. 3152. An act extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 11303. An act for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp;

H. R. 13120. An act to transfer a portion of Fort Clark Military Reservation to the State of Texas for a tuberculosis sanitarium; and

H. J. Res. 146. Joint resolution for appointment of a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The message further requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 31) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use of the Astoria Centennial, to be held at Astoria, Oreg., August 10 to September 9, 1911, the original having been lost or mislaid.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 144. An act to legalize a bridge across the Pend Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash.;

S. 850. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to legalize and establish a pontoon railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa," approved June 6, 1874;

S. 1627. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across and over the Arkansas River, and for other purposes;

S. 2495. An act to define and classify health, accident, and death benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

S. 2766. An act to authorize the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. to construct and operate a bridge across the St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes;

S. 2878. An act to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Calumet River, in the State of Indiana;

H. R. 6098. An act to authorize the Campbell Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River from a point in Dunklin County, Mo., to a point in Clay County, Ark.;

H. R. 11021. An act to authorize the Lavitte Land & Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in Drew County, Ark.; and

H. R. 11477. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 11303. An act for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The following bill and joint resolution were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 13120. An act to transfer a portion of Fort Clark Military Reservation to the State of Texas for a tuberculosis sanitarium; and

H. J. Res. 146. Joint resolution for appointment of a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

ASTORIA (OREG.) CENTENNIAL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for a duplicate engrossed copy of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 31) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use of the Astoria Centennial, to be held at Astoria, Oreg., August 10 to September 9, 1911, and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire if the Senator from Iowa proposes to go on with his speech this afternoon.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to go on with my address this afternoon if it can be avoided.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Borah	Cummins	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bourne	Dixon	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brandegee	Fletcher	Oliver	Stephenson
Brown	Foster	Overman	Swanson
Burnham	Gamble	Owen	Townsend
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Watson
Chilton	Jones	Perkins	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Lippitt	Poindexter	Works
Crane	Lodge	Reed
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Shively

Mr. BURNHAM. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call—not a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the list of absentees.

The Secretary called the list of absentees and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. BRISTOW, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan answered to their names when called.

Mr. BRYAN entered the Chamber and answered to his name

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa which the Secretary read a few moments ago.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is evident that the Senate does not want to go on this evening with the debate, and I suggest that unobjected bills on the calendar be taken up temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will ask unanimous consent that that be done, it would not displace the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not, if the unfinished business were temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 25) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, pawnbrokers, and real-estate brokers in the District of Columbia was announced as the first bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as the next bill in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2925) providing for a Confederate naval monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

JOHN P. FITZGERALD.

The bill (S. 2246) to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald, who enlisted and served under the assumed name of Joshua Porter in Company K, Seventh Regiment, and Company C, First Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, from March 9, 1865, to March 10, 1866, and to issue to him an honorable discharge in his true name of John P. Fitzgerald.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a report, No. 104, on the bill, and I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama July 18, 1911, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2246) to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald, having had the same under consideration, reports it back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

This soldier was between 16 and 17 years old when he enlisted in the Army, and, on account of his father's opposition to his enlisting in the service, he went from his home in Jay County, Ind., to Jackson, Mich., walking a greater part of the distance, where he enlisted in a Michigan regiment under the name of Joshua Porter, to prevent his father from finding him and taking him back to his home.

He is now drawing a pension, and on February 3, 1910, the Treasury Department allowed his claim for travel pay from Salt Lake City, Utah, the place of discharge, to Jackson, Mich., amounting to $211.17.

After his discharge he remained in the West, and never returned to Michigan or Indiana until after filing his claim for pension, when he returned to Michigan, at great inconvenience and an expense of about $250, to procure the testimony of comrades showing his identity with the soldier who served as Joshua Porter, and there is now on file with his old claim in the Pension Bureau the affidavits of three comrades showing identity, on the strength of which his claims for pension and travel pay were allowed.

The War Department requires that before a discharge is issued in a soldier's true name he must furnish personal identity, or, in other words, to get a discharge certificate in his true name through regular channels Mr. Fitzgerald would be compelled to again go back to Michigan from the State of Washington, where he now lives, at great inconvenience and an expense that he is unable to bear; hence, as his service was an honorable one and his enlistment under an assumed name was not for the purpose of hiding a crime, and since the evidence on file in the Pension Bureau proves beyond any question of doubt that John P. Fitzgerald and Joshua Porter are one and the same person, your committee recommends that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911, was announced as next in order on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill goes over under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The bill (S. 2792) to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Senate resolution 109, submitted by Mr. NEWLANDS, providing for a certain program of legislation and for a recess of Congress, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over on the request of the Senator from Idaho.

Senate concurrent resolution 4, submitted by Mr. POMERENE, directing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the concurrent resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

ALASKA NORTHERN RAILWAY.

The bill (S. 2534) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a report on the bill, No. 113. I should like to have the report read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN July 28, 1911, as follows:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2534) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes, have had the bill under consideration and report it back to the Senate unanimously without amendment, with the recommendation that it pass.

The promoters of the Alaska Northern Railway have in the process of construction a railroad 700 miles in length, which will extend from Seward to Fairbanks, they having already expended $6,000,000 in this work; and the committee recommend that the extension of six years provided for in Senate bill 2534 be granted, so as to enable the parties interested in the construction of this railroad to comply with the requirements of the act of May 14, 1898, the provisions of which were extended by the act of March 2, 1909, for three years from that date, and which extension was found to be insufficient for them to meet the requirements of the law of May 14, 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF GEN. JAMES MILLER AT PETERBORO, N. H.

The bill (S. 304) for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller at Peterboro, N. H., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Secretary read the report of the committee on this bill, it being Report No. 116.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. WETMORE August 4, 1911, as follows:

The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 304) for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller, at Peterboro, N. H., have had the same under consideration, with the accompanying papers, and report it back without amendment.

Similar bills passed the Senate in the Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth, and Sixty-first Congresses, but were not acted upon in the House of Representatives.

[Extract from Senate Report No. 1157, Sixty-first Congress, third session.]

The Senate report of the Fifty-eighth Congress is as follows (S. Rept. No. 158, 58th Cong., 2d sess.):

The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1634) for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller, at Peterboro, N. H., have had the same under consideration, with the accompanying papers, and report it back without amendment.

Gen. James Miller, the hero of Lundys Lane, was born at Peterboro, N. H., April 25, 1776. He was educated for the law and admitted to practice in 1803. Shortly thereafter he commanded a company of artillery in the Militia of New Hampshire, where his military bearing, aptitude, and skill in maneuvering and drill attracted the attention of Gen. Benjamin Pierce, at whose earnest recommendation Capt. Miller was appointed, on July 8, 1808, major in the Fourth Infantry.

In 1811 the Fourth Infantry was ordered to Vincennes, Ind., and took part in Harrison's campaign terminating in the Battle of Tippecanoe.

Maj. Miller, however, was left at Vincennes during the campaign because of severe and continuous illness, but the regiment which had been disciplined and instructed by him received the very highest praise for its share in the campaign and the crowning battle.

In 1812 the regiment was ordered to Detroit. Lieut. Col. Miller was in command, the colonel, Boyd, having preceded them and acting as general during the campaign. War was declared June 18. On the 9th of August a detachment consisting of the available men of the Fourth Infantry, amounting to about 300, and a somewhat larger number of militia, all under command of Lieut. Col. Miller, encountered a force of British and Indians at Magagua or Brownstown. The enemy was somewhat superior in numbers, strongly intrenched, and awaiting the Americans on ground of their own selection. The Indian force was under the command of the celebrated Chief Tecumseh. The Americans attacked immediately, and after a severe struggle drove the enemy some miles.

Gen. Hull, who commanded in chief, declined to order or sanction further pursuit of the British, and one week thereafter, on the 16th of August, surrendered his force of over 2,000 men to the same commander, with scarcely more than half of his own number of troops, who had been so thoroughly beaten by Miller with an inferior force just one week before.

The disastrous termination of Hull's campaign naturally distracted public attention from such partial success as had been attained in its opening, but Miller was brevetted colonel for his action, and after the surrender the following letter was addressed to him:

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington City, December 14, 1812.

SIR: I am instructed by the Secretary of War to convey to you, and through you to the officers and soldiers of the Fourth Regiment of Infantry, who are prisoners of war, the high sense which the President entertains of the gallantry and good conduct by which you and they have been uniformly distinguished.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. H. CUSHING,
Adjutant General.

Lieut. Col. JAMES MILLER.

Early in 1813 Col. Miller was exchanged for Lord Dacres. He took part in the indecisive campaign of 1813, but without any opportunity of distinction.

It was at the Battle of Niagara or Lundys Lane, fought on the 25th of July, 1814, that he rendered his next conspicuous service. The key point of the British position was the post of their field artillery. This Miller, with his regiment, stormed and captured. His reply, when asked if he could capture the battery, "I'll try, sir," became proverbial and had a prominent place in every description of the battle for many years.

Later, at Fort Erie, where an American force under command of Maj. Gen. Brown was besieged by the British, overwhelmingly superior in numbers and artillery, a sortie was made which defeated the British brigade in the trenches, destroyed their works, captured their artillery, and blew up their magazines, the effect of which was that the British commander gave up the siege and retired without attempting any counterstroke with the two brigades that he still had intact.

In this affair Col. Miller, acting as general, had command of the center column and received the highest praise from his commanding officer for his conduct.

As already noted, Miller was brevetted colonel for his gallantry at Brownstown; he received the brevet of brigadier general for Lundys Lane and a gold medal from Congress conformably to the following resolution:

"Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be requested to cause gold medals to be struck with suitable emblems and devices and presented to Brig. Gens. * * * Miller * * * in testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of their gallantry and good conduct in the several conflicts of Chippewa, Niagara, and Fort Erie.

"Approved, November 3, 1814."

The State of New York also presented him a sword of honor "pursuant to resolution of the senate and assembly."

Gen. Miller was retained in service upon the reorganization of the Army, but resigned in 1819 and was appointed by President Monroe as governor of Arkansas, serving until 1823. The following year he was appointed collector of the port of Salem, Mass., which position he held until 1849. He died at Temple, N. H., July 7, 1851, at the age of 76.

GEN. MILLER'S OFFICIAL MILITARY RECORD.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 28, 1903.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 23d instant to the Chief of the Record and Pension Office, War Department, which has been referred to this office, requesting the military record of Gen. James Miller, of New Hampshire, I have the honor to say that James Miller was appointed major, Fourth Infantry, July 8, 1808; was promoted to be lieutenant colonel, Fifth Infantry, November 30, 1810; was transferred to the Sixth Infantry September 14, 1812; was promoted to be colonel, Twenty-first Infantry, March 9, 1814; and was transferred to the Fifth Infantry May 17, 1815. He resigned from the service June 1, 1819, and died July 7, 1851, at Temple, N. H.

He was brevetted colonel August 9, 1812, for distinguished service at Brownstown, upper Canada, and brigadier general July 25, 1814, for distinguished service at Niagara Falls, upper Canada. A resolution of Congress of November 3, 1814, awarded him a gold medal in testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallantry and good conduct in the several conflicts of Chippewa, Niagara, and Fort Erie, upper Canada.

I inclose for your information copy of a biographical sketch of Gen. Miller given in the report of the adjutant general of New Hampshire for 1868, which contains some information not found on the official records of this office.

Very respectfully,

H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant General, Major General, United States Army.

Hon. GEORGE PEABODY WETMORE,
Chairman Committee on the Library, United States Senate.

The following sketch of Gen. Miller appears in the report of the adjutant general of New Hampshire for 1868:

Col. Miller was a native of Peterboro, the son of James Miller, of that town, who was of Scotch-Irish stock, from the north of Ireland, and was born April 25, 1776. After pursuing his studies in the academy at Amherst, and for a time in the college at Middlebury, Vt., he entered upon the study of law in the office of James Wilson, Esq., of Peterboro. Having finished his course of study, he was admitted to the bar of his native county in 1803. He settled in the practice of the law in the neighboring town of Greenfield, where he was soon in command of the company of artillery attached to the Twenty-sixth Regiment of the New Hampshire Militia. His military bearing, aptitude, and skill in maneuvering and drill attracted the attention of Gen. Benjamin Pierce, and at his earnest recommendation Capt. Miller was appointed major of the Fourth Regiment of the United States Infantry, commanded by Col. John P. Boyd, and then stationed at Fort Independence, in the Harbor of Boston. His commission bears date March 3, 1809, taking rank from the 8th of July, 1808. This regiment contained many officers and men from New Hampshire, and after Maj. Miller's appointment to it many more joined the regiment from the interior of New Hampshire. At the battles of Brownstown, Chippewa, Niagara, and "the sortie on Erie," he won distinguished honors. After the battle of Niagara he was made a brigadier. On the 3d of November, 1814, Congress presented him with a gold medal and the unanimous thanks of that body. The State of New York, through its senate and assembly, presented him with a sword. It is inscribed as follows:

"Presented by his excellency, Daniel D. Tompkins, governor of the State of New York, pursuant to resolutions of the senate and assembly of the said State, to Brigadier-General Miller, as a testimony of gratitude for his services and admiration of his gallant conduct."

Upon the close of the war Gen. Miller returned to his native State and devoted himself to agricultural pursuits.

In 1819 he was appointed governor of the Territory of Arkansas by President Monroe, but the climate not agreeing with him, in 1823 he returned to Temple in poor health. The following year he was appointed collector of the port of Salem. This position he held for 24 years, when his health becoming still more enfeebled by paralysis, in 1849 he resigned his office of collector and was succeeded by his youngest son. Upon his resignation he retired to his farm in Temple, where he died July 7, 1851, in the 76th year of his age. Gen. Miller was a Christian and a gentleman, as well as a gallant soldier. He won the respect of all who knew him.

BATTLE OF LUNDYS LANE.

[From Richardson's Index to the Messages and Papers of the Presidents.]

After his defeat at Chippewa, in 1814, Gen. Riall (British) retired by way of Queenston toward the head of Lake Ontario. He was soon reenforced and returned to attack the Americans under Brown, who had pursued him as far as Queenston. Hearing of the British reenforcements Brown retreated to the Chippewa River, and on July 24, 1814, encamped on the south bank, where he had defeated Riall on the 5th. On the 25th Gen. Scott, with 1,200 men, went forward to reconnoiter and came upon the British Army, 4,500 strong, near Niagara Falls, on Lundys Lane, a road leading from the Falls to the end of Lake Ontario. Soon the entire American force was engaged, the battle lasting from sunset till midnight. The American forces numbered about 2,500 men. During the engagement Gen. Scott and Lieut. Col. Miller distinguished themselves for daring and efficiency. The British were finally driven back and forced to abandon their artillery, ammunition, and baggage. Both armies claimed the victory, though both left the field. The American loss was 171 killed, 571 wounded, and 110 missing—a total of 852 out of an army of 2,500. The British lost 84 killed, 559 wounded, 193 missing, and 42 prisoners—a total of 878 out of an army of 4,500. Gens. Brown and Scott were among the wounded.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE FOR MONDAY.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to state to the Senate that the Vice President will be compelled to be out of the city on Monday next, August 14, and, therefore, Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] be the President pro tempore of the Senate for that day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 12, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, in whom we live and move and have our being, continue, we beseech Thee, Thy blessings unto us as individuals and as a Nation. Inspire us by the holy spirit of truth to seek diligently the highest ideals in all that pertains to life and its far-reaching purposes. The night cometh when no man can work. Once more our hearts are filled with sorrow and grief by the death of a Member who for years was a conspicuous figure upon the floor of this House. Be very near to those who were near and dear to him and comfort them by the blessed hope of the gospel. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11477. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 144. An act to legalize a bridge across the Pend Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash.;

S. 1627. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across and over the Arkansas River, and for other purposes;

S. 2878. An act to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Calumet River, in the State of Indiana;

S. 2766. An act to authorize the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. to construct and operate a bridge across the St. Francis River in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes;

S. 850. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to legalize and establish a pontoon railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa," approved June 6, 1874; and

S. 2495. An act to define and classify health, accident, and death benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER ELECT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. GEORGE F. BURGESS be sworn in as a Member of the Sixty-second Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. GEORGE F. BURGESS, Representative elect from the ninth Texas district, presented himself at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ARMY TENTS FOR ASTORIA CENTENNIAL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before the Journal is approved I understand that the House on yesterday acted on Senate joint resolution 31, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Astoria Centennial to be held at Astoria, Oreg., August 10 to September 9, 1911, and that at the time that resolution was acted on it was supposed that the engrossed copy was here from the Senate, but as a matter of fact it turns out that that copy was not here. I therefore ask unanimous consent that so far as the Journal appears the proceedings of yesterday with reference to this resolution be stricken from the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the proceedings touching Senate joint resolution 31, to loan tents to the Astoria Exposition, be stricken from the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he ask that the proceedings taken by the House on the subject be vacated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I intended that. I said all proceedings in reference to the Senate joint resolution which included the proceedings in the House.

Mr. MANN. But not merely stricken out of the Journal, but that the proceedings themselves be vacated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I intimated that in my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The amended request is that all proceedings touching Senate joint resolution 31 be vacated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the following resolution be passed in reference to this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, with this correction, the Journal will stand approved. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution which the gentleman from Alabama sends up.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 276.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate copy of Senate joint resolution 31, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Astoria Centennial, to be held at Astoria, Oreg., August 10 to September 9, 1911, the same having been lost or misplaced.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman sure that the engrossed copy of the Senate resolution can not be found?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, they have not been able to find it up to this time, and I assume it is lost. I do not desire to delay action on the matter, and if it turns up, it is all right. If it is still lost by Monday, the gentlemen who are interested in this matter will have an engrossed copy and will be ready to proceed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman and the House to this situation. The committees of the House, being new, many of them, are likely to act upon printed copies of Senate bills or resolutions, regardless of whether the committee has physical possession of the engrossed copy. Whether that was done in this case, or whether the engrossed copy was lost after it had been in the hands of the committee, I do not know. The House some time ago dispensed with the services of the distributing clerk. Personally, I think that is a mistake which ought to be rectified. The distributing clerk is the one who is responsible for the transmission of these papers from the House to the committees of the House. As it is now, there is no one responsible for getting these engrossed copies of Senate bills out of the Clerk's hands into the hands of the committees. I have no doubt this paper is reposing somewhere where nobody has gone after it or picked it up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer the gentleman by saying we recognize the House is new; that we have organized a new machine, and naturally mistakes are made sometimes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands I am not making any criticism, except to call attention in order that corrections may follow in the future.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no doubt that this mistake having been made and brought to the attention of the House, the committees hereafter will see that they have in hand the engrossed copies before they bring the bills before the House. The only reason for this resolution is that we can not find the copy—probably will not be able to find it—and it will not hurt in any way to have an additional engrossed copy here Monday.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the House will probably adjourn in a few minutes. The conferees on the wool bill have come to an agreement. It will take something like half an hour to finish writing the statement. In order that it may be reported to the House and printed in the RECORD and prevent delay next week, I move that the House take a recess until 1 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House take a recess until 1 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 1 o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

WOOL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present to the House for printing in the RECORD under the rules the conference report on H. R. 11019, a bill to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, with a statement on the part of the House conferees and the original papers in the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] presents the conference report on the wool bill (H. R. 11019) and asks that it be printed under the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve a point of order on the conference report and to make the point of order that the gentleman can not present under the rules the original papers to the House until the matter has been acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman state his point of order which he reserves on the conference report, because I would like to have it disposed of.

Mr. MANN. I reserve all points of order. It is not necessary. It has to be printed under the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the gentleman has the right to reserve the point of order without giving the House the benefit of it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that. All points of order are reserved, as the Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in this case the House passed the bill, the Senate agreed to an amendment to the bill, and sent it to the House with the amendment. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment and asked for a conference. The Senate agreed to the conference and the matter went to conference. And this was the situation: When the Senate agreed to the amendment and sent a message to the House it had passed the bill with the amendment, the original engrossed copy of the bill accompanied the message and was in possession of the House. The House disagreeing to the Senate amendment and asking for a conference, with a message to the Senate carrying that notice, sent the original papers, and the Senate, being in possession of the original papers, agreed to the conference asked, after insisting upon its amendment, and sent a notice to the House that it had agreed to the conference report. With that notice or message came the original papers. The original papers then were in possession of the House and were turned over to the House conferees. The conference committee having agreed to a report, the question is, who, then, is entitled to the original papers, because neither body can act upon the proposition without having the original papers in its possession? It has been the invariable rule that in conference committees, when the conference agrees upon a report the papers are transferred from the conferees who have possession of them to the other conferees. So that the invariable rule has been that the body agreeing to the conference acts first. I call the attention of the Speaker to Jefferson's Manual, paragraph 548, on page 282, as follows:

> And in all cases of conference asked after a vote of disagreement, etc., the conferees of the House asking it are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other.

That matter is so well understood that it is even carried in the Congressional Vestpocket Directory. It is carried in the little bulletin that has been published by the Committee on Appropriations in reference to conference reports. There has been no case where this rule has not been observed. The Vestpocket Directory, for instance, on page 91, says:

> In all cases of conference asked the managers of the House asking it are to leave the papers with the other House, and the report must be first made to the House agreeing to the conference.

The same statement is published in the pamphlet recently issued by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he thinks the paragraph he has read carries out his present contention?

Mr. MANN. Absolutely.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if everything that that paragraph provides for has not already been done.

Mr. MANN. It has not been done. In this case there has been an agreement. Now the paragraph says:

> The conferees of the House asking it—
>
> In this case that is the House of Representatives—> are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other.

That is the Senate in this case. We asked for the conference. Hence we had physical possession of the papers at the time the conference commenced, because in the messages back and forth between the House and the Senate in reference to the conference, the end leaves the physical possession of the papers with the House. Now, the rule in that case is that where the conferees agree, the House that asked for the conference, having physical possession, are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other House. That is the rule of Jefferson's Manual, and it is perfectly plain. That has been the invariable rule and practice.

If there had been no agreement in conference, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], having physical possession of the papers, might have brought the matter back to the House and moved to concur in the Senate amendments, because whichever body has physical possession of the papers is entitled to act upon them; but in this case, under the rule, the House conferees should have left the papers in the possession of the conferees on the part of the Senate, so that the Senate should act first.

It sometimes becomes a very important matter as to which body acts first upon a conference report. It was not necessary for the House to ask for a conference. The House might have disagreed to the Senate amendments and left it to the Senate to ask for a conference, and if that course had been pursued, then the Senate conferees would have had physical possession of the papers while the conference was going on, and the first action in reference to the conference report would have been taken by the House. Sometimes the House does not ask for a conference, where it disagrees to a Senate amendment, in order that it may first pass upon the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in the early history of this House the question was somewhat in dispute between the two Houses as to which set of conferees were entitled to the papers. The practice for many years between the conferees has been that the House agreeing to the conference should take the papers, but that is merely a question between the conferees of the two Houses. It is not a matter of parliamentary law. It is not a matter of precedent that affects the passage of the bill. It is a question of courtesy between the conferees.

I do not dispute the question that the gentleman raises—that the common practice has been that where one House asks for a conference and the other House agrees to it, the House agreeing to it has the right, if it demands it, to take the papers back to that House.

But there is one question that can not be disputed, and the gentleman from Illinois agreed with a similar proposition this morning when it was necessary for us to amend the Journal because we did not have the physical possession of certain papers that were acted on yesterday.

Now, the Senate conferees waive their right to carry the original papers back to the Senate. They prefer that this House should act on this conference report first. They voluntarily and without dispute turned the papers over to me, to bring them to this House, and I have presented them to the House. They are in the possession of the House, and the question of the precedents as to what the conferees should do is merely a matter that guides the conferees, should a question of dispute arise between them. I recognize the fact, and I recognized it when we were in conference, that if the Senate conferees had demanded of me these papers they had a right to take them to the Senate. Nobody disputes that fact.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow a question right there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The House, by rule agreed to, adopts Jefferson's Manual as a part of the rules of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has read from the manual, and has supplemented that reading by a statement of the invariable practice of the two bodies. Now, does the gentleman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It has not been the invariable practice. It has been the practice in recent years.

Mr. CANNON. Now, does the gentleman from Alabama believe that it is in his power and in the power of the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Senator LA FOLLETTE, practically speaking, to disregard a rule of this House—because Jefferson's Manual is a part of the rules of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, where I differ with the gentleman from Illinois—and I stated in the beginning—is that it is not a rule of procedure in the House. There is no rule of this House that governs the action of the Senate. There is no rule of this House that governs the conferees of the two bodies, except so far as the conferees of this House are concerned.

Now, in the early history of this House it was much in dispute as to whether the conferees of the Senate or the conferees of the House were entitled to the papers in a case similar to this. But the recent practice—not the rule—of the two Houses has been that the House agreeing to the conference should take the papers back to that House in case of an agreement and that the papers should go to the House asking for a conference in case of a disagreement.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman say that in matters as important as this it has been the rule within comparatively recent years to permit the whole matter to be decided by the conferees?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said that; yes.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose they could not agree. Then what could be done?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I recall one instance in Hinds' Parliamentary Practice and Precedents where he states that both sets of conferees, neither of them wanting to take the papers to either House, threw them on the middle of the table and walked off, leaving them in the middle of the table.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman reads from Jefferson's Manual the very paragraph which says that the duty of the conferees is, as in this case, to leave the papers with the Senate conferees, and in one case where they would not take them they left them on the table, as the gentleman should have done in this case.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say that there was such a dispute, and that in that case neither party would take the papers.

Mr. MANN. That was not in this country; that was in England.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is cited in Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. MANN. It is cited in Jefferson's Manual.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care where it happened, whether in this country or abroad. Mr. HINDS refers to it in his Precedents.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I simply contend this: It is not an important matter. Of course, if the House does not want to keep the papers and wants to send them to the Senate, and the Speaker holds that we are not entitled to these papers, then I will move that we send the papers there. It will probably delay action in this matter.

Mr. MANN. It would not be necessary to make a motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Senate has waived its right to the custody of the papers. The papers are lying on the Speaker's desk. Whenever we have the papers we are entitled to act upon them. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is believed that if the House can act promptly on this report and send it to the Senate we will reach the ultimate end desired more quickly than if we sent the papers to the other House.

I do not disagree with the gentleman from Illinois at all that if the Senate conferees had made a demand for these papers, in accordance with the precedents, it would have been my duty to yield to the demand and handed them the papers, and I would have done so. But they did not make the demand; they left the papers with me; and this proposition does not violate any precedent. They were willing for me to have the papers, and that being the case I present them to the House, having physical custody of them; and under these circumstances I say that the House is entitled to retain the papers and act on them next Monday. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we may concede that the gentleman from Illinois is correct in the light of the provision from Jefferson's Manual, and still this House is entitled to keep the papers in this case. And for this reason: If the Senate was insisting that it was entitled to keep the papers a different phase of the question would be presented, but the conferees representing the Senate have acted for the Senate, and have turned the papers over to the conferees of the House, and requested them to first present the report and statement and original papers to this House. Therefore, until the agents of the Senate, their conferees, insist that they are entitled to the papers this House should retain them as requested by the Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is a reason for it. Let me read from Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6573:

6573. In 1864 the first conference report on the bill (H. R. 122) to increase the internal revenue was disagreed to by the Senate. The House thereupon asked a new conference, which the Senate agreed to. The conferees, finding themselves unable to agree, drew up a report that they had been unable to agree, and signed it in due form. The papers were evidently delivered to the Senate conferees, as would have been the procedure in case an agreement had been reached, and were taken to the Senate first. But when there, Mr. John Sherman, of Ohio, one of the Senate conferees, said that after consultation it had been determined that it would be best for the Senate to send the papers to the House in order that that body might first take action on the papers. So the papers were sent to the House, where it was voted to insist on the disagreement, and ask a new conference, and instruct the House conferees.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate, through its agents, sent the papers through our conferees to this House. The Senate is not asking for the original papers, they are on the Speaker's desk, and until the conferees of the Senate or the Senate itself by affirmative action requests that these papers be sent to that body this House is entitled to them and we should take action thereon and settle this proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I suggest that we do not do any violence to the clause in Jefferson's Manual read by the gentleman from Illinois, and we need not take issue with him on the proposition, because that sort of case is not before us this morning, but one entirely different. We should act in pursuance of the agreement, desire, and request of the conferees from both bodies as now presented to us. Therefore I say that we should not return these papers to the Senate until requested by that body in the proper way, or unless the House should now desire by affirmative action and vote to do so. Not the slightest violence is done the rule invoked by the gentleman from Illinois, so long as the Senate fails to request a return of the papers and the House takes no action to that effect with the papers now in its physical possession and before it for the printing of the conference report and statement under the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] are both mistaken when they say that the House now has physical possession of the papers which lie on the Speaker's desk. In the first place, they are not on the Speaker's desk; and in the second place, when the gentleman from Alabama presented the papers I made the point of order that he had no right to present them. If the Speaker determines that he has no right, they are not in the possession of the House; they are in the possession of the gentleman from Alabama, and he should give them into the possession of the Senate conferees, where they belong. If they had been presented to the House without a point of order being raised, the House would then have been in physical possession of the papers, and would have to determine what its course should be.

Mr. Speaker, this question goes away beyond the question as to which body shall act first upon the wool tariff bill. If the Speaker determines that the House conferees in possession of the papers can keep them after the conference report is agreed upon no one can ever tell in the House, except the conferees, which body will be called upon to act first upon any conference report. Orderly procedure is necessary to preserve a fair consideration and an honest consideration of measures. We know now that under the rules as they have been made and construed, the body asking for the conference acts last upon the conference report, and that the body agreeing to the conference acts first upon the conference report. But if the contention of the gentleman from Alabama is agreed to, it rests solely within the sweet will of the conferees of one body. It will hardly do to say that the Senate consented to this; the Senate has had nothing to do with it.

The Senate conferees can have nothing to do with it. The House conferees were in possession of the papers and retained them. If they could retain them at all, they could retain them under any conditions. It is not sufficient to say that the Senate conferees permitted the papers to be retained. He who has possession of the papers can retain possession if he is acting within his rights; and if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has the right to ask the House to act first because he presents physical possession of the papers, then any House conferees will have the same rights in the future, regardless of whether the Senate conferees want the papers or do not want the papers.

The gentleman says it would delay matters to send these papers to the Senate. Not at all. It is well understood that the House is shortly to adjourn out of respect to the memory of one of the noblest Members who ever sat on this floor; but if the papers go to the Senate this afternoon, where they belong, the Senate, which does not require its conference reports to be printed a day ahead in the RECORD, can act at once upon the conference committee report and message it over to us on Monday, and then we can act in the House. Instead of delaying matters, it will expedite them.

But that has nothing to do with the question. Will we follow the precedent? Rule XLIII provides:

The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House and joint rules of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

There being no special standing rule and order of the House on this subject, Jefferson's Manual controls. It is one of the rules of the House, and Jefferson's Manual plainly states that the conferees of the House asking for the conference are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other body. It has not been a matter of dispute, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama. I have searched the precedents. There is no case where anyone has ever contended that in case the conferees reached an agreement, it was not necessary to transfer the papers. There has been some controversy where the conferees reported that they could not reach an agreement as to which set of conferees was entitled to the papers, but there is no case in the books, there is no case in the records, where anyone has ever before contended that when a conference committee reached an agreement this rule of Jefferson's Manual was not binding and did not require the physical possession of the papers to go to the conferees representing the body which agreed to the conference—in this case, the Senate.

I hope the exigencies of the case in this instance are not so strenuous that we are to violate the invariable practice of 100 years and the rules of the House, in order that the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber may leap to the bait and vote for what the other people call a protective tariff.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question for information? Is it the gentleman's contention that the Senate conferees can not voluntarily surrender these papers so as to bind the Senate?

Mr. MANN. Why certainly; the rules govern both bodies, and in the case referred to by the gentleman from Alabama and referred to in Jefferson's Manual, it says:

> And in one case where they refused to receive them they were left on the table in the conference chamber.

A rule can not be left to the sweet will of two conferees, and if the Senate conferees could agree to it, then they would have to agree to it if the House conferees did not consent to turn over the papers.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the importance of the question before us, and of the rule and precedents just cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], was first called to my attention in June, 1902, when the House was debating the Philippine bill, which on July 1 of that year became the organic act for the archipelago. The House Committee on Insular Affairs had for months been considering a bill for the government of the islands. The Senate passed a Philippine bill and sent it here. That bill contained no provision for a legislative assembly in the Philippine Islands. The question of whether Congress should enact a law establishing such a legislative assembly had led to much discussion in the press and elsewhere, some of it very bitter. The Senate was opposed to it by a large majority. No Senator ever advocated it. The Senate bill came here and was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs. That committee reported back the Senate bill with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the House bill, which included a provision for a legislative assembly in the Philippine Islands.

Thus amended the bill came before the House, was debated night and day for one week, and then passed by a large majority. It went to the Senate. Meanwhile a resolution fixing the final adjournment for a day early in the next week had passed both Houses. The Senate disagreed to the bill as amended and asked for a conference. But, Mr. Speaker, before the bill had passed the House, and during the debate, I was approached by a United States Senator strongly hostile to the provision for a legislative assembly and by him on two different occasions advised to request a conference. His anxiety impressed me. Not only did he ask me to do this, but another Senator came over and suggested that I move for a conference. One of these gentlemen said: "This is going to pass the House; when it does pass, you ask for a conference."

Immediately it occurred to me that this must be a matter of serious importance for gentlemen so hostile to the House amendment to be so earnest in their desire for me to request a conference. I told them that I would see about it. Then I began an investigation of the rules, and soon found the provision in Jefferson's Manual which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just cited.

I told members of the committee—Mr. Loud, of California, Mr. Tawney, and others—with whom I consulted that I should not ask for a conference because it would give away the possession of the papers; that in any event we could not get through with a conference until a very short time before the hour already fixed for adjournment; that if the conference report went first to the Senate that body would very probably instruct its conferees against the legislative assembly; and that because of the shortness of time and consequent hurry this hostile action of the Senate on that provision would perhaps have a determining influence on the vote here in the House.

So the House did not request a conference. The Senate did. The conference began on Friday and ended at half after 2 o'clock on Monday morning. On the same day the House adopted the conference report with the House provision for a legislative assembly. The Senate later adopted it, and it became a law. Congress soon adjourned.

Mr. Speaker, the right to the papers after a conference is not a right to be surrendered in the discretion of conferees. Suppose that the House were entitled to conference papers and to a first vote on an important conference report, does any gentleman claim that the House conferees would be entitled to surrender the papers to the Senate and deprive the present Democratic majority of its just right to vote first on a conference report?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER. But, according to the contention of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], the House conferees would have the right to give up the papers and permit the Senate to vote first——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. COOPER. I do.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Would not that always be within the control of the House?

Mr. COOPER. Control of the House—it is a matter of the two Houses. It is a matter of rule and of long-established precedent.

At the conclusion of the conference on the Philippine bill, Senator LODGE, Senator Allison, and other distinguished Senators being among the conferees on the part of the Senate, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Judge CRUMPACKER] being two of the conferees on the part of the House, this very question was suggested. I remarked that the Senate having asked for the conference the House was entitled to the papers; and the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said, "Certainly," and the Senator himself had suggested that I ask for the conference.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a question of very great consequence. Suppose the conferees in their committee room, appreciating the exceeding importance it sometimes is to have the first vote, should have a physical contention over the possession of the papers? Which House would get the papers then? Suppose each House should sustain its own conferees, what then would result? Then what authority would there be by which to get the papers into either House? Is it possible that Jefferson's reference to this means nothing? No, Mr. Speaker, it is so important that the greatest of Democrats, Thomas Jefferson, laid it down in his manual as a rule of procedure that ought always to be followed.

Mr. BUTLER. And if not to be followed, why did he make a reference to it?

Mr. COOPER. Exactly, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, if it is not to be followed, why did Jefferson make any reference to it?

Mr. Speaker, Jefferson referred to it because it is of vital importance. A dispute between the conferees of the two Houses over possession of the papers leaves the papers on their table; the Senate demands that they come to the Senate and the House demands that they come to the House. Where are they going?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that there is no disagreement between the conferees, as far as the House or the Speaker is informed, about who should have these papers.

Mr. COOPER. But, Mr. Speaker, suppose there had been trouble? We are making a precedent not only for cases where there is an amicable agreement by which one set of conferees have surrendered the rights of one of the Houses of Congress, but we are making a precedent to govern, also, in cases of dispute, which, without it, might lead to physical encounter.

We are making a precedent which ought under all circumstances, in every instance, to govern the deliberations of conferees. Mr. Speaker, it is of exceeding importance to the House that this rule, laid down in the manual of Thomas Jefferson, the greatest of all Democrats, should not be disregarded. [Applause.]

There is one question, Mr. Speaker, that I thought I had already propounded; but the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] calls it to my attention, and I reiterate it. Suppose that this House, under Jefferson's rule, were entitled now—as it is not—to these papers and to a first vote on this report; suppose, also, that every Member were present, alert, and anxious to vote; but suppose that the House conferees had for some reason deliberately handed over the papers to the Senate conferees and robbed the House of its rights; what then would the present Democratic majority have said? Would they have approved and been pleased with the surrender by their conferees? Not at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think this is largely a tempest in a teapot, but I wish to call the Speaker's attention to section 549 of Jefferson's Manual. In that section it is stated that where the two Houses come to a disagreement it is customary for the House asking for a conference to take the papers, the opposite of what occurred here. And then the last paragraph says:

> But sometimes managers have brought the papers to the agreeing House without question.

And then it cites Hinds' Precedents, V. 6239, footnote.

Now, the practice——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman understand that that only refers to a case where the conferees report they can not agree?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, well, I am merely citing this. Of course, I understand that refers to a case, and not this case, of disagreement. But it shows that there are recent precedents, as shown in Hinds' Digest, where the conferees without objection have brought the papers not to the disagreeing House but to the House that asks for the conference.

Mr. MANN. That is where there is no agreement. Of course they retain the possession of the papers when there is an agreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, this note shows that sometimes the conferees have violated or changed the customary rule in these cases.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; I am not mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I have examined the cases. It only relates to cases where there has been a disagreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, it only relates to a case where there has been a disagreement, but if the rule is not followed in cases of disagreement uniformly, why should it be followed uniformly in cases of agreement? It shows that there is no uniform rule.

Mr. MANN. The rule as laid down in Jefferson's Manual applies only to a case where there has been an agreement, and that is the only rule I have cited. The gentleman's citation is where there has been no agreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; but in ordinary cases where there has been no agreement the papers go back to the House asking for the conference. But this precedent shows that sometimes that rule is violated and the conferees let the papers go to the other House. So that I say, Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely in the hands of the conferees to bring the papers to that House where the conferees desire them to go, and if the House receiving the papers does not want them it can send them back to the other House. It is within the power of the House to determine what it pleases.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In a moment. But I say this: If there had been a demand on the part of the Senate for these papers I would have delivered them to the Senate conferees, because it would have been in accordance with the precedents. The Senate did not ask for the papers. The Senate conferees left them with me, and therefore I brought them back to this House. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I merely wanted to ask a question on that point. The gentleman says he was instructed to take these papers?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I did not say that I was instructed to take these papers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Was there a formal vote taken?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How was the instruction given?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate conferees said they did not want the papers. They did not ask for them. They left them with me, and I brought them back to the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. The reason I asked that question was that I understood that the entire proceedings of that conference were public——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly——

Mr. LONGWORTH. And, of course, as this is, in my opinion, a question of more or less importance—even though it is a tempest in a teapot, in the judgment of the gentleman, as he suggests—I wanted to know how the gentleman was instructed, whether by formal instruction of the conferees, or otherwise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Otherwise. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is proper in a matter of conference for the House, or for either body, to act upon oral statements in a conference committee, when the method usually pursued is to present the written statement of the conferees?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, the gentleman from Illinois is assuming a fact that is not true. There is a written statement on the desk, telling what occurred in the conference.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman have possession of the papers in the conference?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I had possession of them when I left this Hall and when I came back. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. The only way to get anything officially before this body is by a report, not by an oral statement. Does the gentleman contend that if the Senate conferees had ordered the papers, and he had kept them, there would have been any different situation in the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senate conferees had wanted these papers, I would have left the papers with them, because under recent precedents they are entitled to them.

Mr. MANN. If they declined to give them, does the gentleman think the situation would be changed in the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I do not act that way.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have seen times in conference when the gentlemen in the conference would not give up the papers, by any means. It often becomes an extremely important question as to who has the physical possession of the papers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that my experience is not as great as his. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is why I wanted to help the gentleman out. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that I have been here 16 years, and it is only recently that I have had charge of the papers. [Applause and laughter.] And I have had no desire on my part to fight for them.

Mr. MANN. I recall an instance where I had the physical possession of the papers and returned from a conference and locked the papers up. That was in the case of a fight between the House and the Senate. We did not propose to let the Senate have its way.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman this: That if the House acts on this conference report favorably and the Senate acts upon it favorably, and it is signed by the President, will it not be a valid act?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is so.

Mr. SIMS. That is all the people care about. They do not care about this controversy on rules, do they? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Evidently it is not so important now to have good rules as it was when we were in power.

Mr. SIMS. It would be important to have good rules, if we did not have a lot of rules crooks to pass upon them. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to say again that if the Senate had demanded these papers I would have delivered them. They did not ask for the papers. They were willing to leave them in my possession to bring back to the House. They are in this House, and we have a right to act on them, because the bill is here.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. DYER. I should like to ask the gentleman this question: He says the Senate conferees did not ask for the papers. I should like to ask him if he or any of the House conferees offered the papers to them?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, well, informally we stated that we had the papers, and informally they stated that we could keep them.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Alabama says that the Senate surrendered the papers—that if the Senate had asked for the papers it could have had them. I ask the gentleman whether this matter was presented to the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate never have had the papers.

Mr. COOPER. Why?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because I had them all the time. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman says that the Senate did not ask for the papers?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. The question has never been presented to the Senate. Permit me to say to the gentleman that the question of the disposition of these papers was not before the conferees. Conferees have no right to surrender such papers in their discretion and against the rules. The disposition of these papers was not a question for the conferees at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not surrender the papers, and the joint conferees have not asked for them. I had them when I went to the conference, and I have brought them back to the House. If the House wants to surrender them, the House has a right to pass a resolution and send them over to the Senate. It is in the power of this House to do so. If the House does not want to surrender them, no objection that I have heard has come from the Senate conferees or from the Senate. If they send a message over here and demand the papers, we can act upon it if we have not acted on the conference report before that time. But I think it is preferable—I am satisfied that the Senate prefers—that we act on this conference report first, because it will expedite business. Therefore I say that we are not violating any precedent. If the Senate conferees had asked for the papers, I would have yielded them without question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I would not wish the statement to go unchallenged that the managers on the part of either House have a right to waive any of the rights of either House in a conference, and I am quite clear that under the rule of the House and the settled practice and rules of procedure in a case like this the managers on the part of the Senate are entitled to the papers and to present them first to their body. But it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the point as presented can hardly be sustained.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has done two things. He has presented a conference report and a statement for printing in the RECORD under the rule and he has sent to the Clerk for the possession of the House papers which were in his possession.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to state what I understand to be the situation.

Mr. MANN. That is not the situation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has offered to the House——

Mr. MANN. He has stated, "I present to the House these original papers."

Mr. FITZGERALD. He presents to the House the papers which were in his possession. The gentleman from Illinois made the point of order that the House can not receive these papers because the gentleman from Alabama has no right to their possession, and therefore has no right to present them to the House. But as a matter of fact he had the papers, and as a matter of fact he does present them to the House.

I take it that the gentleman from Alabama himself has suggested the remedy if the gentleman from Illinois desires to reach it, and that is, the papers having been presented to the House, if the House believes it proper that they should be sent to the Senate they must be sent there on the order of the House.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama offers to present to the House as a privileged matter certain papers. If he had offered to present anything to the House as a privileged matter which was not privileged the point of order would lie against it. In this case I made the point of order. The gentleman from Alabama can not present anything to the House which is not privileged to be presented. The mere fact that he has the papers has nothing to do with it; he is endeavoring to present them as a matter of privilege, and it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule provides that conference reports may be presented at any time. The gentleman presents his report and the papers upon which the report is based.

Mr. MANN. Presenting a conference report is a privileged matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly; and he presented with it the papers on which the conference report is based. The gentleman does not make the point of order that it is not a matter of privilege to present the papers, but he makes the point of order that the Senate is first entitled to the papers.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken; I make the point of order that the House can not receive the papers, and the reason for that is because the House must receive the papers in this case by a message from the Senate.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if he does not consider that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], being a conferee appointed by the House, is the agent of the House, and that being the agent of the House and these papers being in his possession are therefore already in the possession of the House. The conferees appointed by the House are a part of the House. They are the arm of the House, just as a sheriff or a marshal is the arm of the court. That which is in possession of the sheriff or the marshal is in the possession of the court. Is not what is in the possession of the conferees in the possession of the House? The gentleman from Alabama, being the agent of the House is in possession of the papers; therefore the papers are in the possession of this body.

Mr. MANN. The House has the receipt of the gentleman from Alabama for the papers.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is in the hands of a receiver appointed by the court is in the hands of the court, and what is in the hands of the conferees appointed by the House is, in the contemplation of law, in the hands of the House to be disposed of by the House under its rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, suppose the Chair should sustain the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois and refuse to permit the gentleman from Alabama acting as manager on the part of the House to deliver these papers to the House. The gentleman from Alabama might put the papers in his pocket.

Mr. MANN. Yes, he might have thrown them in the fire.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fact is that the papers are physically on the desk. If they do not belong here a resolution to test the sense of the House as to whether they should be sent back to the Senate would be privileged.

Mr. MANN. If the Speaker holds that the gentleman from Alabama does not have the right to present the papers to the House they go back to the possession of the gentleman from Alabama who, in accordance with the rule, will give them to the Senate conferees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a non sequitur. The gentleman from Alabama might not. It might be unwise to trust the gentleman from Alabama with the papers again, now that the House managers have an agreement and the report has been presented.

I was inclined to believe at the outset that the gentleman from Illinois was accurate in his conclusion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knew that I was and he knows it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, if I believed that the gentleman was now accurate I would support him with my argument regardless of the effect on the bill, or the political advantages resulting; because, in my opinion, the necessity of maintaining the rules in their integrity, and the parliamentary procedure under which we act, is of more importance than a temporary advantage to either party.

Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen have called attention to a precedent in the Senate in 1864, where it was ascertained that papers had been delivered inadvertently or improperly to the managers on the part of the Senate, and after consultation of the conferees it was believed that the papers should have been delivered to the managers on the part of the House. Without having examined the record of the discussion, it seems to be quite a fair inference that the papers were sent back by an order adopted by the Senate and not upon the question being raised that the Senate could not have received the papers; because it is quite clear that the Senate did have the papers from the summary given in Hinds' Digest.

A careful examination of the precedents fails to disclose an instance in which the papers presented, as in this instance, were rejected upon the interposition of a point of order.

There is no doubt that it becomes of vital importance at times, not only as to which House has the papers, but which House may be entitled to the papers, and it is of more importance to the House that the rules be strictly observed than it is to the other body, because in the other body the report can be presented and acted upon at once, and action might be taken before the House would have the opportunity to make a request for the papers; but with the House, conference reports, excepting during the last six days of the session, must be printed one day in the RECORD, and one day at least must intervene before action. If the Senate believes that it should have these papers, and desires to act upon them in the first instance, it will have an opportunity to send its request to the House for them. But I do not understand that under our practice a point of order can be interjected as to something that is actually a fact. It seems to me that as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has turned the papers over to the House, the House has them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I might suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it would not be necessary for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] at this time to deliver the papers to the Clerk, but when he calls up the conference report for action he could deliver them to the Clerk either in the open House or before the House convened; but so long as they were in the possession of the Clerk the House would have possession of them.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that if any Member on the floor of the House says he presents a privileged matter, and it is not a privileged matter, that it is not subject to a point of order, which will prevent the gentleman presenting it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I believe that can be done.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference between that and this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman presents a privileged matter. He presents a conference report.

Mr. MANN. And to that extent has a right to present it, but has he the right to couple with it something else that he has not a right to present?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe that he has coupled with it anything that he has not a right to present. Suppose this were a case in which there was no controversy as to whether the House was entitled to the possession of the papers in the first instance. The gentleman from Alabama would do the identical thing that he has done here—he would present the conference report with the original papers.

Mr. MANN. He would have the right to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under what rule would he have a right to do it in that instance and not in this one?

Mr. MANN. In this case the records show that the gentleman from Alabama does not have possession of the papers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But he has them.

Mr. MANN. He has physical possession, but as far as the House rules are concerned he is not entitled to the possession of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I disagree with the gentleman. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman offering the papers here and the House actually having them in its possession, the only manner in which they can be sent to the Senate, if they should be sent there, would be by resolution, which would be entitled to consideration as a privileged resolution. I state very frankly that in the first instance I was inclined to believe with the gentleman from Illinois that perhaps they should be rejected on the point of order, but the House has them and it has control over them, and it seems to me that under these circumstances the point of order will not intervene.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that in this instance as a practical matter there is any point to gain, whatever the decision of the Chair may be. It seems, allunde the RECORD, as a matter of fact, the conferees of the House and Senate have come to an agreement upon the bill. It is not controverted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the rules of the House which bind him, bind the Speaker, and bind every other Member of the House, require that the papers should be handed over to the conferees on the part of the Senate. There is no joint rule touching the matter, but the House rule wherein we adopt Jefferson's Manual as a part of our rules is perfectly plain, and in practice touching revenue bills and appropriation bills, and all other bills, the rule of the House, it is admitted, governs the agents of the House, the conferees.

Now, it is important to every Member of the House, along the line of orderly legislation to know whether individually or as a body we will conform to the rule. Every Member who has investigated this matter knows that under the rule this report should be made to the Senate first. It is said, "Yes, that is the rule, but it shall not be enforced in this instance." Why? Because the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and one of the conferees representing the other body have agreed that the practice of the two bodies will be waived. The gentleman from Alabama says, "I will waive the rule of the House and bring the papers back," although the rule of the House is the other way.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment; I want to finish the statement, and then I will yield. "But," says some gentleman, "the gentleman from Alabama is the agent of the House, and therefore binds the House." It is a new doctrine in law, parliamentary or otherwise, that an agent can bind a principal without authority [applause on the Republican side] and bind a principal against the express authority and a rule of the House. Now, I think it is important, dissociated from our desire to get away, Monday, Tuesday, or Monday week, or any other time, that we should have certainty in our proceedings.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. CANNON. There has been certainty under the practice of the House, and there should continue to be certainty, and it should not be in the power of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], when he presents in the coming session of Congress the great money bills, carrying hundreds of millions of dollars, to consult with a Member of the other body and conclude that the practice affecting the two bodies and the practice as declared by the rule of the House shall be varied, and to state that because the conferees saw fit to nullify the rule, and that is sufficient.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know now if there is any tactical advantage to be gained from a partisan standpoint by having this report first submitted to the Senate, and I do not care, but along the line of the rule of the House and certainty in proceedings in this great body, I believe the point of order is well taken. The point of order, invoking the rule, is that this is not a privileged question, it is not a privileged report, and there is no way of getting at it except by a point of order.

It has been asked, What will happen if the point of order is sustained; will we by message send the papers back to the Senate? That is not necessary or proper. If the point of order is sustained, the conferees have the papers, and they would be passed over under the rules of the House in the ordinary practice to the Senate conferees. Suppose that the gentleman from Alabama would put them in his pocket or burn them, or would be stubborn and say, "I will not play"? We would find a way to make any Member of this House play, and the gentleman from Alabama would not either have the right or the disposition to refuse to play.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman has argued as the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] argued, that Jefferson's Manual is part of the rules of this House?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And, under the rules of the House, the gentleman from Alabama has no right to present the original papers as a part of a conference report as a privileged matter.

Mr. CANNON. He has no right to present the conference report without the papers. If he has taken the papers, with a strong hand against the rule, it is void. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman this: Suppose, if the gentleman's argument is correct, that the Senate, by its affirmative action, instructs its conferees to turn the papers over to the House conferees; then, would it not still be against the rules of the House for the House conferees to present them for the purpose of being printed under the rules?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the gentleman supposes a case that is——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Would not the rules have to be changed in order to receive them?

Mr. MANN. Receive what papers?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The papers accompanying the report of the conferees.

Mr. MANN. The papers come from the Senate when they come with a message.

Mr. CANNON. That is the way we get possession of them. We get them by message after the Senate acts upon them, and they would come independent of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes. But in this case they are presented for printing under the rules.

Mr. CANNON. The report is presented for printing under the rules, but the papers do not accompany the report and are no part of the report.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule, although the Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri if he desires to be heard.

No Member of the House believes more firmly that the rules of the House should be observed than does the present occupant of the Chair. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seems never to have been raised hitherto; that is, in any case where the conferees agreed.

There is no question about this rule in Jefferson's Manual being a part of the rules of the House, and there is no question about what the procedure would be if nothing had been done to vary it. The papers under that rule, without anything else being done or said to influence it, would go to the Senate. The situation here is that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDER-

WOOD] undoubtedly had physical possession of the papers. As suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] there are two or three ways of getting physical possession of the papers. One is by violence. If that is to be the method of procedure, the Speaker could discreetly and judiciously, if he thought there was going to be any trouble about it, pick the conferees on account of their physical strength. [Laughter.] But the gentleman from Alabama states, and until it is controverted, of course, his statement stands, that the Senate conferees voluntarily gave to him these papers, and he came into the House in physical possession of them and offers them to the House. Being in possession of the papers carries with it the presumption of right of possession.

The Chair does not know, officially at least, anything as to any supposed effect as to the House having possession of the papers and voting on the conference report; but the fact remains that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has physical possession of these papers, has brought them into the House, and has tendered them to the House with the free consent of the agents of the Senate.

If it should turn out that the Senate does not indorse the action of its conferees, it is easily remedied. All it has to do is to send a resolution over here asking for the return of these papers to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Would the House then be required to accede to the request?

The SPEAKER. Well, that is not involved in this matter; but I think the House would, as a matter of ordinary courtesy, send the papers to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. The Chair could not order them sent. The House would be required to send them, would it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not order them sent. The House could send them.

Mr. MANN. If it wanted to do so.

The SPEAKER. If it wanted to do so; but it would not have to send them if it did not want to do so, and there would be the end of the whole transaction, unless one body or the other changed its opinion. There is still another remedy. If the House does not indorse the action of the conferees in agreeing among themselves for the gentleman from Alabama to have physical possession of these papers and to bring them in here, the House can correct the action of the House conferees by the simple process of passing a resolution and sending the papers to the Senate. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says correctly that it is the law that where an agent exceeds his authority, his principal is not bound, which is true; but he states only half the legal proposition, the other half being that where the agent exceeds his authority and the principal indorses his action, the principal is bound by the agent's act. The point of order is overruled. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 89, answered "present" 12, not voting 124, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The conference report and statement of the House conferees will be printed under the rule.

The conference report (No. 144) and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended by striking out all of Schedule K thereof, being paragraphs 360 to 395, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Schedule K. Wool and manufactures thereof.

"360. On wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and on all wools and hair on the skin of such animals, the duty shall be 29 per cent ad valorem.

"361. On all noils, top waste, card waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, bur waste, thread waste, garnetted waste, shoddies, mungo, flocks, wool extract, carbonized wool, carbonized noils, and on all other wastes and on woolen rags composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 29 per cent ad valorem.

"362. On combed wool or tops and roving or roping, made wholly of wool or camel's hair, or of which wool or camel's hair is the component material of chief value, and all wools and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 32 per cent ad valorem.

"363. On yarns made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 35 per cent ad valorem.

"364. On cloths, knit fabrics, flannels not for underwear, composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, and goods of similar description and character, clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including shawls, whether knitted or woven, and knitted articles of every description made up or manufactured wholly or in part, felts not woven, and not specially provided for in this section, webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, bandings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, edgings, insertings, flouncings, fringes, gimps, cords, cords and tassels, ribbons, ornaments, laces, trimmings, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, embroideries and all articles embroidered by hand or machinery, head nets, nettings, buttons or barrel buttons or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, and manufactures of wool ornamented with beads or spangles of whatever material composed, on any of the foregoing and on all manufactures of every description made by any process of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, whether containing india rubber or not, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 49 per cent ad valorem.

"365. On all blankets, and flannels for underwear, composed wholly of wool, or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 38 per cent ad valorem.

"366. On Aubusson, Axminster, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; on Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; and on carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms, and Oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs, the duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem.

"367. On Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; and on velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

"368. On tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise; on treble ingrain, three-ply, and all-chain Venetian carpets; on wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets; on druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise; and on carpets and carpeting of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

"369. Mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description.

"370. On all manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animal, or of which any of the hair mentioned in paragraph 360 form the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 49 per cent ad valorem.

"371. Whenever in this act the word 'wool' is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, whether manufactured by the woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process."

SEC. 2. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry or withdrawal thereof than the duty which would be imposed if such goods, wares, or merchandise were imported on or after that date.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of October, 1911.

And the Senate agree to the same.

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
C. B. RANDELL,
FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
J. W. BAILEY,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report:

The agreement reached by the conference committee is in the form of a substitute for the House bill and the amendment of the Senate, and is set forth in extenso in the accompanying conference report.

In brief, the salient points of agreement recommended as to the differences between the two Houses on the rates of duty on wool and manufactures thereof are as follows:

The rate of duty recommended on raw wool is 29 per cent ad valorem, instead of 20 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and the varying rates, ranging from 10 to 35 per cent ad valorem, on the three classifications of wool proposed by the Senate.

The rate on wool wastes and rags agreed upon is 29 per cent ad valorem, instead of 20 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the House bill and the rates of 25 or 30 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The duty on combed wool or tops agreed upon is 32 per cent ad valorem, instead of 25 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the House bill and 40 per cent ad valorem as proposed by the Senate.

The duty agreed upon for yarns is 35 per cent ad valorem, instead of 30 per cent ad valorem as proposed by the House bill and 45 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty on blankets and flannels for underwear is fixed at 38 per cent ad valorem, instead of 30 per cent ad valorem in the House bill for blankets and the cheaper flannels.

The duty agreed upon for cloths, ready-made clothing, knit fabrics, flannels not for underwear, women's dress goods, webbings, gorings, etc., and articles not specially provided for, is 49 per cent ad valorem, instead of the varying rates in the House bill, ranging from 35 to 50 per cent ad valorem, and 55 per cent ad valorem as proposed by the Senate.

Three classifications were agreed upon for carpets, ranging in duty from 30 to 50 per cent ad valorem instead of the varying classifications in the House bill carrying duties from 25 to 50 per cent ad valorem, and 35 per cent ad valorem as proposed by the Senate amendment.

The date when the act shall take effect is made October 1, 1911, instead of January 1, 1912.

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
C. B. RANDELL,
FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 2925. An act to extend the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Brownsville, Tex.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2. An act supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2. An act supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on House concurrent resolution No. 11, requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign nations to participate in the celebration of the completion of the Florida East Coast Railway Co.'s line, connecting the mainland of Florida with Key West.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on House concurrent resolution No. 11. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE LOUDENSLAGER.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my solemn duty to convey to the House the sad message that H. C. LOUDENSLAGER, of New Jersey, for more than 18 years an active, energetic, and highly respected Member of this House, has departed this life.

At a later day I shall ask for a special order fixing a time when the House may pay further respect to his memory. At present I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 280.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That a committee of 20 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the Senate and also transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as a committee, on the part of the House, Mr. CANNON, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BATES, Mr. LLOYD, Mr. MCKINLEY, Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina, Mr. RODENBERG, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. CRAVENS, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey, Mr. WOOD of New Jersey, Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey, Mr. HAMILL, Mr. MCCOY, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. SCULLY, and Mr. TUTTLE.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, August 14, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 14, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, took the chair as President pro tempore for the day, under the previous designation of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3052) granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 2932. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to sell the old post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., and, in the event of such sale, to enter into a contract for the construction of a suitable post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., without additional cost to the Government of the United States;

S. 3152. An act extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota; and

H. R. 2925. An act to extend the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Brownsville, Tex.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the ratification of the proposed treaties of arbitration between the United States, Great Britain, and France, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of Local Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Faribault, Minn., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

NEZ PERCE INDIANS IN IDAHO.

Mr. BORAH. I present a memorial of the Nez Perce Indians residing in the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. (S. Doc. No. 97.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho desires to have it printed as a document?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; if there is no objection, I should like to have it printed.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho what the document is?

Mr. BORAH. It is a memorial of the Nez Perce Indians residing in the State of Idaho as to their rights. I have gone over it hastily. There is nothing in it that would be objectionable, I take it.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think it is of sufficient importance to be printed as a public document?

Mr. BORAH. The memorialists have especially asked that it be printed, and I find no reason to deny their request.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the memorial will be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 141) thereon.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11545) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to place the name of Annie M. Matthews on the pension roll of the police and firemen's pension fund, reported it without amendment.

ELIZA CHOTEAU ROSCAMP.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11303) for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp, to report it without amendment and I submit a report (No. 142) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to approve an order for the removal of restrictions upon alienation from the northeast quarter southeast quarter section 10, township 25 north, range 24 east, of the Indian meridian, Oklahoma, the homestead allotment of Eliza Choteau Roscamp, Seneca allotment No. 184, the removal of restrictions to become effective only and simultaneously with the execution of a deed by the allottee to the purchaser, after the land has been sold in compliance with the directions of the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3218) providing for the dedication of the Gettysburg National Military Park at Gettysburg, Pa.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WETMORE:

A bill (S. 3219) granting a pension to Lottie I. Brown (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON (for Mr. MCCUMBER):

A bill (S. 3220) for the relief of the heirs of Waldo M. Potter, deceased (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WORKS:

A bill (S. 3221) making it unlawful to publish details of crimes and accidents in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3223) to increase the limit of cost for the United States post-office building at Sistersville, W. Va., and making appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

DECISION OF QUESTIONS CONCERNING CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I introduce a brief bill and will ask to have it read in order that it may appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The bill (S. 3222) to provide rules for speedy and final decision of questions concerning the constitutionality of national and State laws and constitutional provisions and for the interpretation and construction of the Federal laws and Constitution was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any action, suit, or proceeding in the Supreme Court of the United States when the constitutionality of any provision of a Federal or State law, or of a State constitution, shall be drawn in quesion or decided, the constitutionality thereof shall be sustained unless the Supreme Court, by unanimous decision of all its members qualified to sit in the cause, shall determine that the provision in controversy is not authorized or is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States. That in any action, suit, or proceeding in the Supreme Court when the meaning, interpretation, or construction of any language of any Federal law or of the Constitution of the United States shall be drawn in question or decided, the same shall be interpreted and construed literally as the words are commonly understood in everyday use, unless the Supreme Court, by unanimous decision of all its members qualified to sit in the cause, shall decide that such literal interpretation is not the true expression of the legislative intention and meaning in the language in controversy.

SEC. 2. If any inferior Federal court, commission, or tribunal shall decide in any case that any provision of any such Federal or State law or provision of a State constitution is not authorized or is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, or shall interpret or construe the meaning of any language of any Federal law or constitutional provision to be different from its literal verbal statements as the words are commonly understood in everyday use, it shall be the duty of said lower court, commission, or tribunal to forthwith certify said question of constitutionality, meaning, interpretation, or construction to the Supreme Court of the United States for final decision. Every such Federal inferior court, commission, and tribunal is hereby authorized, in the discretion of the members thereof, to certify any such question to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision in advance of the trial of the cause on the merits in said lower court, commission, or tribunal. The United States Department of Justice shall pay all the necessary expenses and costs of presenting every such question in the Supreme Court of the United States. It shall be the duty of the Supreme Court to advance every such cause over all other causes on the docket not directly involving the constitutionality, meaning, interpretation, or construction of any such act, law, or constitutional provision.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I shall not at this time present an argument upon this bill. The purpose of the measure will, I think, be readily apparent. The Congress of the United States is one of the coordinate branches of our Government. A very considerable number of the Members of both Houses of Congress are learned in the law, and some of them are lawyers of considerable renown. In each House there is a Committee on Judiciary, composed of the strongest and ablest lawyers in each body, which committees give particular study to constitutional questions arising when proposed laws are under consideration.

Because Congress is a coordinate branch, and because of the careful attention the Members of Congress give to constitutional questions arising regarding legislation, it has been held by the United States Supreme Court that no act of Congress should be held to be in violation of the Constitution unless the conflict appears beyond reasonable doubt. Thus the court said in Ogden v. Saunders (12 Wheat., 269):

> It is but a decent respect due to the wisdom, the integrity, and the patriotism of the legislative body by which any law is passed to presume in favor of its validity until its violation of the Constitution is proved beyond all reasonable doubt.

The Supreme Court has, however, in numerous instances held to be unconstitutional acts of Congress which some of the members of the Supreme Court believed to be entirely in harmony with our fundamental law. In cases such as this there certainly existed a very substantial doubt whether the measure in question was in fact in contravention of the Constitution.

In my opinion, unless a State law or an act of Congress is so clearly unconstitutional that the court will be unanimous in so declaring, the decision of the court should uphold the validity of the act.

I think it is generally conceded there is no express authority for the Supreme Court's exercise of power to declare a law unconstitutional. This power has been assumed by the court as an incident of the exercise of the powers expressly conferred. I believe it is within the power of Congress to prescribe the number of concurring judges necessary in arriving at a decision which shall constitute the decision of the court. The first section of the bill I have offered requires that where a State law or an act of Congress is declared unconstitutional the court must be unanimous. One dissenting vote will establish the existence of a reasonable doubt. It also provides that the language of an act must be construed literally unless the court, by unanimous decision, rule otherwise.

Regarding the second section of the bill, I wish merely to say that it is important that every constitutional question be determined at as early a date as possible by the highest court in the land; and, therefore, when any Federal or State law is held unconstitutional by an inferior Federal court, the question should be immediately certified to the United States Supreme Court.

The purpose of this bill is not to allow one, two, three, or four members of the Supreme Court to overrule eight, seven, six, or five members of that distinguished branch of our Government; but, rather, to enable one, two, three, or four members of that court to prevent eight, seven, six, or five of its members from overruling the wishes of the Nation, as expressed through Congress, or the wishes of a sovereign State, as expressed by its electorate or by its legislature.

I have requested that the bill be printed in the RECORD, and have made this explanation in the hope that the subject will be given discussion by both the laity and the legal fraternity before it comes up for consideration before the Judiciary Committee, to which I ask that it be referred.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am impelled to recognize the entrance of another one of those oddities in proposed legislation that is consistent with a persistent attempt that is being made that the minority shall rule in this country. All of these new-fad political cults are based upon the demand that the minority shall rule—every one of them.

Now, here comes a proposition this morning that the majority of our supreme courts or of the Supreme Court of the United States shall not express the ultimate judgment of the court, but that a minority shall be recognized, not as an equally potent power but as a superior power; and the Senator from Oregon states that that is the purpose of the legislation.

I am interested in the development of the possibilities of danger. We must be interested in order to be alert and on our guard against these things. They sound plausible, and to those who are not trained in the consideration of public questions they are often very misleading. They are generally coupled with honeyed phrases—the people, the rights of the people, the oppression of the people, the grinding monopolies, and such like expressions; and the people start up in sudden alarm and say, "Why, can that be true? Are we being oppressed, or are we in danger at the hands of these familiar conditions?" Some one is always at hand to say, "Why, certainly; this crushing, grinding force is going to destroy you." By and by, of course, they will say, "Well, where is this enemy?" And by that time perhaps the sponsor will have disappeared and be not at hand to answer the question, but the virus has been placed in the minds of the people.

I ran across it since we adjourned on Saturday. I had my attention called to the utterances of a Senator from the State of Oregon on this question of substituting irresponsibility for responsibility in government.

It was at the hands of a substantial old gentleman who has lived to be almost 80 years of age and had participated, as he thought, in an intelligent and reasonable way in affairs. He had received a copy of this speech, and he said to me, addressing me by my familiar personal name, "Can it be possible that this man is right?" He said, "He proposes to substitute an entirely new form of government for that which I have been accustomed to for a long lifetime. Is there anything in it?" I said, "No; it is a cross between populism and anarchy. Do not be led away by it, and tell your neighbors not to be led away by it." It is absolutely a man's duty in this age to warn those who inquire in regard to these things, and if he does not warn them and do what he can to meet it, he fails in the performance of his duty.

Now, here we come with a proposition that all courts, in effect, shall not act until after the violation of the law has been completed. That is what it amounts to. It stays the prohibitive arm of the court that holds men and measures in the status of safety until after these vandals, who would violate every man's right, have had time to complete their nefarious act. That is what it means.

Now, the Senator said that Congress is composed of men learned in the law. Thank God it is; but if any countenance is ever given to that kind of legislation I shall have reason to recant and take back that expression. That the courts may not proceed to determine the conclusion in a case by a majority of the court simply means that you will dictate to the court what they would do, and allow the minority to prevent the rendition of judgments. In these the closing days of this session this proposition comes to us to go out to poison the atmosphere during the interval of our absence before we return to the regular session. The doctrine is as dangerous as that behind the iron cages in the courts of Rome to-day, as dangerous as the preachings of the Black Hand and the mob. Let it grow, and it grows by the inattention of those who are wise enough and brave enough to know better.

The hour for plain speaking has arrived. It is one thing after another each day, sapping and undermining the confidence of the people in their institutions and in their government. It is high time that no occasion be allowed to pass for uttering a word of disapproval and rebuke to those who would thus subtly sap and undermine the institutions, because when you send out such propositions, when you utter them, you violate the rules of patriotism and good citizenship, and you leave in men's minds this virus that in times of stress, which are coming upon us perhaps, will sprout and grow in a night. Then these dangerous doctrines will be invoked as the cause for the existing conditions and as the remedy against them. Have we not seen it in the lifetime of all of us? We see it charged that the conditions that confronted us were the result of these enforcements of the law against which this proposed measure is directed. The people, in the blindness and desperation of their misery, will reach out and grasp at anything that is even labeled relief to them; they will take this false doctrine in those dread hours of distress and build up sentiments that go over the lawful purposes of government and crush it down, until they have been exhausted by their own rottenness, discovered by the thinking and conservative minds of the people, and are swept away off the decks, and the old ship comes up again and rides the waves, disencumbered from this blindness that had sunk her down. It is time that we met them, even in the very hour and very moment of their utterance, rather than to allow them to go out and sprout and begin to germinate and to corrupt the public mind and the atmosphere of patriotism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the bill will be considered as read twice, by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the second reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read the first time. It will await the further action of the Senate for its second reading.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I notice the conferees on the part of the Senate who had charge of the wool bill (H. R. 11019) are nearly all present on the floor, and I desire to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] if he can tell the Senate how it happened that the conference report on that bill has gone to the House of Representatives before it was made to the Senate? I want to say that the House of Representatives, having asked for the conference, under all the rules of procedure followed in both Houses of Congress for the last 15 years, the conference report should first have been made to the Senate; and I desire to enter my protest of record against any attempt on the part of the conferees of the Senate to change a rule that is so well recognized as the rule to which I refer. Would the Senator from Pennsylvania kindly indicate how it happened that the original papers were reported to the House of Representatives by the House conferees before they were reported to the Senate?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan, of course, is entirely right in his contention, so far as the practice and the precedents go in these matters. Unfortunately, I have been absent for four days, and was not present at the meeting of the conferees, not being much of a factor therein, anyway, under the circumstances. I would refer the Senator from Michigan to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who may be able to enlighten him on the subject. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House appears to have had possession of the papers and reported them to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I shall be very glad if the Senator from Wisconsin will give me his attention for a moment, and I will address my inquiry to him. I asked the Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the conference committee on the wool bill, how it happened that the conferees on the part of the Senate did not first report the result of the conference to this body, in accordance with the uniform practice recognized not only by the Senate, but by the other branch of Congress for many years, and which I feel involves a very serious question if the custom or rule of parliamentary procedure is abandoned without protest.

As I said to the Senator from Pennsylvania a moment ago, the wool bill came to the Senate by a message from the House; the Senate amended it and sent it back to the House of Representatives, who refused to concur in the Senate amendments and asked for a conference. Under all the proceedings hitherto with which Senators are familiar, the conference report should have been made to this body by the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The House of Representatives asked for the conference.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate granted the conference.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate granted it, and had the papers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senate had the papers. Without any intention to find fault with anyone, I desire that the matter shall not be passed over lightly and our function in any way impaired by apparent acquiescence when it may become very material and important in future proceedings, as it has in the past. I desire to know whether there was any formal abandonment on the part of the Senate conferees of this parliamentary right of the Senate to the custody of the original papers submitted to them?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Michigan, I will state that there was no formal abandonment of the right of the Senate conferees to the papers. I apprehend that the innovation arose in this way: The papers were in the possession of the House conferees; they should have been delivered, under the rules, when an agreement was reached to the Senate conferees; but they were not delivered and were retained by the House conferees. The papers remained in the hands of the House conferees, and were presented there before they were presented here. I think it was a manifest violation of the rule.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suppose I am not speaking in a tone of voice to be heard on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. REED. No; we can not hear the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was merely saying that the papers, under the rule, should have been delivered after an agreement had been arrived at by the House conferees to the Senate conferees.

Mr. WARREN. They should have been delivered into your hands when the House asked for a conference, or immediately upon proceeding to compose the disagreements between House and Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That may be so. I presume a great deal of this trouble arose from the fact, Mr. President, that I am serving for the first time, I think, in my life on a conference committee. During my five or six years' service in this body I have been mostly on unimportant committees that never met and never had charge of legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield in a moment. I wanted to be heard upon the other side of the Chamber with my explanation as well as upon this side. I was stating that at the close of the conference when an agreement was reached I left the conference committee room very hastily, because I was not well, went to my committee room and left the papers with the conferees of the other House, and they were reported first to the House. This question was then raised in the House, but the report, after some debate, was received by the House.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Was there any agreement on the part of the conferees that they should so act?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There was absolutely nothing said about it at the time of the final meeting of the conferees on the morning of the day the report was made to the House. The fact, I suppose, that the papers were left in the possession of the House conferees was treated by the House conferees as a waiver on the part of the Senate conferees of their right to first present the report here; but, Mr. President, I do not think that any serious harm has resulted from that action. The report will be presented to the Senate to-day, and I trust it will be received by the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have no disposition whatever to criticize the conduct of the Senator from Wisconsin or other conferees. However, I must disagree with him that no harm is likely to result, because if the rules governing this body as well as the other are to be subjected to the convenience merely of members of conference committees, the advantage of a retention of the original papers after the conferees have agreed will be greatly to the disadvantage of the Chamber to which they properly belong. I could not permit the matter to pass unchallenged without calling the attention of Senators to it that it may not constitute a precedent for the future or bind this body now.

The House is most insistent in such matters. The Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives have insisted again and again upon this right, when, under the rule, they become possessed of the engrossed bill, to the original papers in a controversy between the two Houses after conference agreement. While I have no doubt that the Senator from Wisconsin acted from the most conscientious motives, and I have no disposition to find fault with him, my inquiry was directed to the chairman of the conference committee, who, under all the usages and all the practices of this body would have brought to us the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the chairman of the conference committee was absent, and the duty of claiming the papers plainly devolved upon me. The fact that I did not claim the papers was due to the fact that I did not know the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say that; and if I had been advised of the rule I should have remained in the conference long enough to have secured possession of the papers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But, Mr. President, the Senator did not have to claim the papers in order to get them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from Michigan will point out some real serious injury that has resulted from this omission upon my part, I will be much obliged to him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will point out one now. The possession of these papers on the part of the House of Representatives makes it entirely possible for them to concur, under changed parliamentary conditions in the Senate amendments, thus disregarding the conference report when the presence of Senators formerly absent from the deliberations of this body might alter completely previous proceedings and determine to hold the bill for future consideration if in our possession at the time.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will pardon me, circumstances might arise which might make that advantageous to them, but it is absolutely of no advantage to them now and particularly so when the conferees have agreed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If it is of no advantage to them, why did they claim the papers? Why did they not hand the original papers to the conferees on the part of the Senate without any request and in accordance with the universal custom observed here between the two Houses, and specifically set forth in Jefferson's Manual, recognized in our procedure as good parliamentary law?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think that the House conferees retained the papers simply because the papers were left with them. I will state to the Senator from Michigan that, if it is possible for him to overlook this infraction of the rules this time, I think it can be promised to him that certain Members of the Senate who have not had occasion to make such study of the rules as some other Members upon this side have, will in the course of events become so familiar with the rules that these fine technicalities will be fully complied with.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BAILEY. As a matter of fact, neither the Senator from Wisconsin nor the other members of the conference committee were advised, as I understand, of the papers being with the House until after we met in conference and they told us so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY. And if there was any mistake, it was a mistake not of the Senate conferees and not of Senators, but the mistake of whoever delivered the papers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not charging any mistake or any intentional disregard of the rules on the part of the conferees of the Senate. The papers should have been handed to the Senate conferees without any demand.

Mr. BAILEY. When the Senator says that the conferees on the part of the Senate disregarded the rule, which I understood him to say——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not say that. I said that the conferees on the part of the House had disregarded the rule; they should have turned those papers over to the Senate conferees, and the report should first have been made here. Does the Senator from Texas deny that?

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, I do not deny that. That would have been the orderly procedure; and if we had reached a point where it was material, I think the Senate could have safely depended on its conferees to insist, notwithstanding the clerical error—for that is all it was that carried the papers back to the House—upon the possession of the papers, as we were entitled to do under the rule; but it became wholly immaterial, and, therefore, the papers being with the House conferees, we left them there.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Did I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that the papers were not in the possession of the Senate when the conferees met?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true; they were in the possession of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Then, Mr. President, the mistake goes back of the conferees. The Senate made certain amendments to the House bill and sent the bill back thus amended to the House; the House insisted on its amendments and asked for a conference, appointing its conferees, and sent the papers back to the Senate. We agreed to the conference, appointed our conferees, and were in possession of the papers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We returned the papers to the House.

Mr. LODGE. How did we return the papers?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The papers were returned when the Senate acceded to the request for a conference.

Mr. BAILEY. When it agreed to the request for a conference.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And the House conferees were in possession of the papers appropriately until the conferees agreed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am sorry to see this disagreement between Senators, who insist that error has been committed in a very serious matter.

Mr. LODGE. I confess I had understood the papers were in the possession of the Senate. Although I have had some experience on conference committees, I am never clear at the end of the conference to which House the report should be made. It is a small and in itself unimportant point. The only importance in connection with it is that the practice should be uniform. It really makes no other difference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that is true; and I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I hope to become familiar enough with the practice to conform to the rules governing conference reports.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. It makes a wider difference than that, because, the conferees having agreed, the Senate, for instance, being the House to which the conference report should be first presented, first takes action on the conference report; and that gives the Senate the first opportunity to say whether the work of the conferees is satisfactory or not.

If a conference report erroneously goes back to the House, and the House sees fit to amend it, then when it comes to us it is not the work of the conference, but the work of the conference supplemented by the House, and we are at a disadvantage, of course.

Mr. LODGE. The House that grants the conference, as I understand, is the House to which the report has first to be made; and I had supposed that the papers were necessarily in possession of the House granting the conference.

Mr. WARREN. May I again interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BAILEY. Not necessarily, but properly.

Mr. LODGE. Properly.

Mr. WARREN. They should always be. The House having been notified that the conference had been granted, the papers should be within the call of the House granting the conference.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

Mr. WARREN. And the House granting the conference should report first. The House rules are different from ours. On the House side the conferees have to make a statement, and the statement is offered and printed a day before the conference report is taken up for action.

Mr. LODGE. They have to do that under their rules.

Mr. WARREN. But they uniformly wait until we have reported here, in all cases when the Senate's action comes first—that is, when the House has asked for and the Senate has granted a conference.

Mr. LODGE. But the point I want to get at is how the Senate failed to have possession of the papers?

Mr. WARREN. That was an oversight, probably. The Senate conferees were certainly entitled to the papers and the Senate to the first report.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know whether any special importance attaches to anything I may say on this subject. I acted as chairman of the committee during the consideration of the bill in conference. I did so because the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was necessarily absent from the city. I did not myself pay any attention to the question where the papers were. We had the bill before us, and the consideration of the case came up, and we were merely passengers; I mean to say the Republicans on that committee were merely passengers—both the Members of the House who were Republicans as well as myself and——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is, some of the Republicans were merely passengers.

Mr. CULLOM. I mean the straight Republicans.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would not say the crooked Republicans, of course, to my friend the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. All right. I will not say crooked Republicans one way or the other; but the fact was, as everybody knows, that certain Republicans on that committee had no part or lot in the consideration of the bill in conference except as it devolved upon the chairman to preside and keep order.

But when the time came that we finished the bill, and those really in charge of it and who did the voting got through with it and agreed, I said to my next neighbor, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], "You take the papers and get along with the balance of the work without anything from me." I turned them over to him because he was the author of the bill and, of course, was more interested in its success, as they had it framed, than I was.

That is the story of the case. I knew nothing about where the actual papers were, but I heard some talk, I think, of the fact that they were in the possession of the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Illinois did not have possession of the actual papers, and he did not turn them over to me. He is mistaken about that. I never had possession of the actual papers.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not mean to say that I turned over the actual papers, but I did say to the Senator to take charge of the case and take care of them. I knew nothing about what was done with the papers—whether they were with the Senate conferees or with those on the part of the House. I hope nothing further will come from it except what is fair and right.

Mr. LODGE. There is no question, I think, of the rule that the report is first to be made to the House granting the conference.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me here?

Mr. LODGE. That is shown by the papers being in possession of the House granting the conference. Now, under——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me just here?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. It has been held repeatedly in the House that a committee can not make a report unless it has possession of the papers.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Massachusetts is entirely right in saying that the House granting the conference is entitled to the papers, and if we were in possession of the papers we would be required first to make the report.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely; I was coming to that exact point. As the House granting the conference, we should have been in possession of the papers, and there could have been no question then as to where the report should first be made. But it appears from the statement of the conferees that we were not in possession of the papers, and that is a fault somewhere else.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that it can hardly be imputed as a fault to anybody. I hardly think we ought to put the responsibility on the clerk, who must sit silent while we say these things. The whole mistake arose out of the fact that when the Senate consented to the conference which the House had requested, the clerk of the Senate carried the papers back to the House.

It happens in this case that it is not at all material. I think if it had been material, if there had been disagreements which made it a matter of any importance as to which House should first consider the report, we would have insisted on having the papers, and yet I doubt if the House would have yielded to that insistence.

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely it. The point I am trying to make is that the House had no business to have those papers in its hands.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true, but we can hardly complain of the House because they received them when they were sent back.

Mr. LODGE. Somebody gave those papers to the House conferees.

Mr. BAILEY. The clerk of the Senate. That is the whole of it.

Mr. LODGE. I am answered.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a mistake that amounts to nothing.

Mr. LODGE. I am answered. If that is where the mistake occurred, the House did right to go ahead, being in possession of the papers——

Mr. BAILEY. Of course it did.

Mr. LODGE. And the fault was ours.

Mr. BAILEY. No; the fault was not ours.

Mr. LODGE. I do not mean our conferees.

Mr. BAILEY. Nor was it the fault of the Senate, because the Senate did not know what had been done, and the conferees did not know what had been done; and when we found what had been done, if it had been important enough to justify it, we might have come back to the Senate and said, "We are entitled to the papers before we go into conference, and we ask the Senate to request the House to return the papers." But we did not think that important.

Mr. LODGE. That is the business, of course, of the clerks of the Houses. Through them pass the papers, and the papers ought never to have been in the possession of the House when we entered on that conference.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I do not like to have an undue amount of blame cast upon the clerks of the Senate, because it does not belong there. When a conference is agreed upon, the clerks at the desk send the papers naturally to the place where they ought to go—to the clerk who has charge of printing the papers. It has been so usual for either side of the conference committee to obtain possession of the papers temporarily if they wanted to see them that it never has occurred to my knowledge, in the somewhat long experience I have had here in conferences, that there has been any difficulty or difference over the papers; it is so well established where they belong.

Now, if the House had the papers and had had them all the time, the moment they go into conference the papers are the joint property of both until they are through, and then they belong to the House that granted the conference. There is no question about that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the Secretary read for the information of the Senate from the top of page 438 of the Manual, paragraph 35, so that it may appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. On page 438 of the Manual, paragraph 35:

35. A conference report is made first to the House agreeing to the conference.

(NOTE.—This rule seems to follow from the principle laid down by Jefferson (Manual, sec. 46) that "in all cases of conference asked after a vote of disagreement, etc., the conferees of the House asking it are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other," thus putting the agreeing House in possession of the papers, and has been the usual practice in Congress.)

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not wish to be misunderstood. The papers were in the hands of the House conferees—appropriately there—when the conference assembled. Under the rule just read, it was the duty of the House conferees to turn those papers over to the Senate conferees. I am finding no fault with the Senate conferees for not asking for the papers. Under the rule, well understood and recognized by the House conferees, we were entitled to the papers and entitled to have the conference report made here first. The failure to ask for them I do not think is at all serious. It is the failure upon the part of the House conferees to deliver them in accordance with the universal custom of which I complain.

Now, I am not going to make any motion that the conferees be directed to return those papers to the Senate, where they should have been returned, but I am putting on the record a protest against any waiver of that right, either by reason of the failure of the House conferees to notify the Senate conferees of their right to have them or otherwise. That is my sole purpose and intention.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted the following report (S. Doc. No. 96):

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 29S8) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same, amended to read as follows, viz:

SEC. 2. That section 8, as above amended, and sections 9 and 10 of said act be renumbered as sections 9, 10, and 11, and that a new section be inserted after section 7 of the said original act, to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The word 'candidate' as used in this section shall include all persons whose names are presented for nomination for Representative or Senator in the Congress of the United States at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement or election at any general or special election held in connection with the nomination or election of a person to fill such office, whether or not such persons are actually nominated, indorsed, or elected.

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general or special election, as Representative in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election at which candidates for Representative are to be elected, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made, for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement at any general or special election, or election by the legislature of any State, as Senator in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election at which he is seeking indorsement, and not less than 5 nor more than 10 days before the day upon which the first vote is to be taken in the two houses of the legislature before which he is a candidate for election as Senator, file with the Secretary of the Senate at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

"Every such candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement or election at any general or special election, or for election by the legislature of any State, shall, within 15 days after such primary election or nominating convention, and within 30 days after any such general or special election, and within 30 days after the day upon which the legislature shall have elected a Senator, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or with the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, up to, on, and after the day of such primary election, nominating convention, general or special election, or election by the legislature, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination, indorsement, or election.

"Every such candidate shall include therein a statement of every promise or pledge made by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent or to whom he has given authority to make any such promise or pledge, before the completion of any such primary election or nominating convention or general or special election or election by the legislature, relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any position of trust, honor, or profit, either in the county, State, or Nation, or in any political subdivision thereof, or in any private or corporate employment, for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy, and if any such promise or pledge shall have been made the name or names, the address or addresses, and the occupation or occupations of the person or persons to whom such promise or pledge shall have been made, shall be stated, together with a description of the position relating to which such promise or pledge has been made. In the event that no such promise or pledge has been made by such candidate, that fact shall be distinctly stated.

"No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall promise any office or position to any person, or to use his influence or to give his support to any person for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person, or of any person, in his candidacy; nor shall any candidate for Senator of the United States give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any money or thing of value to assist in procuring the nomination or election of any particular candidate for the legislature of the State in which he resides, but such candidate may, within the limitations and restrictions and subject to the requirements of this act, contribute to political committees having charge of the disbursement of campaign funds.

"No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, in procuring his nomination and election any sum, in the aggregate, in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise under the laws of the State in which he resides: Provided, That no candidate for Representative in Congress shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum, in the aggregate, exceeding $5,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election; and no candidate for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum, in the aggregate, exceeding $10,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election: Provided further, That money expended by any such candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing (other than in newspapers) and distributing letters, circulars, and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service, shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this section, and shall not be considered any part of the sum herein fixed as the limit of expense and need not be shown in the statements herein required to be filed.

"The statements herein required to be made and filed before the general election, or the election by the legislature at which such candidate seeks election, need not contain items of which publicity is given in a previous statement, but the statement required to be made and filed after said general election or election by the legislature shall, in addition to an itemized statement of all expenses not theretofore given publicity, contain a summary of all preceding statements.

"Any person, not then a candidate for Senator of the United States, who shall have given, contributed, expended, used, or promised any money or thing of value to aid or assist in the nomination or election of any particular member of the legislature of the State in which he resides shall, if he thereafter becomes a candidate for such office, or if he shall thereafter be elected to such office without becoming a candidate therefor, comply with all of the provisions of this section relating to candidates for such office, so far as the same may be applicable; and the statement herein required to be made, verified, and filed after such election shall contain a full, true, and itemized account of each and every gift, contribution, expenditure, and promise, whenever made, in anywise relating to the nomination or election of members of the legislature of said State, or in anywise connected with or pertaining to his nomination and election, of which publicity is not given in a previous statement.

"Every statement herein required shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths under the laws of the State in which he is a candidate, and shall be sworn to or affirmed by the candidate in the district in which he is a candidate for Representative, or the State in which he is a candidate for Senator in the Congress of the United States: Provided, That if at the time of such primary election, nominating convention, general or special election, or election by the State legislature said candidate shall be in attendance upon either House of Congress as a Member thereof he may at his election verify such statements before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered, within the time required herein shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act.

"This act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the nomination or election of candidates for the offices herein named, or to exempt any such candidate from complying with such State laws."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the title as amended will read as follows, viz:

"An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM,
ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
JOS. F. JOHNSTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. W. RUCKER,
M. F. CONRY,
M. E. OLMSTED,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Vermont state the changes more fully than they are explained in the report?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The first four amendments proposed by the Senate are agreed to by the House. The fifth amendment, to which it disagreed, was the committee amendment of the Senate, which was very fully debated. Some slight changes were needed to this amendment, and it was thought more convenient to report the committee amendment of the Senate in full with those proposed changes.

Those changes were substantially as follows: In addition to making the act apply to candidates for nomination in the primary elections, it has been extended to apply to candidates before nominating conventions, and the provisions of the act are further extended so as to apply to all special elections as well as general elections. These changes are proposed in that portion of the section relating to the nomination of Members of the House, and also in that paragraph relating to the elections of Senators. The phraseology of the latter part of the committee amendment has been changed as to contributions made or promised by any candidate or other person for and in his behalf, "with his knowledge and consent."

In the next clause of the Senate amendment, which relates to promises made by the candidate to recommend persons to positions of trust, honor, or profit, or for other purpose, an amendment is proposed to make it apply specifically to promises made for the purpose of procuring the support of the person to whom they were made, or of any person, to his candidacy. It is simply perfecting the phraseology of that provision.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is meant by the words "for any other person"?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not think I made that clear. The provision is as follows:

> Every such candidate shall include therein a statement of every promise or pledge made by him, directly or indirectly, or by anyone for him with his knowledge, or to whom he has given authority to make any such promise or pledge, before the completion of any such primary or general election, or election by the legislature, relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any position of trust, honor, or profit, either in the county, State, or Nation, or in any political subdivision thereof, or in any private or corporate employment—> for the purpose of securing the support of such person or of any other person in his candidacy.

Now comes the amendment—

The purpose was not clear in the original draft and that was inserted to make it so.

Then follows a new draft of the provisions of what is known in the Senate as the Reed amendment, leaving out the provision that—

> No such candidate for the Senate or House of Representatives shall expend, or cause to be expended, a sum in the aggregate exceeding 10 cents for each voter in his district or State.

All other provisions of the Reed amendment are preserved, but are rewritten with certain modifications.

For instance, a candidate is permitted to expend money which the law of his State requires him to spend in primary elections. A provision is also made as to what expenditures may be withheld from the statement, as, for instance, personal expenses, the cost of printing letters or circulars, payment of postage, telegraph bills, and other expenses of that character; but, in brief, the Reed amendment has been rewritten and made to apply to as many conditions as it occurred to the committee might arise in an effort to make its provisions operative.

I do not suppose that the changes proposed have been made very clear by the reading of the report just completed. I might, if time allowed, take up each one of them and explain it; but, as I have stated, it was the intention of the conferees to preserve the provisions of the Reed amendment, but to place them in a somewhat different form.

Mr. BORAH. Is there objection to letting the conference report go over and having it printed?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no objection to having it go over, and that it shall be printed, if the Senator desires.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have it go over and have it printed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no earthly objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks that the report be printed?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered. (S. Doc. No. 96.)

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. NEWLANDS, and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only desire to remind Senators that we have a unanimous consent agreement to vote upon a measure at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes, and when it was made the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] said that he had not finished the address he was making to the Senate upon the subject. I hope, therefore, that I may be permitted very soon, at least, to call up that bill, so that the Senator from Ohio can proceed and that the Senate may be ready to vote at 1.45 o'clock.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed for the use of the Senate a comparison of the rates fixed in the cotton schedule as passed by the House of Representatives and in an amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute to that schedule. (S. Doc. No. 95.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Senate will now order the printing of a document, the nature of which he has stated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and without objection the order will be entered.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr President, in reference to the point raised by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] as to the procedure adopted by the conferees on the wool bill (H. R. 11019), my attention has been called to the stenographer's notes of the meetings of the conferees, it appearing that a stenographer was present to take down certain matters, and he appears to have taken down considerable of the debate. The last paragraph of the stenographer's notes is as follows:

> By unanimous consent the bill was first to be reported to the House instead of the Senate.

I think that is an important paragraph, if it did occur.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not recall anything of the sort.

Mr. PENROSE. Here are the notes.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Those notes show that the whole conference agreed to make the report to the House?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Yet the House leader does not so report, nor does he so advise the House in debate, whatever the facts may be, as I read the official record of yesterday.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; and I do not think it was so understood, notwithstanding the notes of the stenographer.

Mr. LODGE. Those are the stenographer's notes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It makes no difference.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PENROSE. I am through. These are the stenographer's notes, handed to me by the stenographer, and I submit them for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to say in respect to that, if I may be permitted, that I do not think there was any stenographer present during the conference. If there was, I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. PENROSE. I was not present myself, and only know what I am informed by the secretary of the committee. I can investigate the matter more fully.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think there was some informal discussion before the conferees had agreed. I do not know what statements were made at that time, but at the time of the agreement my recollection is that the question as to where the papers were was raised. The House conferees stated that the papers were in the possession of the House, not properly so, but actually so, and my recollection is that the chairman of the House conferees, Mr. UNDERWOOD, stated that he knew no way by which those papers could be returned to the Senate except through the action of the House; and upon that statement I think it was agreed that the House ought to act first on the matter.

That is my recollection of it; but I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that at that time there was no stenographer present.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 854.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the substitute for the bill which I filed on Friday last.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio is the pending question. He now asks that, by unanimous consent, it shall be withdrawn. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to introduce another amendment to the bill in the form of a substitute, and I ask that it be now read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the National Monetary Commission, authorized by sections 17, 18, and 19 of an act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, is hereby directed to make and file a report on or before the 8th day of January, 1912.

SEC. 2. That sections 17, 18, and 19 of an act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, be, and the same are hereby repealed, the provisions of this section to take effect and be in force on and after the 8th day of January, 1912, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress.

SEC. 3. That the first paragraph under the subject "Legislative," on page 28 of an act (Public, No. 327, H. R. 28376, 60th Cong., 2d sess.), entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909, reading as follows: "That the members of the National Monetary Commission, who were appointed on the 30th day of May, 1908, under the provisions of section 17 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the national banking laws,' approved May 30, 1908, shall continue to constitute the National Monetary Commission until the final report of said commission shall be made to Congress; and said National Monetary Commission are authorized to pay to such of its members as are not at the time in the public service and receiving a salary from the Government, a salary equal to that to which said members would be entitled if they were Members of the Senate or House of Representatives. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 4. That no one receiving a salary or emoluments from the Government of the United States in any capacity shall receive any salary or emolument as a member or employee of said commission from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. BURTON. I can briefly explain the substitute. It contains four sections. The first section directs the National Monetary Commission to file a report on or before January 8, 1912. The second section brings the work of the commission to an end—abolishes it—on the 1st of May, 1912, unless otherwise ordered by Congress. The third section immediately abolishes the salaries which have been paid to members of the commission after the termination of their connection with the respective Houses of Congress. The fourth section prohibits the payment of salaries or compensation to employees now receiving salaries from the Government. I think this statement makes clear what is contained in the proposed substitute, and that I have stated all that is in it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD certain extracts from previous remarks in the RECORD upon the question of banking reform of the National Monetary Commission bill as explanatory of the amendments proposed by me to the Cummins bill for the early report of the National Monetary Commission and the termination of its service. I make this request for the reason that as by unanimous consent the vote on the Cummins bill is fixed for a quarter to 2, only half an hour distant, and the Senator from Ohio has the floor. There will not be sufficient time for me to present my views on the bill and on my amendment, and these extracts will explain the reasons for my action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Mar. 11, 1908.]

BANK CAPITAL.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island whilst I renew the question which I asked him during the argument of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and that is whether, in addition to the requirement which he has already acquiesced in—that the banks should keep in their own vaults either the whole or a very much larger proportion of the reserves now required by law—he would be willing to add the requirement that no bank shall be permitted to loan out its depositors' money in excess of seven times the amount of its capital? The purpose of that would be to secure for the depositors the protection of adequate capital amounting to about 15 per cent of their bank loans.

The Senator from Rhode Island realizes that the depositors' moneys are loaned out, and the loans about equal the deposits, and that the security of the depositors is the reserve required by law and the capital of the banks.

The Senator will also bear in mind that there is no rule imposed by the present banking act regarding the relation of capital either to loans or deposits, and that whilst the average banking capital of the national banks and the average banking capital of the Nation is entirely adequate, being about 30 per cent, I believe, of the deposits, yet as a matter of fact a great many banks, both national and State, are far below that requirement. I will ask the Senator whether he would favor an additional protection to the depositors in that line?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the bank system of New York prior to the war, which I imagine perhaps was the best of the American systems, had a limitation of this character. No bank should loan more than two and a half times its capital. As I stated in the remarks which I submitted to the Senate some time ago, 20 years ago, in 1887, the proportion between capital and loans in this country was as 1 to 2.61, being a little in excess of the New York limit. In 1907 the proportion was as 1 to 5.21, showing an increase in proportion to capital of almost double in the last 20 years.

I see no objection to fixing a limit. I think myself that the troubles we have had have grown out of overexpansion of credit. But I never would fix it as high as 1 to 7, because it would be greatly in excess of what is shown to be safe banking by the experience of the world. I do not, perhaps, think it is necessary; certainly not necessary in this bill. As I have already stated on several occasions, this bill does not pretend to be a panacea for all financial ills, and we certainly can not at this time undertake to dispose of them all. I think a limitation of loans in proportion to capital is a wise one, but I certainly would not fix the limit at 1 to 7.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I understand, then, the Senator would fix it at 1 to 5?

Mr. ALDRICH. I would not say. I would not want to say, offhand, what the proportion should be. I have stated the fact that there has been a growth in this country from 1 to 2.61 to 1 to 5.21—double in 20 years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The only difference between the Senator and myself is that he would require greater caution in this particular than I suggest. I quite agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the relation ought to be about 1 to 5. I stated 1 to 7 in order to liberalize the suggestion in order to prevent any possible objection.

Now, let me state to the Senator, as he well knows, there is no requirement in the national banking act that the capital shall bear any fixed relation to the loans, nor is there, I believe, in the State banking acts, and the result is that we have such conditions as these: That the Knickerbocker Trust Co., of New York, with a capital of only $1,000,000, was able to make loans to the amount of $50,000,000. So the proportion of capital to loans was not that of 1 to 5, as the Senator from Rhode Island suggests, but was the relation of 1 to 50.

Now, when that was called to my attention it was accompanied with the suggestion that it was simply a State bank. I then looked to the national banking act to see whether there was any provision there that would prevent such reckless banking, and I found there was none; that while the depositor is partly protected by requiring the bank to keep a certain proportion of the deposits in its vaults in order to respond to checks, there is no provision at all as to the amount of invested capital that shall be maintained as security for those deposits. And it is perfectly possible under the national banking act to-day to have a bank conducting a business of the enormous proportions of the Knickerbocker Trust Co., involving fifty millions of deposits and $50,000,000 of loans, upon a capital of only $1,000,000. Safe banking requires that depositors should have two sources of protection—one the protection of an ample reserve, the other the protection of an ample capital. The least reserve required should be an average of 20 per cent. The least proportion of capital should be 20 per cent also. Then you have safe banking, because the depositors of the bank have not only the security of the loans in which their moneys are invested, but they also have in addition the 20 per cent reserve in cash in the bank and the 20 per cent in capital put in by the stockholders and invested in marketable securities.

The best mode of securing depositors is not by a guaranty fund contributed by the banks or by a guaranty of the Government, but by providing for a sufficient reserve and sufficient capital. If we have in reserve and in capital a security of 40 per cent of the deposits, we will have a safe banking system.

REGULATION OF STATE BANKS.

Now, Mr. President, while I am upon this subject, I wish to add that it is utterly impossible to have a safe banking system in this country as long as we have two systems differing as to the security offered to their depositors. We have in this country two systems, the national banking system and the State bank system, both about equal in capitalization, both about equal in deposits; and yet under State banking laws there are not sufficient requirements as to reserves and there are not sufficient requirements as to capital. So at any time, however you may guard the national banks by proper provisions regarding reserve and capital and their relation to deposits and loans, the entire system may be broken down by inadequate reserves and inadequate capital upon the part of the State banks. We all know that if the State banking system of the country is involved in difficulty it involves the national banking system also, and that you can not possibly inaugurate a system that will successfully work in preventing panics if it is confined to one kind of banks alone.

If that be so, it seems to me that the very next reform which should suggest itself to the Senator from Rhode Island is the reform of securing under the State banking system sufficient reserves and sufficient capital such as we aim to require under the national banking system. That can be done in one of two ways, by persuasion or by compulsion, the latter being based on the power given to Congress to regulate commerce between the States, for all State banks are engaged in interstate exchange, which is one of the forms of interstate commerce. The Senator from Rhode Island asked me the other day while I was addressing myself to this question whether a check sent by a man in one State to a man in another State constituted interstate commerce. I was then endeavoring to put an hour's speech through a half-hour nozzle, as I had to take the train, and I declined to enter into that question. But I find that the Wall Street Journal has answered it for me, and I will ask the Secretary to read this excerpt from the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that authority from that source is not of much value here in the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. However, it may be persuasive with the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. FLINT. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that it might have great weight on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

"REVIEW AND OUTLOOK—WHAT IS INTERSTATE COMMERCE?

"In the Senate, on Tuesday, Senator Aldrich asked the following question of Senator NEWLANDS:

"'In case a business house in New York sends a check to a firm in Connecticut, does that constitute interstate commerce?'

"Senator NEWLANDS did not answer the question.

"Innocent and simple as it appears, it is, in fact, a very big question, and it strikes at the very vitals of the whole problem of Federal regulation.

"The answer to Senator Aldrich's question from the point of view of the Wall Street Journal would have to be 'Yes.' The sending of a check from one State to another involves the transfer of a valuable thing from one State to another. It is interstate commerce. Whether we like it or not, the development of business in the United States is revolutionizing all of our conceptions and changing most of our points of view. Commerce is no longer an affair of a township or a city or of a State. The economic unit has become a continent. The mailing of a letter, the sending of a telegram, and the holding of a telephone conversation between New York and Chicago, and almost all of the operations of business have become interstate in character."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, whilst the reliability of this authority seems to be questioned, the logic of its statement can not be. Is there a Senator on this floor who will rise and say that the transaction by which goods are transported from the State of California to the State of New York is not interstate commerce? If that be true, is it not also true that the transaction by which the payment of those goods in money is transported from New York to California is interstate commerce? Is there a Senator on this floor who will rise and insist that a telegraphic message sent from one State to another is not interstate commerce?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That question has been specifically decided by the Supreme Court. Of course it is interstate commerce, and was so decided several times since the Pensacola case.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course, it is incontestable. Is there a Senator on this floor who will rise and say that a whisper through a telephone from New York to Chicago is not interstate commerce? If that be true, how can you deny that the transactions of commerce conducted through banks, the great agencies and instrumentalities of commerce, and involving interstate and foreign exchange, do not come within the supervision and the control of the National Government?

I am aware that whenever a suggestion is made of the application of the interstate-commerce power of the Constitution to an existing condition the cry of centralization is raised. If it involves control, if it involves restriction, if it involves requirements, Senators on that side of the House accustomed to invoke the power regarding interstate and foreign commerce in the subsidizing of railroads, in the subsidizing of ships, in every form of grant or privilege or subsidy, will oppose it because it involves restriction, while on this side of the House Senators have been so accustomed to stand on guard against usurpation of State rights and powers by the National Government that, although they wish to institute reforms, they question the national right and our power.

There can be no question about our power. We have exercised it again and again. We take hold of a State railroad engaged in interstate commerce with not a mile of its line in any State except the State in which it is incorporated, and yet receiving goods for shipment to other States, and what do we do with that railroad, by the vote of both sides of the Senate, by a recent vote in which there was but one dissenting voice? We take hold of that railroad and we compel it to present to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the Nation reports of all its transactions, State as well as interstate. We not only regulate its rates, so far as interstate commerce is concerned, but we regulate its conduct of business. We compel it to apply safety appliances to its trains and everywhere we exercise supervision and regulation, not exclusive supervision and regulation and supervision and regulation in the interest of interstate commerce.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think that the Congress of the United States can fix a rate of interest to be paid by loans in State banks?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, Mr. President, that is a question that I would not like to answer in a moment. It certainly would have no power to fix the rate of interest as to a purely State transaction. I will admit that. But I am not prepared to answer the question as to whether it would have the power to regulate the rate of interest, so far as interstate transactions are concerned. When I contend for this power of the National Government I do not contend that it is exclusive power. The National Government has the same power in its jurisdiction over interstate commerce that the State has over State commerce, and where the corporation is engaged in both State and interstate commerce it is subject to the supervision and control of the State, so far as State commerce is concerned, and to the control and supervision of the Nation, so far as interstate commerce is concerned. The jurisdictions do not conflict, and each sovereign is supreme within the limits of its jurisdiction.

Now, what is this whole system of exchange? It is simply a system of transportation, a transportation of values. The railroads transport the goods; the banks transport the values. Both are absolutely essential to commerce; both are absolutely essential to interstate commerce. It is important to interstate commerce that we should have the safe conduct of passengers on the railroads, and therefore safety appliances are required of State railroads by national law. It is important to interstate commerce that State banks engaged in interstate transactions should have the safety appliances of a sufficient reserve and an ample capital, and it is the duty of the Nation to see that these safety appliances are required.

So far as interstate commerce is concerned, the Nation has all the power that the State has in State commerce.

Now, Mr. President, why should we stick in the bark when we are considering this question of the banks and of currency, this important system of transporting values, this system upon which all values in the country are dependent, the breaking down of which may at any time prostrate the industries of the country? Why should we not, when revising our system of banking, require in the interest of interstate commerce that the State banks engaged in interstate commerce should maintain as a condition of the exercise of that privilege the same reserves and the same capital as are required under similar circumstances of national banks?

PERSUASION.

But if the Senator from Rhode Island is not prepared to admit this proposition, if he insists that it is not within the power of the National Government, if he insists that it is a matter absolutely within the jurisdiction of States so far as State corporations are concerned, and that the Nation's action must be confined to the corporations of its own creation, then I ask him why he should not apply all the powers of persuasion to the State banks that can be applied?

The Senator is now proposing a measure that is intended to meet the emergency requirements of the country; that is intended to prevent these extraordinary bank panics created by the timidity of depositors. The depositors of State banks can be as timid as the depositors in national banks, and they are as timid. If we are to provide an emergency measure that is to tide over a panic, there is every reason why we should give the State banks the benefit of the emergency provision. The very purpose that we have in view is the security of the country, the security of our entire banking system, national and State, and we must know that if the State banks of the country, which aggregate about one-half of the bank capital and more than one-half of the deposits of the country, are prostrated, our national banks will be prostrated with them.

If, then, we are providing for an emergency currency the State banks should have the benefit of it upon depositing the security required by law. And we can accompany the privilege with the condition that the State banks desiring its benefit shall receive it upon the condition that they will comply with the requirements of the national banking act so far as reserves and capital are concerned.

So the Nation would have a persuasive influence upon the banks of the States in gradually making them conform to national requirements in the interest and for the security of the depositors, and all doing business with it in State or interstate transactions. There is not a State bank that would not realize that at some time it would be compelled to resort to the Nation for the funds with which to meet an emergency of this kind, and it would be eager to put itself on the list of those who could lawfully apply. So these State banks would gradually accommodate their reserves and their capital to the requirements of the national law.

More than that, our action would be persuasive upon the legislatures of the States themselves. They would probably pass similar laws. Thus the educational process would be set at work, and in the end we would have uniformity throughout the country in all the banks of the country, both as to the reserves and the capital required.

Mr. President, I realize that all this can not be done in a day. We can enact in a day the law by which it is to be accomplished, but the process provided by the law must be a gradual one. What is that process to be? It would not do to provide that these reserves should be required to-morrow or that this capital should be increased to-morrow. Time must be given. The State banks during the past year have had an average reserve of less than 8 per cent. In many of the State banks the reserve is far above that average, and in many of them far below.

What would you think of a national-bank system if you realized, upon looking at the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency, that all the national banks of the country had an average of only 8 per cent?

To-day the national banks have an average reserve of 18 per cent, though it is unequally distributed, and the State banks have an average of less than 8 per cent. Yet if you should attempt to compel the State banks to come up immediately to the requirements of the national banks it would mean upon their part an immediate contraction of their loans, which would result in liquidation and universal distress.

The thing that we must do is to provide a gradual process for increasing the reserves of the State banks, lasting over a period of 5 or 10 years, at the rate of a certain percentage annually, the increase to be accomplished under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency. In that way they can gradually draw into their vaults the lawful money required for the reserves established by the national law, and thus they will be able to sustain their existing volume of bank loans and bank credits.

In this manner the business of the country will not be disturbed in the slightest degree. So far as bank capital is concerned, that can be increased in the same gradual manner, and within a period of 5 or 10 years we will have all the banks of the country, State and national, under laws providing adequate protection to depositors, both in reserves and capital. I trust that the Finance Committee will seriously consider this suggestion, and that now, whilst the subject is fresh in our minds, reforms in our banking system, admittedly necessary, will be added to this emergency provision recommended by the committee.

[May 15, 1908.]

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS—REGULATION OF STATE BANKS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regard the question of the relation of reserves to deposits and of capital and surplus to loans as of very much more importance than the creation of an emergency currency, and I trust that the committee of conference will take up these two questions fully and exhaustively. The great difficulty with the banking situation of three or four months ago was that the banks did not have on hand a sufficient amount of cash reserves to meet the checks of their depositors. The difficulty was with the State banks, rather than with the national banks. The statistics show that, on the average, the national banks had a cash reserve of about 18 per cent, whilst the State banks of the country had on hand a cash reserve not exceeding 5 per cent. It is utter folly, Mr. President, in my judgment, to attempt to inaugurate a safe system of banking unless we bring the State banking system into harmony with the national banking system so far as the requirements regarding reserves and capital are concerned. I have contended throughout that it was the duty of Congress not only to see to it that the national banks kept within their vaults an adequate proportion of the cash reserves required by law, but that, in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce, clearly within the regulation and control of the Nation, we should so legislate as to prevent State banks engaged in interstate and foreign commerce from maintaining a system which not only imperiled the safety of their banks as financial institutions, but imperiled the safety of the entire national banking system of the country, for we may perfect our national banking system to the highest degree, yet if the State banking system be insufficient in the security offered to depositors, the danger of the State banks will affect the national banks, for depositors do not discriminate as between them—a panic is never logical—and when depositors in State banks become alarmed the depositors in national banks, however secure they may be, also become alarmed.

The difficulty with the measure thus far considered by the Senate has been that it simply provides an emergency currency to meet the contingency of a panic when the panic is on and public apprehension is aroused. Our attention ought to be directed to so securing depositors in the matter of the capital of the banks and in the matter of reserves as against their deposits as to make a panic absolutely impossible.

NATIONAL CLEARING-HOUSE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. President, the bill coming from the other House adopts one wise provision, which has been the evolution of experience, and that is the legalization of clearing-house associations as a part of the national-bank system. These clearing-house associations have thus far been voluntary associations created by the banks themselves, partly national and partly State. They have been organized for mutual convenience and for mutual protection. We have found that it is absolutely necessary for these banks to get together in times of panic through their clearing-house associations, and thus restore public confidence by giving aid to individual banks whose financial safety was imperiled. The House bill very wisely, it seems to me, creates these associations, legalizes them, and makes them the instrumentalities through which the emergency circulation is distributed. That provision is the result of an experience of years, and it has been demonstrated that it is a wise method of meeting these great emergencies.

The Senate Committee on Finance have an opportunity to approve of this provision legalizing the national-bank clearing-house associations, and they can make such associations the agency for securing safety in the State banks as well as in the national banks.

There is not a State bank in the country that will not want to become a member of a national clearing-house association if that association has the power of issuing emergency money. If it applies for admission, the Nation, the creator of these clearing-house associations, can attach conditions to the admission, and those conditions should be that the State banks should keep the same reserves in their vaults that are required of the national banks and that their capital should have the same relation to their loans as is required or should be required under proper law—and I hope the Finance Committee will cover that—as is required or should be required of the national banks.

Such measure is simply persuasive; it is not coercive of the State; though, believing as I do, in the full power of the Nation over interstate and foreign commerce, I would not hesitate to support a bill that would compel State banks, in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide such safety appliances for finance as the Nation applies to State roads regarding interstate transportation. But here we have an opportunity by simple persuasion to induce State banks to comply with the national-bank requirements as to reserves and as to capital.

But it may be said that it will not do to make this change suddenly, because the national banks will then be compelled either to largely increase their reserves of gold and of lawful money, or they will be compelled to diminish their loans in order to bring their loans within the legal requirements of the provisions regarding their relation to reserves. It would, of course, be impossible in a day or in a week or in a month or in a year to secure to all the banks of the country an actual reserve, an average of even 20 per cent, for, in order to sustain the volume of bank loans which prevailed at the time of the panic, it would be necessary to have a cash reserve of at least $2,000,000,000 in all of our banks, national and State, whereas, as a matter of fact, we had only $1,000,000,000.

But this change can be brought about gradually, and it can be brought about by providing in this law that the banks shall be compelled to keep a certain proportion of their cash reserves in their own vaults—an increased amount—and that the State banks that become members of these associations shall similarly comply with that provision; and we should provide that it shall be gradually brought about, within a period of five years, under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, so that the banks will have ample time largely to increase their reserves in order to sustain the existing volume of bank loans and to meet the requirements of the future with reference to increased bank loans.

* * * * * * *

THOROUGHGOING LEGISLATION NEEDS.

Mr. President, the treatment of this question by the Finance Committee has been simply skin-deep. They have never reached the real question. It is palliative treatment. It is not a radical cure. There is but one way of making these banks safe, and that is to provide for an average reserve of all the banks, national and State, of at least 20 per cent, but providing for it gradually and without wrenching too seriously existing conditions of finance.

The banking system can never be safe until by law the relation of capital and loans is established so that there can not exist such a condition of things that a bank with $1,000,000 of capital can accept $50,000,000 of deposits and loan the $50,000,000—almost the entire money—to customers, the security in capital thus being only 2 per cent.

The Senator from Rhode Island, in answer to an interrogatory that I put to him when the question was last before the Senate, said that the old State banks regarded the safe relation of capital to loans as one to two and a half. There should be a provision of law that no bank should be permitted to loan its depositors' money to an amount more than five times exceeding its capital and surplus. Whenever it reaches that point it should cease loaning, and it must keep its depositors' money in its vaults, where it will be responsive to their demands. If you provide that the banks shall have an average reserve of 20 per cent in lawful money and a capital of at least 20 per cent of their permitted loans, then you have, in addition to the securities in which the depositors' money is invested, the actual cash reserve on hand subject to their check, and you have an additional security of 20 per cent in the shape of bank capital and surplus. Thus the depositor has a security of 40 per cent in addition to the security in which his money is invested. Whenever you organize a banking system of this kind it will simply follow the rules of safe financing and safe banking throughout the world, rules which until recent years prevailed in this country and in the safest States in the Union, and notably in New York State. Until you do that you will never have a safe system of banking, however you may increase this panic money, this emergency money, that is intended simply to relieve, after an unnecessary panic has been created, the apprehension of depositors as to their security. Such apprehension should be guarded against not by Government guaranty of deposits, but by compelling the banks to have sufficient capital and sufficient reserves to give the depositors absolute security, so that their apprehensions and fears will not be aroused.

I hope the Finance Committee will take under consideration, when this matter goes into conference, certain resolutions which I have presented to-day and which I intended to present as instructions to the Finance Committee in reporting this bill to the Senate. It was my purpose to cover these questions and to have a vote of the Senate, if possible, instructing the Finance Committee to shape these amendments which I have suggested and to present them to the Senate for its action upon the House bill. So far as I am concerned, I would rather build up on the House bill, with its clearing-house provisions, than I would on the Senate bill.

[May 28, 1908.]

A BILL FOR INFLATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words regarding this conference report. I shall vote against the adoption of the report, and I shall vote against it because the tendencies of the bill reported, if it is enacted into law, will be to increase, instead of curing and doing away with existing abnormalities. The abnormality under which we have been suffering is an inflation of bank loans, made by our national and State banks from the moneys of their deposits without maintaining sufficient cash reserves to meet their depositors' checks.

Another unhealthy condition is that there is in the country no proper security in the way of bank capital to the depositors in banks.

The relation of bank loans to bank capital is left entirely, or almost entirely, to the judgment of the banks themselves; and, as a result, we have this condition: Certain banks, with larger bank capital than is necessary, when you take in view the amount of their deposits, and others where the amount of the bank capital is less than should be required; and we all know that the real security which the depositors have, in addition to the securities and negotiable paper in which their deposits are invested by the banks, is the bank capital and surplus and the bank reserves.

As an evidence of this unhealthy condition I have only to state that when the panic came on the aggregate deposits in all the banks of the country—national banks, State commercial banks, State savings banks, and trust companies—was about $13,000,000,000; and against that extraordinary amount of deposits there was a reserve in the banks of only $1,000,000,000, or 8 per cent; and that if you exclude the savings banks as not requiring any considerable amount of reserves and estimate, as is the fact, that the deposits in all the commercial banks, State and national, amounted to $10,000,000,000, the reserves equaled only 10 per cent. But even if there had been an average reserve of 10 per cent in all the commercial banks of the country, national and State, the unhealthiness of the condition would not have been so apparent.

But we find the greatest disproportion between the reserves existing in State banks and the reserves existing in the national banks. The average reserve of the national banks at that time was 18 per cent; the average reserve in the State banks, the commercial banks, was less than 6 per cent, and yet, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] so well observed, the State banks outnumber the national banks and have two-thirds of the bank capital of the country and nearly two-thirds of the deposits of the country. The danger point, then, in our whole system of reserves is in the State banks, which outnumber the national banks and outclass them in both capital and deposits.

So also as to national banks. Whilst the average reserve was 18 per cent, yet the manner in which that reserve was distributed amongst the various banks indicated a most unhealthy condition. Of the total reserves in all the banks, national and State, amounting to $1,000,000,000, the national banks, though inferior in number and inferior in capital and deposits, had $700,000,000 of reserves, and of that $700,000,000 of reserves over $300,000,000 was in the central reserve city banks in New York, Chicago, and St. Louis, and nearly $200,000,000 was in reserve city banks, about 300 in number, and only about $200,000,000 was in the country banks, over 6,000 in number, so that over one-half of the reserves of the country were in banks averaging less than 400 in number, in the central reserve and reserve city banks, and less than half of them were in 6,000 national banks, constituting the country banks of the United States, and whose obligations to individual depositors far exceeded in amount the similar obligations of the reserve city and reserve banks.

Now, how was that? Simply under the existing law which permits these country banks to deposit three-fifths of the reserve required by law in reserve cities and central reserve cities. The result was that over one-half of the legal reserves of over 6,000 national banks of the country was accumulated in less than 400 banks in our great cities, mainly New York, and used there for promotion and speculation. We all know the methods employed during certain seasons. The New York banks offer tempting rates of interest to the country banks for their reserve money, which they are forbidden to use locally, draw in the money, and then lend it to those who are interested in promotion and stock speculation. The spring and summer months is the time chosen for the promotion of the great industrial corporations of the country, for the promotion of great trusts, and for the increased issue of railroad stocks and bonds.

The prices go up in the market; and the faster the prices go up the greater is the demand upon the New York banks for money for speculative purposes, for it is a peculiar condition of the stock market that as the market is rising the demand for speculation increases; and that when it is going down and more favorable opportunities are presented for getting stocks at their real values, the demand for them diminishes. So it is that after the summer season is over, when the country banks require the moneys which they have deposited in the reserve cities at interest for the purpose of moving the crops of the country, when they require the small sums of $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 for that purpose, the money is not forthcoming; the banks in the reserve cities and in the central-reserve cities can not pay it to the country banks without calling in their loans; and that means a contraction of values, a slump in the market, a local panic, and possibly a panic extending over the entire country.

We have had numerous evidences of such panics within the past 10 years. A panic of that kind is almost a yearly occurrence. Sometimes it is only local in its consequences; but if those consequences are sufficiently severe and involve enough mercantile houses or brokerage houses or banks, then we find the country alarmed, and there is a general demand for money on deposit. So that whilst the average of reserves in the national banks of 18 per cent is perhaps sufficient, it is so distributed as not to make it an element of safety in any banking situation.

INADEQUACY OF BANK RESERVES ADMITTED.

Now, Mr. President, this evil is very evident. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] admits it. In a speech which he delivered when he first reported his bill in this body he used the following words:

"I have already alluded to the inadequacy of bank reserves. When we compare the reserves of our banks with the reserves of similar European institutions this inadequacy becomes painfully apparent."

"This inadequacy becomes painfully apparent," and yet the Senator from Rhode Island has nowhere addressed himself to this important question, but has only addressed himself to the question of further inflating the loans of the country and aggravating and exaggerating the condition of inflation that now exists. The Senator will doubtless reply that there was no time for this; that all we could do was to address ourselves to the question of emergency. That may have been true when the Senator first presented his bill; an emergency was then on, but that emergency has passed, and the financial conditions of the country are now on the road to recovery; yet since the Senator presented his bill over four months have elapsed, and I will venture to say that he has not once called together his committee during that entire period for the consideration of this important question.

The Senator says that he has alluded to the inadequacy of bank reserves, that "this inadequacy becomes painfully apparent," and yet, with this condition of things, when this inadequacy is "painfully apparent," and when he and his committee have had four months to consider this question, he brings into this body, upon a day's notice, a new measure in which no allusion is made to this unhealthy and abnormal condition, and no remedy presented.

This is of a piece, Mr. President, with the administration of the Finance Committee under the Senator from Rhode Island during his entire administration of 12 years. During that time how many efforts has the Senator made to reform the bank act? Did he not know 12 years ago, as well as to-day, that this system of piling up the bank reserves of the country in a few cities, to be used there for promotion and speculation, was prejudicial to the safety of the country? Year before last we had a warning upon this subject, if prior to that time we had lacked information upon it.

I remember in the debate in the early part of 1907, long before the recent panic, when the Senator then, as now, was bent upon inflating the currency instead of securing upon a safe foundation the banking system of the country, that I then presented an amendment. A measure was pending in this body providing, I believe, for greater issues of currency, a larger proportion of currency upon national bonds, increasing the proportion from 90 per cent to 100 per cent—resulting, I believe, in an issue of $400,000,000 more of bank notes—and also doing away with that provision of the banking act which prevented bank notes from being retired at a rate of more than $3,000,000 a month. When this measure was pending I then presented to the Senate an amendment intended to remedy this condition regarding the reserves. In my remarks upon that occasion I said:

"Now, Mr. President, I wish to say one word regarding the reserves of these banks. We have a system which crowds all the reserves of the national banks of the country in New York City. That seems to me to be a vicious system, because it collects from every part of the country money to be used simply in speculation."

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island for a moment. I call his attention to a few sentences in his speech of February 10, 1908, in which he said:

"I have already alluded to the inadequacy of bank reserves. When we compare the reserves of our banks with the reserves of similar European institutions, this inadequacy becomes painfully apparent."

Now, I wish to ask the Senator whether there is any provision in this bill regarding bank reserves?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no provision in the bill regarding bank reserves, but there is a provision for the appointment of a commission to consider what changes shall be made in our banking laws, and I have no doubt that the subject of reserves will be one of the first questions taken up by that commission.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island another question, and that is whether there is any provision in this bill upon which an instruction can be based to the conferees to provide that the country banks shall keep a larger percentage of their reserves within their own vaults? Would it, in the present status of the conference, assuming that this report is rejected, be within the power of that conference committee to take up the question of the reserves and report upon it?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no question of reserves in difference between the two Houses, and the conference committee has no authority to take up questions that are not involved in differences of opinion between the two Houses.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The bill as originally passed, the so-called Aldrich bill, had a provision regarding the reserves. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island how it is that this bill includes no provision in regard to reserves?

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill which went to the House from the Senate, upon which the conference committee has acted, contained no provision in regard to reserves.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But the former bill, known as the Aldrich bill, did, as I understand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The conference committee had no authority to take into consideration a bill which passed Congress, or either House, at a period prior to the passage of this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, who has been chairman of the Finance Committee, I believe, for the last 12 years at least, whether during that time he has always been of the impression that the bank reserves of our national-bank system were painfully inadequate, and whether or not he has ever presented to that committee any measure looking either to an increase of the reserves or to a proper distribution of them?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance try to take up and consider carefully all the measures presented to them. If the Senator from Nevada, with his wide experience and great knowledge upon this subject, had presented a bill in regard to the subject, I am sure the committee would have given it careful consideration, but I have no recollection of any such bill having been presented.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, we have here an evidence of the maladministration of the Republican Party; of its utter failure to appreciate the gravity of the situation regarding national banks. We have here the admission of the chairman of that committee, who has been in charge of the Finance Committee of the Senate for the past 12 years, that the reserves are painfully inadequate, and yet during that time no effort has been made to correct this evil.

The Senator has not lacked warning regarding it. A year ago last February, long before the recent panic, when the Senator had a bill up providing, as his bills generally do, for the inflation of the currency of the country, and not for the proper regulation of banking, I offered to that bill an amendment absolutely germane, providing that country banks should be compelled to keep at least—I believe that was the form of the amendment—three-fifths of their reserves within their vaults; but this change was to be gradually brought about within a period of 10 years, so as to cause no immediate wrenching of our financial system.

That amendment was opposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, and defeated; and yet within a year a new light has fallen upon the Senator from Rhode Island, and he now sees that our reserves are "painfully inadequate"; he now sees that the distribution of these reserves is prejudicial to the banking interests of the country, and that the concentration of these reserves in a few great cities, in less than 400 banks out of nearly 6,000 banks, tends to the promotion of speculation and to the derangement of the business of the country. And yet, though the Senator was warned of it two years ago and found his realization of the warning in the panic of last fall, he presents to this body, when the emergency is over and the time for rational legislation has come, a measure simply to inflate the currency, to exaggerate still further the bank loans of the country, and he does it whilst in the very speech in which he presents the necessity of legislation he admits that this condition is painfully apparent.

NO EMERGENCY JUSTIFYING THE MEASURE.

At the time he presented the bill he urged the condition of emergency. He said that there was a panic upon us—for the panic at that time was not spent—and he urged his bill then as a measure of immediate relief. The force of the panic has been spent, the business conditions of the country are reviving, and we are now marching on to better conditions of business and of commerce. The Senator has had three months in which he could call together the experts of the country, the bankers of the country, and the commercial men of the country—the economists of the country—and obtain their judgment upon this subject; but to-day, instead of presenting us an adequate measure of relief intended to cure existing abnormalities, which the Senator himself admits, he presents this measure, which is intended simply to increase in the future the inflation of bank loans, adding over $500,000,000 to the vast superstructure of credit now built up upon the narrow and tottering basis which has existed for so long a time.

Mr. President, the Senator says that the proposed commission will be charged with the duty of framing a bill; and yet I observe that the commission is to be composed, so far as the Senate is concerned, of members of the Finance Committee, the very committee which has been so derelict in duty under the leadership of the Senator from Rhode Island. I think the country will have small confidence in the results of the work of a commission so organized, when we have had absolute nonaction, apathy, and inertia in this committee under the leadership of the Senator from Rhode Island for the past 12 years.

Now, what is the condition of the exaggerated bank loans? The Senator in his speech presented it most powerfully. Since 1900, in a period of eight years, according to his statement, the bank loans have increased from $5,000,000,000, if I recollect his statement aright, to $10,000,000,000; and I refer only to the bank loans of commercial banks. From $5,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 in eight years. How has that been accomplished? By inadequacy of reserves in the State banks and by an improper distribution of the reserves of the national banks.

The Senator believes in the powers of the Nation. He believes in the great interstate-commerce power of the Constitution when applied to grants.

The Senator and his party have never failed to exercise that power when a subsidy has been asked for. They never fail to exercise that power when a great and powerful corporation wanted anything from the Government. We have made land grants; we have made subsidies; we have guaranteed railroad bonds under that power, but when it comes to the question of restricting these great corporations to whom the Senator and his party would be so liberal, then he doubts our power under the interstate-commerce clause.

The Senator and his party then take themselves to that "twilight zone" to which Mr. Bryan so aptly alluded—the zone of twilight between the national powers and the State powers in which these great corporations avoid the exercise of both national and State sovereignty.

So when I suggest in this body, belonging as I do to the Democratic Party, a party that believes simply in the constitution of delegated powers and the powers implied in the delegated powers, that banking is a matter of interstate commerce just as much as is railroading, that the transaction by which goods are transported from a point in one State to a point in another State does not vary at all from the reciprocal transaction by which money is transferred from the consignee to the consignor through the banks, and that State banks, as well as State railroads, under the interstate-commerce power are subject to the regulation of the entire Union of States, he doubts the power.

I could well understand how such an objection might come from this side of the House, with its views regarding the strict construction of the Constitution, but I can not understand how the objection can come from the other side of the House. It has never failed to exert these powers to the largest degree when subsidy or grant were concerned. Why should it hesitate to exercise them when restriction and regulation of these gigantic State corporations engaged in interstate commerce are involved?

Now, a few words only would bring the reserves of the State banks under the same control as the reserves of the national banks and require the holding of the proper proportion of those reserves within the bank vaults. The Nation has the same power to apply safety appliances to State banks engaged in interstate commerce as to a State railroad engaged in interstate commerce. And we all know that the business of the banks of the country may be prostrated at any time if the safety appliance of a proper reserve of cash to meet obligations to depositors is not maintained.

In a few words we could provide that all banks engaged in interstate commerce should keep the same percentage of reserves within their vaults as is required of national banks. It is true you would have to make the change gradually, running over a period of years, for it would be, of course, an unwise thing to bring all the banks up with a sudden jerk to the requirements of a rational law upon this subject. It might result in the sudden contraction of bank loans, which would involve liquidation. But certainly a gradual reform, running over a period of 10 years, would accomplish a beneficial change. We would then have a rational system of banking in this country, both national and State banks maintaining the same reserves and the same security to their depositors, whereas under the system proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, or, rather—for no system is proposed by him—under a national system, however perfected it may be, the only thing we accomplish is the perfection of the administration of the national banks of the country that have only 40 per cent of the deposits of the country and less than this proportion of the banking capital of the country.

It lies in the power of the State banks, if they are permitted to go on and conduct business in this irrational way, without proper reserves, to paralyze the national banking system itself, for if their system is not protected, if they do not keep the proper amount of cash on hand to meet the ordinary demands of their depositors, a panic is sure to come, and the panic will involve national banks as well, for panics are always unreasoning, and, of course, if the depositors all call upon the banks for their money at one time, liquidation and bankruptcy will ensue.

PARTIAL LEGISLATION OPPOSED.

I protest against this system of legislating for only one-third of the banking system of the country. I protest against this system which perfects only the national banks of the country and absolutely ignores the great power of the union of the States to require security and safety from the State banks themselves in the interest of the general business of the country and of commerce, interstate and foreign.

We can not allow two-thirds of the banking machinery of this country to break down. We can not confine our efforts simply to perfecting the national-bank system, when it involves only one-third of the banks, about one-third of the capital, and about 40 per cent of the deposits of the country.

To what extremes has loose legislation in the various States gone upon this banking question! We all know that in the State of New York the trust company has become an institution of great importance during modern times. The name is a seductive one. It invites confidence, and yet a great number of these trust companies really conduct a confidence game instead of administering their affairs in the interest of their stockholders and their depositors; and State legislation has been loose regarding them.

I read the other day the communication of the president of a trust company in New York to the legislature of that State, which at that time was seeking simply to compel them to keep a reserve of 10 per cent on hand, any part of which could be in national-bank notes, a thing unknown to our system, for national-bank notes are not legal-tender money. They constitute no proper portion of a bank reserve. He protested against the requirement of a reserve. He said that statistics showed that the trust companies were as safe and successful as the national banks themselves, and alluded to the great business they had done, and that thus far none of them, he believed, had failed. And yet his very statement showed that the trust companies to which he referred had in actual legal-tender money an insignificant reserve, not exceeding, if my recollection is right, 2 or 3 per cent.

The banking business of the national banks became so endangered by this system of loose State banking, permitting banks upon inadequate capital and reserves to make enormous profits, that we found a disposition on the part of the managers to go out of the national bank corporation and into the State organizations, and the only thing that prevented many of them from going out was the legislation presented by the Senator from Rhode Island, which increased the amount of bank currency that they could issue upon national bonds from 90 to 100 per cent, and which released them from other restrictions that previously existed. Even then we find that many of these national banks, in order to make money, were obliged to couple themselves with trust companies.

It is a familiar thing for a national bank in any one of the great cities to have a trust company at its back door, with the stock held by the national bank or its stockholders, and the loose banking with large profits is done through the trust company.

There is no provision regarding the relation of capital to loans. There are no adequate provisions regarding the relation of reserves to deposits.

So we find in New York one trust company, the Knickerbocker Trust Co., with a capital of only $1,000,000, having $50,000,000 of deposits and a reserve which I can not state with accuracy, but which was ridiculously small. Thing of permitting a bank with a capital of only $1,000,000 to accept deposits to the extent of $50,000,000 and then loan out every dollar of those deposits.

Safe banking, according to the admission of the Senator from Rhode Island, requires that there should be a fixed relation between the capital of the bank and the loans made by the bank, and that no bank should be permitted to loan more than five times its own capital out of its depositors' money, but should keep the rest of the depositors' money within its own vaults responsive to their demands. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] whether that is not regarded as a safe rule in banking, the Senator himself being a banker? And yet we have in the Knickerbocker Trust Co. a relation of capital to bank loans not of 1 to 5, but of 1 to 50.

NATIONAL POWER OVER INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

We are told that the entire commerce of the country, interstate and foreign, can be absolutely prostrated because the Union lacks the power to regulate the corporations created by an individual State. I deny it. This Union was formed for some purpose. It is our Union. It is a Union of the States. It is not a centralized government far off from us. It is a Government of which we are a part, and one of the things for which the Union was organized was the promotion and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce—full regulation of it—and the power of the Union of States is as complete over interstate commerce as is the power of the individual State over the commerce within its boundaries.

These banks all engage in interstate commerce. The bulk of their transactions are interstate. Banking knows no State lines. The banking center of one State may be in another State. The Federal power, as the Senator from Oklahoma suggests, did tax the circulation of the State banks. That was an exhibition of great power, and yet men hesitate now in the exercise of this great power over interstate commerce to take hold of the banking system of the country under a full and comprehensive plan and so shape it, not radically, not by violently wrenching it, but by a gradual course of reform under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, extending over a period of 10 years or more, the progress being so made year by year as to make our entire banking system, national and State, secure, in the interest of both interstate and of State commerce.

But if anyone has any doubt about the power of the Nation to act in this matter, we can surely act in a persuasive manner. We are organizing under this bill clearing-house associations for the purpose of aggregating the national banks together, upon the theory that in union there is strength, so that the association, the central body, can have the combined strength of all those who constitute its membership and can in time of need help any weak or discipline any recalcitrant member. Now, why should we not give the State banks the opportunity of entering these clearing-house associations? They are members of clearing-house associations now, either voluntary associations or associations organized under State law. Why should we not permit them through these clearing-house associations to receive their proportion of the emergency money based upon securities just as good as those of the national banks?

Why should we not, under regulations imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency and with proper guards, admit them to membership in these clearing-house associations? And if we do it, can we not make it upon conditions? An dwhat should the conditions be? The conditions should be that they maintain the same reserve and that they maintain the same proportion of capital to loans as is required of the national banks, and so by this persuasive method—for thousands of banks would come into these clearing-house associations in order to avail themselves of the benefit of this emergency money—we would, without any question of constitutional law, bring the entire banking system of this country into harmony, so far as protection of depositors is concerned.

I do not stand simply for the protection of the depositors of these banks. I stand also for the protection of the people who make loans from the banks. When you quickly draw out the money from a bank and pay it to the depositors, what does it mean? It means the prostration of some man who has borrowed money from the bank and these men are the men of energy and enterprise who have built up the entire country. We want to protect them as well, and the best way to protect them is to prevent constantly recurring panics, to make our banking system so safe that a depositor will never think of going to the bank and demanding his money except for the current demands of his business or of his household. If we do that, we will protect the borrowers of the country, the men of energy, and the men of enterprise, who have made this country what it is.

Mr. President, I am aware that we are going to have some difficulty in getting a sufficiency of basic money to support this great structure of credit which we have built up. We have exaggerated our system of bank loans and we have exaggerated our system of credit money. We have $3,000,000,000 of so-called "money" in this country, only one billion and a half of which is gold. We have to-day $660,000,000 of uncovered paper money. It calls for gold, every dollar of it. We deducting, of course, the gold which is in the Treasury as a redemption fund for the greenbacks and deducting the 5 per cent redemption fund that stands back of the national-bank notes.

UNCOVERED PAPER MONEY.

We have $660,000,000 of uncovered paper money. There is no country in the world—at least, no civilized country—that has so large a proportion, and we propose under this system to add to it over $500,000,000 of uncovered paper money, for, recollect, there is a difference between secured money and covered money. Covered money is the money that is covered dollar for dollar by legal-tender specie, and secured money is money that may be secured by national bonds or by county bonds or by the assets of banks. We have to-day $660,000,000 of uncovered paper money. It calls for gold, every dollar of it. We have to-day $600,000,000 of silver which has been turned by legislation into a call for gold, so that the silver to-day is simply a material upon which a promise to pay gold is stamped, and really it is as much uncovered money to-day as is the paper money to which I have alluded.

How do the other countries of the world stand regarding uncovered paper money? We find that the United States has $660,000,000, to which we propose to add possibly $500,000,000 more. We find that the United Kingdom, consisting of Australia, Canada, the British Islands, and India, with a total population of three or four hundred million people, has only about $200,000,000 of uncovered paper money, whilst we have $600,000,000, with the prospect of $500,000,000 more.

Then comes France, frequently alluded to, which has only $269,000,000 of uncovered paper money. It had more, it is true, immediately after the Franco-Prussian War, for it had to pay off its debt to Germany in gold and had to substitute paper money in its place, and it did so by the issue of the notes of the Bank of France.

But unlike our Government, it immediately sought to cover that extraordinary issue of paper gradually through a series of years by taking in gold and silver, and to-day as a result of their prudent management they have outstanding only $269,000,000 of uncovered paper money, whilst we have kept out our uncovered greenbacks, we have kept out our uncovered national-bank notes, and we propose now to issue $500,000,000 more of uncovered paper money.

There may come a time when the demand will come, not from depositors, but from the holders of this uncovered paper money; there may come a time when war is impending, when they will say, "We demand the redemption in gold," and then the credit of the Government itself will be imperiled, and that of course will involve the imperiling of the interests of all.

Now, I was alluding to France, which has $269,000,000. Italy stands with $150,000,000. Now I come to the South American countries, whose example I am sure none of us would wish to emulate, and we find out of a total of $4,000,000,000 of uncovered paper money, more or less, in the world, of which we have one-sixth and will have one-fourth under this system, South America has over a billion and a half, or one-third of the entire amount. Colombia has $1,000,000,000 of uncovered paper money. Brazil has $363,000,000 of uncovered paper money. Argentina has $293,000,000 of uncovered paper money. Shall we emulate the example of Argentina and of Brazil and of Colombia in our financial system?

And yet Senators make constant allusion upon this floor to the fact that the banks of Europe, the great civilized nations in the world, have a certain elasticity of issue of uncovered paper money. I have shown you how much they have out. The whole British Empire has not over $200,000,000, France only $269,000,000, and Germany with a very inconsiderable amount. You will find that the Bank of England and the Bank of Germany have enormous reserves of gold, and these extensions of currency which they are permitted to make still leave a large reserve of gold in their treasury for the immediate redemption of this paper money when it is presented; and we propose to issue this vast amount of emergency currency in addition to the $660,000,000 of uncovered paper to-day without providing a sufficient redemption fund.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR EXISTING CONDITIONS.

Mr. President, it has been a favorite expression of almost every financial man who has spoken upon the subject during the past year that we have the worst financial system in the world. I ask If we have it, who is responsible for it? What party announced itself to be the party of sound money in 1896? What party challenged the Democracy upon that question? The Republican Party. It has been in full power. The Senator from Rhode Island has been in charge of this committee for 12 years, and yet during that time not a single remedial measure has been brought into this body for the correction of these evils that exist.

On the contrary, the legislation that has been brought in has simply tended to give more uncovered money, to increase the issue, to enlarge the inflation; and the effect of it has been—I will not say the purpose of it was—the organization of these great corporations, the inflated issues of stocks and bonds, the use of the hard earnings of the yeomanry of the country in every section for the promotion of the sale of those stocks and bonds upon the market. We have had every year a system of inflation in New York, followed by a period of contraction, where the public was milked every year by these promoters and speculators, and yet no effort has been made to cure this speculative condition.

On the contrary, every act of legislation has tended to increase the inflation and to increase the opportunity of these men to spoliate the country.

I have no word of reproach against the bankers as a class. I have but the highest respect for the banking organizations of the country. But a system of piratical banking has been engaged in in the great centers of the country for which they are not responsible, but this body is responsible. The Republican Party is responsible, for it has given them the opportunity for this kind of promotion. Think of it! Out of $700,000,000 in reserves in all the national banks of the country, about $500,000,000 is accumulated in three reserve cities, and most of it in the city of New York.

Mr. President, I would not wrench this system violently. I do not believe in radical reform. I believe in progressive reform. I believe we should bring about these things gradually, running over a period of 5, 10, or 20 years, but we should steadily make progress toward a more perfect system of banking, one that will involve the correction of the evils, both of our national-bank system and of our State-bank system, so far as the constitutional power of the Nation can be exercised.

CLEARING-HOUSE ASSOCIATIONS.

So fas as concerns the organization of these clearing-house associations, perhaps I might differ with the action of the committee in some details, yet I think the movement is in the right direction. It accords with the theory of home government, of local self-government.

It gives the banks in a particular State or in a particular banking district, regardless of State lines, the opportunity to get together for mutual support and mutual aid, and that means, of course, the prevention and relief of panics. It means rules regarding the relation of loans to capital and reserves and deposits, for we will find, if we only leave these matters to the regulation of the unions of banks, they will necessarily bring into their councils the best men of the banking fraternity, and their whole power and influence will be exercised in the line of good banking.

Thus far we have run too strongly toward decentralization. I would not run too far toward centralization. The organization of these clearing-house associations is, to my mind, a commendable plan. I would amplify it, however, by admitting the State banks to these organizations, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, and under certain rules and regulations as to the reserves which they shall keep and the proportion of loans to capital which they will maintain.

NATIONAL BANKING COMMISSION.

We might go a step further in the direction of solidifying the banking interests of the country in the line of the public safety. We might provide that the presidents of the various clearing-house associations shall meet annually in the city of Washington—there would probably be less than 100 of them—and that they should confer here upon matters of mutual concern. We might give them the power to select nine commissioners to constitute, with the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman and the Comptroller of the Currency as secretary, a banking commission, one from each judicial circuit in the country, who would sit permanently at Washington and act in a purely advisory way to the Secretary of the Treasury, the President of the United States, and to Congress itself.

Can there be any doubt but that the clearing-house associations would send here their best men, the best-trained men, the safest men, the truest men, the men of highest character and integrity? They would be brought here in contact with Congress, in contact with the Secretary of the Treasury, with the Comptroller of the Currency, with the President of the United States, and they could be called upon at any time for information and for advice.

I would not at first give them any positive powers. I would simply have them here in an advisory way.

I am aware that this is open to the objection of government by commission. When anyone now suggests the appointment of a commission, the first outcry is "government by commission." We Americans have a way of thinking by the brand. You have only to put on a brand by some name intended to be opprobrious and many people, without thinking of the essential principles involved, condemn it because of the brand.

Whenever the word "centralization," I observe, is used upon that side of the House it is used for that purpose. It is used to summon to your aid the active opposition of Members on this side of the House to measures which your side opposes. And the response is often made, when you brand a thing as a usurpation of power or brand it as centralization, it prevents many men from thinking upon the essential principles.

So recently it has been the custom to brand these commissions and to allude to their action as "government by commission." Mr. President, there is no objection to a commission properly constituted for investigation and report. There is no reason why Congress itself should restrict the membership of every commission it creates to Members of Congress.

There is no reason why commissions should not be appointed in an advisory way to collect information, to make reports, to communicate to Congress, to communicate to the President, to communicate with the Secretary of the Treasury. I submit it is much better to have this method of communication than the present condition of things, where the Secretary of the Treasury is compelled to go to New York as the only source of information when an emergency arises.

* * * * * * *

In view of the great apathy and inertia and inactivity of the Committee on Finance under the administration of the Senator from Rhode Island during the last 12 years, I think I am entirely safe in saying that it would be very much better to intrust this question of the reformation of our banking system to the "house of governors" than to the Finance Committee of the Senate.

I stated that the Senator from Rhode Island had referred to the painful inadequacy of our reserves in a recent speech, and I stated that he had warning upon this subject. If I may be permitted, without apparent egotism, to do so, I will refer to a speech which I made over a year ago, before the recent panic, and which possibly the Senator from Rhode Island heard, for he was in the Chamber. I observe the Senator from Rhode Island is retiring from the Senate Chamber. I should like him to hear this, but inasmuch as he is turning a deaf ear to it, I will read it to the rest of the Senate. It is from a speech delivered by me February 26, 1907.

"Now, Mr. President, I wish to say one word regarding the reserves of these banks. We have a system which crowds all the reserves of all the national banks of the country in New York City. That seems to me to be a vicious system, because it collects from every part of the country moneys to be used simply in speculation. When the moneys are needed in the West and in the South a contraction of the volume of money is caused in New York, and we have the stock panics which may at any time be so large in their proportion as to involve bank panics in New York and resulting bank panics throughout the United States."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

RECENT PANIC PREDICTED.

Mr. CULBERSON. Noticing that the Senator from Rhode Island has returned to the Chamber, I suggest to the Senator from Nevada to reread the portion he read in his absence, as the Senator from Nevada desired the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will read it again.

"Now, Mr. President, I wish to say one word regarding the reserves of these banks. We have a system which crowds all the reserves of all the national banks of the country in New York City. That seems to me to be a vicious system, because it collects from every part of the country moneys to be used simply in speculation. When the moneys are needed in the West and in the South a contraction of the volume of money is caused in New York, and we have the stock panics which may at any time be so large in their proportion as to involve bank panics in New York and resulting bank panics throughout the United States.

"Now, let us see how much of these reserves can be placed in New York. There are 16 reserve cities provided for by the national banking act. National banks in these cities are required to keep 25 per cent of their deposits in cash, but they are allowed to deposit one-half of such cash in banks in New York City and no other city."

I should add two other cities, St. Louis and Chicago.

"New York is the central reserve city in the United States. The result is that all of these national banks in the 16 reserve cities may really have only cash reserves of 12½ per cent, provided they deposit the remaining 12½ per cent in the national banks of New York City.

"Then, how is it with the other cities that are not reserve cities, the country banks, the banks of the smaller cities? They are compelled by law to keep a reserve of 15 per cent. They must have reserves equal to 15 per cent of their deposits. But they are permitted to deposit three-fifths of their supposed cash reserve in the reserve cities. The result is that under the law the national banks of the smaller cities are compelled to keep on hand only 6 per cent of their deposits, and the remaining three-fifths of the 15 per cent may be deposited in the reserve cities, and then the national banks in the reserve cities can deposit one-half of these moneys in the New York City banks under the system to which I have referred.

"So the tendency is to deposit in New York one-half of all the reserves of all the national banks in the United States"—

I have just shown that in New York City, just prior to the time of the recent panic, about one-half of the entire reserves of all the national banks of the country were in New York City.

"So the tendency is to deposit in New York one-half of all the reserves of all the national banks of the United States. It seems to me that is an unfair advantage to give to New York. It has the effect of building up New York at the expense of her great commercial rivals. It is not fair to Boston; it is not fair to Philadelphia; it is not fair to Baltimore, or to Richmond, or to Atlanta, or to New Orleans, or to San Francisco.

"When you add to these enormous reserves deposited in the New York banks the command of the life insurance moneys of the country, you can see how the entire financial system of the country is made to play into the hands of New York and to promote this speculation, which has been breeding panics year after year.

"It is this system of crowding the cash reserves of the national banks of the entire country into New York that has led to this overcapitalization of railroad securities, of trust securities, of watered stocks and bonds, that have been placed upon the entire public and upon which the public are compelled to pay interest and dividends.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. President, it would, of course, revolutionize the banking system of the country if we should attempt to make too radical a change at once in this particular, but I think it is only reasonable to provide in this very bill that hereafter the actual cash to be maintained by these country banks and by these reserve city banks, outside of the central city of New York, shall be increased at the rate of 1 per cent per annum"—

That was my suggestion.

"until we shall have finally a system that will compel the country banks to hold four-fifths of their required reserve of 15 per cent in actual cash in their vaults to meet the demands of their depositors; and that will compel the reserve city banks to keep 25 per cent of actual cash in their vaults to meet the demands of their depositors. If we do this we shall have a safe and sound banking system, and not a banking system that simply aids the promotion of speculation in the country, with its accompanying stock and bank panics."

There the Senator had, if he did me the honor to listen to that speech, an exact picture of what subsequently occurred and what every man who has been accustomed to think would accept as likely to occur at any time under the existing conditions. I moved an amendment to that bill providing for a gradual increase of the cash reserves to be kept in bank vaults, and the Senator from Rhode Island objected to it and it was defeated.

A COMMISSION OF EXPERTS SUGGESTED.

Now, I have small hopes of this commission, organized as it is, with the experience we have had of the Finance Committee thus far upon this subject. I have little hope of a rational bill being presented to us at the next session. There is certainly nothing in the past experience, nothing certainly in the past action, that would warrant us to have great confidence in the result of the work of this commission. I believe it would be a wise thing to add to this commission an equal number of men, to be selected by the President of the United States. I am sure that he would select men who were eminent in finance or eminent in economics. I should like to see upon that commission some men who are preeminent in sound economics. If we can only have sound economics in this country, we will have sound morals.

Now, we have such men. We have such men in Mr. Jenks, professor at Cornell University. We have such a man in Mr. Conant. These men and men like them have been called to the aid of the Government on financial matters, not only relating to our domestic affairs, but relating to our financial relations with Germany, Mexico, China, and the Philippines. Such men, it seems to me, would aid very much in the deliberations of this commission.

I do not believe in that exalted egotism which assumes in the selection of a commission of this kind that there is no wisdom outside of this body. If we want to have a pair of shoes made, we go to a shoemaker. If we want plumbing done, we go to a plumber. If we want carpenter work done, we go to a carpenter.

But there are some things with reference to which Congress often seems to regard expert aid as almost unnecessary. One of them is art, another is architecture, and another is our system of finance. The habit of mind is growing up in Congress of absolutely excluding the outside world from its deliberations upon these important commissions and from bringing into their membership men of experience and capacity and thought in certain lines of specialty. I do not underrate the capacity or the ability of the Congress of the United States, but I do believe this is an age of specialism. I do believe that in every line of thought and action there are experts, and I should call such men into a commission of this kind as equals in deliberation, and not simply as witnesses to present their views.

Mr. President, I hope that this commission will consider not only the question of domestic finance, but also of international finance. The disruption which took place years ago between the gold-standard countries and the silver-standard countries still exists. That disruption is producing serious results upon trade and commerce—results, perhaps, which we are unconscious of, but which Germany is not unconscious of, which England is not unconscious of, and which France is not unconscious of. Those countries that are upon the cheap silver basis are paying practically the old wages at the market price of silver in the world. Their competitive power is great, and as one reason for the fact that our exports do not increase as they ought to increase—our exports outside of the natural products of manufactured exports—you will find the basis of it in this system of international exchange. That requires study.

I should like to see such men as Jenks and Conant, who have now had a world-wide experience in these matters, upon this commission. You need not fear them. No man can question their devotion to the gold standard; but their studies of the entire world have brought them to the realization of the fact that over three-fourths of the population of the world is not upon the gold standard, and that countries that are desirous of engaging in international exchange of products must consider the question of a suitable international exchange as well as of a suitable domestic exchange.

We have been regardless of this in the past. We have been a country of such extraordinary natural resources that we have been enabled to commit any quantity of economic blunders without injury to ourselves. We have gone on under this system with a high tariff, raising the value of our domestic products by the exclusion of foreign products in competition with them, and we have also, through this system, created within the tariff wall great monopolies that have driven out the competition of the smaller corporations, and have thus been able to raise the prices of their products within the area of monopoly.

In addition to these conditions, which have had a direct effect upon prices and which have raised the cost and the value of everything in this country, including products and labor and real estate and buildings, we have had this system of inflation of bank loans, which has given to every dollar of actual cash in the banks a potential capacity of $10 through the system of bank loans, and we all know that an inflation of credit has the same result as an increase in the volume of money in the effect upon prices. The result is that the prices of labor and the prices of products in this country, created by this system of tariff monopoly and created by this system of inflation of bank loans, are higher than they are anywhere else in the world, and yet we expect to enter into the commerce of the world and to compete with countries who are using a cheaper money than we are, who are manufacturing upon a cheaper basis, with cheaper wages, and the cost of whose ships and the cost of administration of whose ships is vastly less than our own.

And now, under this system of monopoly and subsidy, it is proposed to take the ocean within the area of our subsidizing effort, and to subsidize steamships all over the ocean, with a view to promoting our commerce with other nations.

STABLE CONDITIONS NEEDED.

Mr. President, what we want in this country is a stable standard of value, not a standard that is varying with the seasons—one standard in the spring and another standard in the fall. We do not want a standard that changes with every inflation of banking loans and changes with every diminution of bank loans. What we want are stable values, stable wages, stable prices. A rapid increase in prices is almost as bad as a rapid diminution in prices, for the prices of things always run ahead of the prices of labor; and then we have the struggle of labor to keep up with the prices of products, and that results in all sorts of contentions that involve the very peace of the Republic.

It is time that we were devoting ourselves to sound economics—sound economics regarding our tariff, sound economics regarding our monopolies of production, sound economics regarding our money and banking system, and sound economics regarding our system of international exchange.

Mr. President, I shall vote against this conference report. I trust the Senator from Rhode Island will, upon reflection, yield to the suggestion of so returning this question to the conference committee as to bring out a bill that will meet the demands of the country for reform in the particulars to which I have alluded, and reform in the particulars to which he himself has alluded with rare force and vigor.

[Mar. 4, 1910.]

OUR FINANCIAL SYSTEM SHOULD BE REORGANIZED.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have been anxious to vote for a bill which, while aiding the Government in its governmental function of maintaining a stable volume of money and aiding the Government to keep that money in the channels of trade free from obstruction or diversion, would at the same time encourage habits of thrift among the wage earners of the country. I shall not enter into the discussion of the constitutional question. I shall assume, for the purposes of argument, that the Government has the power under the Constitution to adopt a measure that will prevent the tying up of the currency of the country, its diversion from the channels of trade, and its withdrawal to the stockings and strong boxes of the people. My contention is that, assuming the constitutional power, this bill does not present a means appropriate to that end. I believe that this measure is only partial in its attempt to guard the country against financial stringency, and that the action which we should take upon the subject should be much broader and more comprehensive.

CONFIDENCE IN BANKS SHOULD BE STRENGTHENED.

In the first place, it must be recollected that the wage earners constitute a very small proportion of the depositors in commercial banks, and that when you do something to allay their alarm in times of crises, you do not necessarily allay the alarm of other classes of the community who are likewise depositors, and who, experience shows, are as likely as the wage earners to take alarm and to withdraw their money from the banks and deposit it in strong boxes. I believe that we should strengthen confidence in the banks by measures strengthening their reserves and their capital, by measures increasing their cooperation and mutual support in times of stringency, by measures which will compel State banks, like State railroads, as instruments of interstate commerce, to apply the safety devices required by the National Government, and by measures bringing them into association with each other in the various financial districts of the country, in mutual supervision and watchfulness that will eliminate bad banking, and in a mutual support that will unite all their forces and resources in time of danger. I would prevent the massing of the reserves of the country banks in the speculative centers, and I would substitute sound banking for the method here proposed of what amounts to a Government guaranty.

* * * * * * *

What does safe banking require? Safe banking requires that no bank should be permitted to loan out more than $5 of its depositors' money to every dollar of its capital, because the capital is the ultimate security of the depositors, and the margin should be at least 20 per cent; and it also requires that every bank should hold in its vaults subject to the check of its depositors at least 20 per cent in cash.

If you will look over the statistics, you will find that many of the State banks do not come up to this rule as to capital, and few of them come up to this rule as to reserves. The State trust companies, which of late years have so trenched upon the business of the national banks, have in many notable cases done a commercial business upon a 3 per cent cash reserve.

FINANCIAL SYSTEM REQUIRES REORGANIZATION.

Now, Mr. President, we are only treating symptoms when we pass such a bill as this. Our whole financial system requires reorganization. The Monetary Commission is at work on it; but, instead of doing the things that are easily within reach and doing them quickly, it is bent upon a work that is almost impossible of successful accomplishment, and that, too, an accomplishment which, in the present condition of finance and of speculative control of banks, would be undesirable.

There is just one thing that has characterized the action of Congress with reference to the national banks under the leadership of the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, as chairman of the Finance Committee, and that has been, legislation tending not to the security of the depositors, but to the increase of the credit facilities of the banks. Look over the whole history of the Finance Committee, under the direction and control of its present chairman, and you will find no measure tending to increase the security of depositors and all legislation tending to increase the credit issues of the bank. Yet, as a matter of fact, we are suffering in this country to-day from too large a money volume and too large issues of credit. The result has been this rise in prices which is felt by all, and which is declaimed against in every household in the country.

The amount of gold in this country has doubled in 10 years. From about $700,000,000 in 1899 it has increased to nearly $1,400,000,000 in 1909. That alone would be an inflation amounting to 100 per cent in our basic money, whilst the population has increased less than 20 per cent. That inflation alone would cheapen the dollar and raise the value of everything that the dollar measured; but, under the inspiration of our financial legislation, the banks have been enabled to add to this inflation caused by the increase of basic money, the inflation caused by increasing the credit facilities of the banks, and we find that, as compared with 10 years ago, the loans of national and State banks, exclusive of savings banks, equaled $10,000,000,000 in 1909, whilst 10 years ago they were only $5,000,000,000. In addition to this, the national banks have been permitted by liberal legislation to increase the issue of national-bank notes from 237,000,000 in 1899 to $685,000,000 in 1909, and these notes are covered by only 5 per cent in gold, held in the redemption fund. And so it is that, although we have during the past 10 years been going through a period of increased production of gold unprecedented in the history of the world, we have been increasing also our substitute money until to-day the United States has in its greenbacks and in its national-bank notes more uncovered paper money than any country in the world.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What does the Senator suggest as an improvement? Would he contract the currency and reduce the circulating medium or curtail the coinage of gold, or what suggestion does the Senator have as a remedy for the increase in prices caused by this inflation?

That is a subject to which I think too little attention is paid at this time, when there is a disposition to complain of increasing prices. Are we to remedy it by reducing the circulating medium and limiting the coinage of gold? What suggestion has the Senator to make?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator shortly, after I conclude the statement in which I was engaged.

I called attention to the fact that within 10 years the basic money—gold—had increased about $700,000,000 in this country, and that during that period the uncovered paper money had been increased about $400,000,000, and the loans given by the commercial banks—national and State—had increased $5,000,000,000. That $5,000,000,000 of loans has the efficiency of money, for the bank loan is turned into the bank deposit and the depositor to whom the credit is given can check against it, by every check practically adding to the money volume of the country.

The Senator from South Dakota asked me what I would do. In the first place, I would take steps gradually, not immediately or rudely, to check this extraordinary issue of credit by the banks, and I would check it by compelling the banks to keep in their vaults a larger reserve, responsive to the demand of their depositors. To-day we have in all the commercial banks less than $1,400,000,000 in cash, and their obligations to their depositors aggregate over $10,000,000,000. We thus have an average cash reserve in the State banks and the national banks of about 13 per cent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, does the Senator consider that it is a bad condition of affairs for the banks all over the country, both State and national, to be loaded down with currency and with deposits? Would the Senator improve the condition by having less funds in those banks to the credit of depositors?

NO CONTRACTION CONTEMPLATED.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator entirely misapprehends me. I do not propose to diminish by one dollar the volume of real money in this country, but I would take such action as would either compel the national banks to gradually cover their paper money with actual gold to be obtained from the increased production or to gradually retire their uncovered notes, which under existing conditions have been put out for inflation and not for necessary service; and I would compel the national banks, and also the State banks engaged in interstate commerce, to gradually strengthen their reserves by drawing into their vaults the new coin which comes from the increased production of gold, amounting in this country to $100,000,000 annually, and which otherwise would be employed as the basis of increasing the bank loans to the extent of over $500,000,000 annually, for the Senator knows that under the system of bank loans every dollar in the banks' vaults has the efficiency of $5 or more in the exchanges through the bank loan and deposit and check system. I would restrain future inflation gradually by compelling the banks to increase their reserves, which would absorb for a considerable period the current production of gold in this country and tend to prevent that gold from unduly inflating and raising prices, and I would make the increased gold a bulwark of security to the depositors in the banks, strengthening their confidence in the ability of the banks in any emergency to respond to their checks, and thus diminishing the chance of bank runs and bank panics.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is equivalent, is it not, I would ask the Senator, to contracting the currency; that is, by taking it out of circulation and fixing it in a stationary way as a reserve in the banks? So that, after all, the Senator's remedy is a contraction of the currency.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It does not involve a contraction of the currency. It simply takes the new gold, which is being produced in this country at the rate of $100,000,000 annually, and compels the banks to take that money and put it into their cash reserves, as against their deposit obligations and as a bulwark of security to the depositors themselves.

Will the Senator claim that an average reserve of 13 per cent is sufficient as a security to depositors? Will he claim that a cash reserve of 8 per cent, which is the average cash reserve of the various State banks in the country, is a sufficient security for depositors? If so, why does he not introduce a bill to reduce the reserves required in the national-bank act from 25 per cent in the reserve cities and from 15 per cent in the country banks to 8 per cent? If we are to have reserves, reserves necessarily imply that the money itself must be in the banks. It is not inert, however, for every dollar of cash in a bank enables that bank to issue at least $5 of credit, under the system that I speak of, in the shape of bank loans; and thus every dollar put into a bank has an efficiency of $5 in the exchanges of the country.

All I urge is that you should bulwark the deposit and check system by a sufficient requirement of cash reserves to meet the demands of depositors. What is it that alarms depositors? Are depositors satisfied with the statements that go out that the average loss of all the banks is the infinitesimal part of 1 per cent in a given time? No. Every depositor wants to feel that his money is there responsive to his call, and if he has the least doubt about it, whatever belief he may have about the ultimate security of the money, he wants to get it out, and hence it is necessary to have a large amount of cash always on hand to meet the current checks of the depositors, and it must be sufficient for an emergency. It is a universal rule of good banking that from 20 to 30 per cent is a safe cash reserve for banks.

We in this country have gone to the other extreme, and it accounts for the extraordinary inflation of credit and the extraordinary inflation of prices in this country, for we have had not only the inflation which has reached throughout the world, caused by the increased production of gold, but we have also had the additional inflation from which other countries have not suffered to the same degree—that is, the inflation of the credit system of the banks by which we have put thousands of credit mills to work, practically establishing a currency of their own, and we are beginning to feel the effects of it in an increase of prices that is disorganizing every business; that makes the common denominator, the thing that measures all other values, 30 per cent less in value than it was some years ago, and which has correspondingly raised the price, as compared with it, of all the products that money measures.

It is this of which we complain. It is this that, if continued, is going to bring about a readjustment between the laborers of the country and the employers of the country, a readjustment that will be accompanied by all kinds of violence and distress, unless we by wise and precautionary measures meet the question and restrain this inflation of credit and bring it within true and just proportions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply desire to say——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to state to the Senator that I do not desire to contract.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will gladly listen to the Senator. I want to disabuse the Senator's mind of one thing. I do not want to contract anything. I do not want to contract the existing volume of money. I do not want to contract the existing volume of credits. I know as well to-day as anyone that if you diminish the credits $10,000,000,000 extended by the banks to-day even $500,000,000 it would create a paralysis of trade throughout the country. All I wish to do is to restrain further inflation, and I would do that not by contracting the existing volume of money, not by contracting the existing volume of credits, but by putting cash behind the deposits and utilizing the extraordinary output of gold in a way that will add to the security of business throughout the country without impairing values. I would check the rise of prices. I would not by a revolutionary process bring about a readjustment and destruction of prices.

[May 15, 1911.]

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR THE EXTRA SESSION.

BANKING.

Mr. NEWLANDS. * * * So it is with banking. For years Congress has been enacting laws regarding banking, always with a view to giving the bankers themselves larger privileges, never with a view to protecting depositors and the public at large. The former chairman of our Finance Committee, under whose administration these abuses had been allowed to continue, declared recently that the banking system of the United States was the worst in the civilized word. Banking is a branch of interstate commerce so far as interstate exchange is concerned.

The powers of the National Government over interstate exchange are just as absolute as they are over interstate transportation or interstate trade, yet we have permitted year after year these abuses to exist. We have permitted constant breaks in the exchanges of the country just as intolerable as would be constant breaks in the transportation to the country and just as easily guarded against as would be breaks in transportation. With what tolerance would be view a condition of things under which 10 miles of track would be taken out of each one of the great transcontinental railways of the country at intervals, and interstate transportation be thus disturbed and delayed? With what tolerance would we view the destruction of great railway bridges to the prejudice of interstate commerce? With what tolerance would we view a system under which the railway cars of this country could be drifted to the city of New York and there held for storage purposes, for hire as storage warehouses, when the entire country needed them for the moving of crops? Yet we have permitted this with reference to interstate exchange; we have permitted the reserves of the entire country under our system of law to gravitate to New York, to be used there not for the proper function of banking exchange, but for promotion and speculation.

Then, when the moneys have been tied up there and the country banks have asked for them in order to move the crops of the country, the return of the reserves is denied upon the ground that the withdrawal of those moneys from speculation would bring down the stock market in ruins upon New York and would bring about a destruction of values throughout the entire country; yet it only requires a little legislation, the compelling of these banks to maintain a proper proportion between their capital and their obligations, a thing concerning which there is no injunction now in our present banking law; it will only require a little care regarding reserves, the compelling of country banks to keep in their vaults the larger proportion of their reserves, and preventing them from sending them to New York; it will only require legislation which will bind them together into one great strong body in each of the States for the purpose of mutually insuring bank depositors to prevent these disastrous breaks in exchange, which, resulting from local bank panics here and there, tie up the production and trade of the country and inflict irremediable loss upon enterprise and business throughout the country.

Mr. President, interstate commerce, embracing these three subjects—interstate transportation, interstate trade, and interstate exchange—has only been partially legislated upon, successfully so with reference to interstate transportation; not at all with reference to interstate trade and interstate exchange; and yet the latter two are just as important to the prosperity of the country as is the former, and the country can be as easily protected by proper legislation relating to them as it can be protected against the abuses of transportation.

How have we done this with reference to transportation? Not by ourselves fixing rates, not by ourselves endeavoring to correct every abuse, as we would have the right to do, but by creating an interstate commerce commission as the servant of Congress, to carry out its will under rules fixed by Congress, thus creating a body of intelligent, capable men under the sanction of an oath, acting in a semijudicial capacity, who devote their lives to the scientific study of these questions and are not distracted, as we are, by numerous other duties.

[May 16, 1911.]

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION—LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM.

* * * * * * *

BANKING.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then there is another question—the banking question. Is there any question more pressing than that before the country to-day? We have, according to the statement of Mr. Aldrich, the late chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, the worst banking system that any civilized country of the world has, a banking system under which our banks have not become, as they should be, great machines of exchange, permitting the sale of products between individuals and communities and sections and furnishing the circulating medium through which the sales can be closed, but have been turned into great machines of promotion and speculation, absorbing the cash reserves of the country, tying them up, and then calmly inviting the country banks to suspend payment when an emergency comes.

Are we content to permit these annual or biennial or triennial or decennial breaks in exchange to continue, paralyzing the business of the country, paralyzing trade between communities and sections and States? Are we to take up this question as a question intrusted to the jurisdiction of the Nation alone through the grant of the States, the only right of the States upon the subject matter being to demand of the Union of States that it should fully and beneficially exercise the power granted?

Banks constitute the machinery of exchange. The functions of the banks have been perverted. In order to make them efficient instruments of exchange they must have ample capital as a protection to their depositors; they must keep ample reserves as a protection against the demands of their depositors; and yet Congress has never legislated as to what proportion the capital of a bank shall bear to its obligations to its depositors. A bank with a capital of $50,000 can accept deposits to the extent of $50,000,000, and the only security that the depositors have is the reserve of their own money within the bank and the $50,000 capital of such a bank.

When banking was a science the laws of the various States absolutely required that no bank should loan its depositors money in excess of five times its capital, thus compelling the banks all the time to maintain a capital equal to 20 per cent of their deposit obligations. Yet the Congress of the United States has made no requirement upon this subject.

Our system ought to be a model system for every State in the Union, but, as the result of our carelessness and indifference upon this subject, the States themselves, formerly careful in this matter, have relaxed their care and within the last decade we have seen companies, misnamed trust companies, with small capital and large deposits, spring up in the various States, and it is these banks that have menaced the safety of the country, oftentimes involving the national banks themselves. It is our function, so long as a State bank engages in interstate commerce, to compel it to maintain the safety appliances that will make it an efficient instrumentality of exchange. We have the same power with reference to a State bank that we have with reference to a State railroad—the State bank engaging in interstate commerce and the State railroad engaging in interstate transportation—to compel either the State bank or the State railroad to apply the safety device that is necessary to make the one an efficient instrumentality of exchange and the other an efficient instrumentality of transportation.

And yet we have done nothing upon this score, and the State banks of the country, under the example of the national banks, relaxing their old-time caution, have been organized with insufficient reserves, some trust companies keeping on hand only 2 or 3 per cent of their deposit obligations. This is the way in which Congress has acted upon that branch of interstate commerce, exclusively intrusted to its jurisdiction—the question of interstate exchange.

As I said yesterday, a system of transportation which would permit breaks here and there by the removal of tracks or by the removal of bridges would be regarded as intolerable, and if it involved interstate transportation, the hand of the Interstate Commerce Commission would be laid upon such delinquency. Yet we permit similar breaks in the exchanges of the country to occur through our neglect of the proper precautions of legislation. No wonder the distinguished former Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, declared our system to be the worst banking system in the world. And now, instead of Congress addressing itself purely to the question of compelling national banks and State banks engaged in interstate commerce to maintain an adequate capital and an adequate reserve, instead of devising means by which they can be associated together in State associations for mutual protection and for the insurance of their depositors, the attention of the country is being directed by the Monetary Commission to a plan for practically reviving the old central-bank system—an improvement, it may be, yet a central-bank system. And that, too, at a time when the Democratic Party is coming into power, or, rather, when it is increasing its power all the time in this body and is now sharing the responsibility of government with the Republican Party, and is likely to come into full power—a party whose traditions are against the creation of a central bank.

If this be so, and if the Republican Party is powerless, even if it had the will, to create a central banking system, is it not wise in this condition of things to establish a modus vivendi as to the banking question; to reach out for reforms that are within reach and which do not involve the principles or the traditions of either party? Why should not some committee of this body be sitting upon that question during these next five months instead of leaving it to the Finance Committee, which is already overcharged with labor? Why should not that whole question be referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction of the question of interstate exchange and which could act on this question while the Finance Committee is deliberating upon matters relating to the tariff?

* * * * * * *

PREVENTION OF BANK PANICS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The third proposal which I suggested for committee consideration was one providing for the protection of bank depositors and the minimizing of bank panics by the organization of a national reserve association in each State, in which the national banks and the State banks engaged in interstate commerce shall be stockholders, such national reserve associations to have ample capital and reserves and to take over the note-issuing functions now enjoyed by the national banks, including the power to issue emergency currency; such associations to have the power to insure or guarantee the depositors of their constituent banks, and in connection therewith powers of examination of such banks; such associations to be brought into federation through a national banking board fairly representative of the different sections of the country, one-half of which shall be selected by such associations and one-half by the President of the United States; and such board to be advisory to the Congress and to the President.

Of course, this is a mere suggestion as to a line of legislative action, coming from a Democrat who is opposed to the suggestion of a central-bank organization such as is recommended by the former distinguished Senator from Rhode Island. It is incumbent upon the Democratic Party to present some measure in opposition to that measure. It is incumbent upon the Democratic Party to present its view upon this question. Already the banks of the country are being organized for the purpose of carrying through the Aldrich monetary bill. Already the commercial organizations of the country are being exploited upon this subject.

Already public sentiment is being created, and it is absolutely essential for the Democratic Party, if it has any distinctive view upon the subject, to present it now. Why should not this party, both in the Senate and in the House, through its membership in committees be engaged in this work, and why should not the Republican committees of the Senate undertake this work? Thus far we have intrusted it to a Monetary Commission, originally composed of Members of the Senate and of the House, but by death and the mutations of politics almost every one of the original members on that commission, so far as the Senate is concerned, has departed from public life. So instead of having the members of that commission active Members of this body as our guides, they occupy the position of any other commission with powers of recommendation.

* * * * * * *

Mr. NEWLANDS. I also offer an amendment to the bill introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], which I send to the desk. The amendment instructs the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and report for the consideration of Congress such amendments to the national banking act as, in his judgment, are necessary to secure certain results named in the amendment. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I will not ask that it be read at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that that, not being an amendment to the pending amendment, can only be offered after the pending amendment has been acted upon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply offer it now for the purpose of having it inserted in the RECORD and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can present it now, to be offered at the proper time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes, sir.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (S. 854) as an additional section.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, instructed to draft and report for the consideration of Congress such amendments to the national banking act as in his judgment are necessary to secure the following results:

(1) The proper proportion of the capital of the individual national banks to their obligations.

(2) The proper proportion of the reserves of the individual national banks to their obligations.

(3) The proportion of such reserves, if any, which may be deposited by the individual banks in other banks and the restrictions and nature of such deposits.

(4) The examination of such banks by the national authorities.

(5) The organization of such banks into local clearing-house and emergency currency associations, and the inclusion therein of State banks engaged in interstate exchange, and the terms of their inclusion.

(6) The union of the national banks of each State in reserve associations for mutual protection and for protection of depositors, and the inclusion therein of State banks engaged in interstate exchange, and the terms of such inclusion.

(7) The federation of such State associations through a national banking board, composed of members fairly apportioned to the different sections of the country and partly selected by such State associations and partly by the President of the United States; the inclusion in such board of the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman thereof and of the Comptroller of the Currency as secretary thereof.

(8) The powers of such national board, including therein the powers of investigation, publicity, and recommendation to the President and to Congress.

(9) The transfer to the associations above referred to of the note-issuing functions of the constituent banks, and the gradual retirement of a bond-secured currency without dangerous contraction.

(10) The enlargement of the powers of the national banks with a view to enabling them to transact certain business now monopolized by State banks and the restrictions thereon.

(11) And such other amendments as may be advisable to strengthen the individual national banks and the State banks engaged in interstate exchange and to mutually protect them against bank runs, to secure depositors in the prompt payment of their deposits, and to prevent breaks in or paralysis of interstate exchange.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I also give notice that I shall offer an amendment providing that this commission, of which only two out of the eight or nine Senators originally appointed upon it are now in the Senate, and only a few of the Representatives originally appointed upon it are now in the House of Representatives, shall be enlarged by the addition of certain Senators, to be selected by the progressive Republicans and the Democrats, and certain Representatives, who are also to be selected by those organizations. This I do because the present complexion of the commission is six Republican Senators as against two Democratic Senators, and in the House five Republican Representatives as against two Democratic Representatives.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should not favor the proposition just mentioned by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], although a statement can be made even stronger than that which he has just given to the Senate. There is not a single member of the nine originally selected from the Senate who is now a member of the commission. One member selected from the other House, but now in the Senate, is a member of the commission, but the status of that member is somewhat doubtful in view of the amendment now presented. I think it unquestionably best that the commission as now constituted should finish its work. If there is then further work to be done, the commission may be reorganized or new members added. I should especially deprecate the appointment of other members before the present commission makes its report, because in that event the commission would have to begin its work over again with new men.

Mr. President, I commenced on Wednesday last to set before the Senate the problems to be considered by the National Monetary Commission and sought to explain with some degree of elaboration the banking and currency problem now pending before the country. I find that I shall not have opportunity to finish my remarks before the hour fixed for a vote, but, with the indulgence of the Senate, at some later day during the week I shall seek an opportunity to complete what I commenced to say. I do not, however, wish to interfere with the consideration of any revenue bill or in any way delay the completion of the business of the Senate, for I share with others the anxiety for an early adjournment. However, if there should come a time when no other Senator desires to engage the attention of the Senate in discussion I shall seek to occupy some further time. I will be glad now to yield to the Senator from Iowa if he desires to speak, and if he concludes before 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., I may resume.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall consume but a very few moments. In so far as I can do so, I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and I hope that all the friends of this measure will see in the amendment the substantial accomplishment of the purposes that I had in view. My purpose was, first, to require the commission to make a report so that Congress might again be in the possession of the subject and enter upon any legislation that might be thought necessary in order to better our banking laws and our financial system. This amendment changes my bill in that respect only in postponing the time at which the report is required from the 4th day of December to the 8th day of January. I believe it is wise to defer the report until January. My bill was introduced early in the session, and I hoped that it might be passed long ago. We are now in the closing hours of the session, and before the bill is passed, if it is passed, we will then be within something like three months of the next session, and I can very easily appreciate that the commission will need longer than that time in order to complete its report. I am, therefore, very willing to make the date the 8th of January, instead of the 4th of December.

The bill I introduced going into effect on the 5th of December abolished the commission as of that date. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio continues the commission until the 1st day of May. I have no serious objection to the perpetuation of the commission during that period. I would not, however, have consented to accept the amendment were it not that suitable provisions are made in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio for the discontinuance of the expense of the commission. The amendment provides, as I understand, that there are to be no salaries after the approval of this bill for the members of the commission, whether they be Members of Congress or whether they be not. It also provides that from and after the passage of this bill there shall be no duplication of compensation paid to employees of the commission, as has been unfortunately the case in the past. Therefore the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio accomplishing all that I had originally desired to accomplish, and not being now, and hoping that I never will be, especially attached to my own particular phraseology, but always wishing to reach the desired object, I hope sincerely that the amendment proposed will be adopted, and that the bill, as thus amended, will receive the approval of every Member of the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, if there is no one else who desires to speak—the order being to vote at 1.45 p. m.—I desire to be recognized. When I suspended my remarks on Friday last I was speaking of the different kinds of currency issued under what is known as the Aldrich-Vreeland bill. One class is based upon bonds of municipalities, States, and so forth; the other upon commercial paper. The issue of circulating notes can not exceed 75 per cent of the face value of such commercial paper, and must be guaranteed by an association made up of banks having a capital of not less than $5,000,000.

Mr. President, I can hardly approve of the first class of currency, namely, that which is based upon bonds. The inevitable result is too great a degree of rigidity. It requires banks to keep a class of securities which they would not naturally retain in the ordinary transaction of their business. That is especially true of newly settled localities, where it is desirable, yes, essential, that a banking institution should be able to utilize every possible resource for the accommodation of the community in which it is located.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. In a moment. If, however, the law required that additional currency be issued upon bonds, each institution would desire, at the very beginning of the transaction of business, to buy a certain amount of bonds so as to be prepared when the time comes for additional demands to issue further currency. Again, the plan of issuing circulating notes based upon municipal securities, State, and so forth, gives an undue advantage to the older communities or those in which rates of interest are low. They can purchase bonds and carry them profitably, while a bank located in a community on the frontier, or where the demand is more active, could not.

Mr. NEWLANDS and Mr. HEYBURN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield first to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to ask a question of the Chair.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The time is approaching for a vote. I understand that when that time arrives debate is excluded. I therefore ask the Senator, as he obviously has not time now to conclude his remarks, whether he will consent to the addition of a section providing for a report from the Secretary of the Treasury for the consideration of Congress of such amendments to the national banking act as, in his judgment, are necessary to secure the following result. Those results are substantially——

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Nevada submit to an interruption?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. That, I understand, is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada several days ago.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The amendment I proposed the other day was that the Monetary Commission itself should pass upon these questions.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada will suspend. The Senator from Idaho rises to a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to know whether or not after the hour of 1.45 it will be in order to ask for the reading of the amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks undoubtedly it will be.

Mr. HEYBURN. All amendments before they are voted upon, because I desire to have an amendment read before I vote upon it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All amendments which have been offered, or which may be offered, can be read before the vote is taken.

Mr. BURTON. A parliamentary inquiry. Does the request for the reading of the amendment take precedence before the disposition of the question of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not now asking for the reading. I only do not want to be foreclosed three minutes and a half from now.

Mr. BURTON. I think if the Senator from Idaho would suspend, we will finish this in two moments.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, we have just three minutes left.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Ohio will recall that the other day I offered an amendment requesting a report from the Monetary Commission upon certain propositions.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire that the Chair rule upon my parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already stated that when amendments are presented for the action of the Senate they will be read at the request of any Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Ohio will recall that the other day I offered an amendment providing that the Monetary Commission should report upon certain propositions, submitted in my amendment, regarding the strengthening of individual banks, their federation in State associations, and their federation nationally through a national banking board.

The objection to that is that the commission has already outlined its views, and that we would be calling upon a hostile commission to report upon these propositions. I have now changed my amendment so as to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury shall report upon these questions, with a view to strengthening the banking act.

Mr. BURTON. The answer to that is perfectly clear.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether he will consent to that being appended as an additional section?

Mr. BURTON. The answer to that is perfectly clear. If the Senator from Nevada desires that an inquiry be made of the Secretary of the Treasury, let him make it, and not engraft it on a monetary commission bill. It does not belong here. Indeed, I think a point of order would lie. If the Senator from Nevada——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURTON. I will yield in just a moment. If the Senator from Nevada desires the Monetary Commission to report upon his questions, I will give him such assurance as I may that the report of the commission will be responsive to his inquiries. If I have time later during the week I will try to reply in extenso to the questions which he has propounded.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. The first section of the substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio requires the commission to make a report by the 8th of January, 1912. Notwithstanding that report is required of the commission, its life is extended until the 1st of May, 1912. I ask what necessity there is to continue the commission after it has made its final report?

Mr. BURTON. So that if there is any further question upon which a report is desired the commission may make it. Section 1 does not provide for a final report. It is a report. It is quite likely that after a report is made Congress will demand that some questions not elaborated may be still further considered and reported upon by the commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m. having arrived, the Secretary will read the unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at 1.45 o'clock p. m. on Monday, August 14, 1911, without further debate, a vote be taken upon the pending amendment and any amendments to be offered to S. 854, "A bill to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the national banking laws,' approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911," and upon the bill itself to final disposition thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the amendment is read it is proper for the Chair to make a statement.

The Chair at the time it made the reply to the Senator from Nevada that his amendment was not then in order did not understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio was a substitute for the whole. That being the case, the Chair desires to state that before voting upon the substitute it will be necessary that any amendments which are desired to be engrafted upon it shall be offered and acted upon. In other words, that the substitute itself is open to amendment. If the substitute is adopted, the bill can not thereafter be amended.

Mr. BURTON. Has the amendment of the Senator from Nevada been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It has not. I will——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada desires to offer it, and it is in order.

Mr. BURTON. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to offer it as an amendment to the substitute or as an amendment to the original bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer it as an amendment to the substitute, as an additional section, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the proposed substitute the following words:

SEC. —. That the Monetary Commission be, and it is hereby, instructed to draft and report for the consideration of Congress such amendments to the national banking act as, in its judgment, are necessary to secure the following results:

1. The proper proportion of the capital of the individual national banks to their obligations.

2. The proper proportion of the reserves of the individual national banks to their obligations.

3. The proportion of such reserves, if any, which may be deposited by the individual banks in other banks, and the restrictions and nature of such deposits.

4. The examination of such banks by the national authorities.

5. The organization of such banks into local clearing house and emergency currency associations, and the inclusion therein of State banks engaged in interstate exchange, and the terms of their inclusion.

6. The union of the national banks of each State in reserve associations for mutual protection and for protection of depositors, and the inclusion therein of State banks engaged in interstate exchange, and the terms of such inclusion.

7. The federation of such State associations through a national banking board, composed of members fairly apportioned to the different sections of the country, and partly selected by such State associations and partly by the President of the United States; the inclusion in such board of the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman thereof and of the Comptroller of the Currency as secretary thereof.

8. The powers of such national board, including therein the powers of investigation, publicity, and recommendation to the President and to Congress.

9. The transfer to the associations above referred to of the note-issuing functions of the constituent banks and the gradual retirement of a bond-securing currency without dangerous contraction.

10. The enlargement of the powers of the national banks with a view to enabling them to transact certain business now monopolized by State banks, and the restrictions thereon.

11. And such other amendments as may be advisable to strengthen the individual national banks and the State banks engaged in interstate exchange and to mutually protect them against bank runs, to secure depositors in the prompt payment of their deposits, and to prevent breaks in or paralysis of interstate exchange.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state that that simply asks for a report upon these questions for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, since the Senator from Nevada has said a word, I will say that all of these subjects are within the purview——

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a point of order. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No explanation is in order.

Mr. BURTON. I would not have made the remark except that the Senator from Nevada having made an explanation I desired to explain the other side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No debate is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada to the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NEWLANDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when Mr. BRYAN's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague has been called home on account of the death of his father. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I understand that the Senator from Missouri is detained from the Chamber by illness. Therefore I withhold my vote upon this and other roll calls to-day.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. Were he present, I should vote "nay." I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. MYERS (when Mr. DAVIS's name was called). I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE], who is detained from the Chamber. On this question I vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I make this announcement for all votes that may be had to-day.

Mr. NELSON (when Mr. MCCUMBER's name was called). I desire to state that the Senator from North Dakota is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is necessarily detained from the Senate, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PERCY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I will allow this notice to stand for the day.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. GORE] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. REED. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber by illness.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I announced my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Newlands	Swanson
Chilton	Kern	Overman	Taylor
Clapp	La Follette	Owen	Watson
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Pomerene	Williams

Crawford	Guggenheim	Penrose	Tillman

So the amendment of Mr. NEWLANDS to the substitute of Mr. BURTON was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on the adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in lieu of the original bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have the substitute read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the substitute.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the National Monetary Commission, authorized by sections 17, 18, and 19, of an act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, is hereby directed to make and file a report on or before the 8th day of January, 1912.

SEC. 2. That sections 17, 18, and 19 of an act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; the provisions of this section to take effect and be in force on and after the 5th day of May, 1912, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress.

SEC. 3. That the first paragraph under the subject "Legislative," on page 28 of an act (Public, No. 327, H. R. 28376, 60th Cong., 2d sess.), entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909, reading as follows: "That the members of the National Monetary Commission, who were appointed on the 30th day of May, 1908, under the provisions of section 17 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the national banking laws,' approved May 30, 1908, shall continue to constitute the National Monetary Commission until the final report of said commission shall be made to Congress; and said National Monetary Commission are authorized to pay to such of its members as are not at the time in the public service and receiving a salary from the Government, a salary equal to that to which said members would be entitled if they were Members of the Senate or House of Representatives. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed," be, and the same is, hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That no one receiving a salary or emoluments from the Government of the United States, in any capacity, shall receive any salary or emolument as a member or employee of said commission from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to amend the substitute by striking out the words "the 1st day of May" and inserting in lieu thereof "the 5th day of December," so that the existence of the commission will terminate on the 5th day of December, as originally provided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, strike out the words "1st day of May, 1912," and in lieu insert "5th day of December, 1911."

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have just observed that they are required to report on the 8th day of January, and I will ask that my amendment to the amendment be corrected so as to substitute the 8th day of January for the 1st day of May.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho has a right to modify his amendment to the amendment. The amendment to the amendment, as modified, will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words "1st day of May" where they appear and insert "8th day of January."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this question the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. GUGGENHEIM's name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. PERCY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], and therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to state on behalf of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] that he is unavoidably detained on account of sickness in his family. I will let this statement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Borah	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Pomerene
Bourne	Heyburn	Myers	Reed
Bristow	Johnson, Me.	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Johnston, Ala.	Newlands	Swanson

Clapp	La Follette	Overman	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Owen	Watson
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Poindexter	Williams

NAYS—30.

Bankhead	Cullom	Lodge	Smoot
Bradley	Cummins	Nixon	Stephenson
Brandegee	Dillingham	Oliver	Thornton
Briggs	Dixon	Page	Warren
Burnham	Foster	Penrose	Wetmore
Burton	Gamble	Perkins	Works
Chilton	Jones	Root
Crawford	Lippitt	Shively

NOT VOTING—27.

Bacon	du Pont	Lorimer	Simmons
Bailey	Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Gore	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Clark, Wyo.	Gronna	Paynter	Stone
Crane	Guggenheim	Percy	Sutherland
Curtis	Hitchcock	Rayner	Tillman
Davis	Kenyon	Richardson

So Mr. HEYBURN's amendment to Mr. BURTON's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute as it has been amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. Were he present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], and in his absence withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. STONE]. He is detained at his residence by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—56.

Bankhead	Cullom	Lodge	Root
Borah	Cummins	Martin, Va.	Shively
Bourne	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Bradley	Dixon	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Nixon	Smoot
Briggs	Foster	O'Gorman	Stephenson
Bristow	Gamble	Oliver	Swanson
Brown	Heyburn	Overman	Taylor
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Page	Thornton
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Townsend
Chilton	Jones	Perkins	Warren
Clapp	Kern	Poindexter	Watson
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Pomerene	Wetmore
Crawford	Lea	Reed	Works

NAYS—6.

Chamberlain	Myers	Owen	Williams
Culberson	Newlands

NOT VOTING—27.

Bacon	du Pont	Lippitt	Richardson
Bailey	Gallinger	Lorimer	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Gore	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Clark, Wyo.	Gronna	McLean	Stone
Crane	Guggenheim	Paynter	Sutherland
Curtis	Hitchcock	Percy	Tillman
Davis	Kenyon	Rayner

So Mr. BURTON's amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before January 8, 1912, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the national banking laws,' approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect January 8, 1912."

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will beg the Senator from Texas to suspend for a moment until the unfinished business can be laid before the Senate, which was necessarily postponed in the execution of the unanimous-consent order.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then recognize the Senator from Texas. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 12812.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I came into the Chamber from the cloakroom as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was having read to the Senate the stenographer's notes of the proceedings of the conference committee on the wool bill (H. R. 11019), and I heard the statement that by unanimous consent it was agreed that the papers connected with that bill should be left with the conferees of the House. I have no doubt that the stenographer thought he correctly recorded that transaction, but he did not. What happened was this: When we first assembled the conferees of the House notified the conferees of the Senate that they had the physical possession of the papers in the case. The conferees of the House made no effort to claim that they were entitled to that physical possession under the rules which govern the intercourse between the two Houses, but the conferees of the Senate did not then, and did not afterwards, make any objection, because we did not at that point or at any subsequent stage of the proceeding consider the matter of any practical importance.

I do not announce it for my associates on the committee, but my own opinion is that the conferees of neither House can do as they please with the papers relating to a matter before them. I think if the conferees of one House were improperly in possession of the papers the only way to proceed would be for the House having the wrongful possession of the papers to instruct its conferees to deliver them. I would not be apt to agree that a committee of either House could take papers relating to the transactions between them and do with those papers as they might choose.

I felt then, and I think now, that if it had been a matter of sufficient importance to have raised the question, the orderly procedure would have been for us to have returned to the Senate and reported to the body to whom we owed our appointment the mistake which had been made by the clerk of the Senate in transmitting the papers to the House, and then offered a resolution asking the House to return those papers to the Senate. I would not have felt that the conferees of the House had such control over those papers as that they might pass them out of their control without the sanction or the authority of the House.

When we found ourselves in that condition we made no demand for the papers, because we attached no importance to whether they were in the possession of the House or the Senate conferees, and what we did was tantamount to a unanimous consent, perhaps, but it was not unanimous consent because I would not have believed it was in our power to give such unanimous consent. The most that we could do, and all we did do, as I understood it and as I remember it, was to make no insistence upon the delivery of the papers to us.

Mr. President, I would not have thought it necessary to detain the Senate with a repetition of this matter, except that I saw it was made the subject of controversy in the other House, and have since read the proceedings had there. It is not proper for me to refer to them and not proper for me to refer to any statement made in the House with reference to them, but I thought it proper for me to rehearse, for incorporation in the RECORD, my understanding of the matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have not thought that the physical possession of the papers was material when by the rule the possession is fixed. I doubt if it is material which House or which set of conferees have the physical possession of them. In contemplation of law they are held to be in the possession of one or the other as the conditions exist. Now, it is material, because had the law been observed—and I use the term "law" because both Houses have made Jefferson's Manual the legislative law to govern it; it is not like a question resting upon the rules of the Senate; it rests upon a law that is common to both branches of Congress, which says—I think it is Rule XLVI, though I have no check on it—the papers shall be with the House or the conferees, designating them; and if the law says they are there they are there; the physical possession of them is not at all material. Had the law been observed the question would now have been before this body and not before another; and did this body debate the question of the report of the conferees it might result in the report never going to the other body, and it would then become very material. It might be very material now. If we were approaching the end of a short session and the question of the adoption of the report of the conferees were before this body, and never left it, then the conference report would never be acted upon by Congress and legislation would be defeated because of that fact.

We sit here, having jurisdiction of this question by express provision of legislative law. The physical possession of the papers is not material. In law we have possession of the papers just as much as though they were on the desk in this body. It is competent for the conferees representing this body to report at any time, regardless of the fact that the physical possession of the papers is not with them. I think that is sound as a proposition of law. So, instead of waiting for an unauthorized body to act upon them, we should be acting upon them ourselves.

I have had it in my mind since this situation presented itself to me before the adjournment on Saturday to object to this body receiving the conference report when it comes here, on the ground that it comes from a body not having jurisdiction to pass upon it, and that we should disregard their action, because the action should have been by this body. I still have it in mind to raise that question when the report comes to this body, unless it comes from our own conferees as the original report. Should they, after giving this matter attention, conclude that they are at full liberty to report to his body to-day, or at any time, not as coming from the other branch of Congress but as the rightful original action of the conferees of this body, then, of course, my objection would be without point.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho if he thinks the action by the other House first on this matter will have any effect upon the disposition that the President will make of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know about that, but that question does not enter into it. It is a question of the order of procedure in the legislative bodies according to their jurisdiction. It may be that, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, it would not make any difference in the ultimate result, and yet it may. It might be that the bill would never reach the President if it came here, as it should have come and must come, in my opinion, from our conferees. It may remain here and not go to the other body for consideration. The other body can not take this matter up for consideration unless it is received under parliamentary rules from this body. We can not take this matter up, received from an unauthorized body. That question I have it in mind to urge. The proper thing to be done by our conferees is to report without waiting for the unauthorized action of another body. If we act within the law, the other body may or may not have occasion to pass upon this matter. It may never reach them. The discussion of the report of the conferees in this body may outlast the session, and it may never go to the other body at all for their action. It is obvious that the question is a material one and not to be lightly passed over. I make this suggestion at this time in order that our conferees may see the light and report the result of the conference to the Senate, from which their orders were received, and let the Senate take the action that must precede any action by the other body.

ST. CROIX RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6747) to reenact an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River, and to extend the time for commencing and completing the said structure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTRA MONTH'S PAY TO EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 54, which I introduced on Saturday last. I desire to offer certain amendments to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 54) to reimburse the officers and employees of the Senate for mileage and expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress was read, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 1, line 3, I move to strike out the word "Senate" and to insert the word "Treasury," so that it will read "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 1, line 5, after the word "Senate," it is proposed to insert the words "and House of Representatives," so that it will read "Senate and House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the joint resolution may be now read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution as amended.

The Secretary read the joint resolution as amended, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of July, 1911, including the official reporters of the Senate and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Clerk, as reimbursement for mileage and expenses and for extra services during the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid to them by law, the same to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be immediately available.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have just come in. I should like to hear the first part of the joint resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to reimburse the officers and employees of the Senate and the House of Representatives for mileage and expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress."

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have offered as an amendment to the pending bill, ordinarily known as the cotton bill, an amendment——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the cotton bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that we ought to have a quorum present if the Senator from Iowa is going to address the Senate upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bailey	Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Bourne	Cummins	Myers	Simmons
Bradley	Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Dixon	Nixon	Smith, S. C.
Briggs	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brown	Heyburn	Oliver	Stephenson
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Taylor
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Warren
Chilton	Jones	Penrose	Watson
Clapp	Kern	Perkins	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Poindexter
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Reed
Crawford	Lippitt	Root

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me just a moment's interruption, I desire to have the Secretary read, and to have printed in the RECORD, a short editorial from the Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union of August 8, not as a part of his speech, but preceding it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall gladly yield to the Senator from Florida, but, of course, I do not want the editorial printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida suggests that it be printed in advance of the Senator's remarks so as not to be a part thereof.

Mr. CUMMINS. I could not hear the Senator from Florida, but I am very glad he made that suggestion.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the suggestion I made. It is pertinent to the question under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reading of the paper indicated? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Florida Times-Union, Aug. 8, 1911.]

PURPOSE AND PERVERSION OF THE TARIFF.

To state the plain truth about the tariff is to condemn Republican policies for a generation as both unjust and unwise. In its use of popular prejudice in one section to tax unfairly another it has levied a war tribute on the vanquished in a Civil War to which the indemnity imposed by Germany on France is a bagatelle, and yet its defenders are amazed to find the injured refusing to accept this conduct as worthy of commendation and to join in applauding a system of robbery under the forms of law without a parallel in history.

Against the whole theory and practice of our protective policy the Democratic Party has protested since its inception, but nothing like the condensation of this whole chapter of history as done by Democrats equals the following from the Springfield Republican:

"The protective-tariff system was adopted in the single purpose and has been maintained in no other legitimate purpose than to promote manufacturing in a country that was chiefly given to agriculture. This system in these later days has been allowed to run into excessive protection for manufactures; and to maintain itself in these abuses it has been averted into the vain purpose of trying to protect all industry, which can only be done at the expense of all industry, which is as hopeless as for a person to try a lifting of himself by his own boot straps.

Our Massachusetts contemporary is entirely correct in this statement of the purpose and perversion of this cardinal doctrine of Republicanism—a doctrine that has been proclaimed as the perfection of statesmanship or accepted as such by all the leaders of the party now so sorely stricken by the judgment of an aroused and awakened people. What can be expected of a party which has evolved and maintained such an ideal of statesmanship for so many years? What of the men who have been accepted as the "friends of the people and the champions of the oppressed," while practicing the doctrine that we might be lifted by our boot straps?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not know the author of that statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not yield for any debate upon the editorial article which has been read. I am in no wise responsible for it; it does not express my sentiments at all; and I desire to proceed with the argument of the issue before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not desire in any way to interfere with the plan the Senator from Iowa has in mind. I was simply going to call the attention of the Senator from Florida, who sent the article to the Secretary's desk to be read, to a letter from Mr. L. P. Groves, treasurer of the Flint Manufacturing Co., of Gastonia, N. C., to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], under date of August 8, 1911, in which he said that they would not have had a single cotton mill in the South, whereas the cotton mills there now employ thousands and thousands of men and represent millions of investment, had it not been for the protective tariff, which he begged the Senators from North Carolina to defend and maintain in the interest of the people of his State in the following language, which I quote from his letter to my distinguished friend from North Carolina:

Without trying to discuss the right or wrong of a protective tariff, what confronts the manufacturer of North Carolina to-day is that we have built a number of mills for making fine yarns and cloth, and these mills have paid a high rate of duty on their machinery, which mills would not have been built, nor could they have been operated at all, without a protective tariff on their product.

Now, since millions of dollars have been invested in these enterprises under a high protective tariff, will it not be a great wrong to at one stroke of the pen blot them out of existence by cutting the duty in half and allowing other countries who are old and experienced in the business and who hire their labor for half what we have to pay and with no duty on machinery to come in and take this business away from us?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Michigan pays strict regard to my desires in the matter.

COTTON-CROP STATISTICS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire to call up Senate resolution 135 that went over on Saturday under objection from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who has withdrawn the objection. If the matter provokes any debate, I will not press it, but I merely want the resolution read and passed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina for that purpose, if his resolution creates no debate. If it does, then I must proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the resolution will lead to debate. I simply make that statement so that the Senator from Iowa may know that it will take some time to dispose of the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under those circumstances, I am sure the Senator from South Carolina will not insist upon having the resolution considered at this time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is all right. I withdraw the request.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have proposed to the cotton bill, which is now before the Senate, revises and reduces all the duties of Schedule C of the tariff law, generally known as the metal schedule. I divide the schedule into two parts for the purpose of revision: First, those commodities which are generally known in commerce and in manufacture as tonnage iron and steel. Upon such commodities my amendment proposes to reduce the duties 40 per cent, save and except in the paragraph which provides for structural iron and steel, and that paragraph my amendment rewrites entirely and brings it into harmony with the general revision which I propose.

With respect to those paragraphs which embrace the higher forms of manufacture of iron and steel, and embrace other metals than iron and steel, my amendment proposes to reduce the existing duties 30 per cent.

I want to say now, so that Senators may understand the situation, that I will compress what I have to say upon this subject to the narrowest possible limit, and I will hope that a vote be taken, if no others desire to discuss the amendment, before the adjournment of the present session. I think it is only fair to suggest that, because at former times I have debated this schedule at such length that Senators might well presume that a conclusion would not be reached this afternoon.

One more foreword. This revision which I have proposed to the metal schedule is not ill advised; it is not unstudied; it is substantially the revision which I proposed to the metal schedule two years ago. These amendments created much debate and much consideration. So I think the Members of the Senate are fully informed and well advised with respect to the general characteristics of this schedule.

The amendment which I have proposed is the result of the most mature and reflective investigation on my part. I think that two years ago it embodied the opinions of a great many Members of the Senate, and since that time conditions have not changed to the disadvantage of a proposal for the reduction of duties on metal products.

However, before I take up the technical subject I desire to say a word or two with regard to the general topic of tariff revision at this time. It is complained—and I have seen the complaint printed everywhere—that we ought not to undertake at this session the revision of any of the prominent schedules of the tariff, but ought to wait until we hear the conclusions of the board of tariff experts in the employ of the President of the United States. I have been somewhat impressed with the unanimity of this demand on the part of the newspapers of the country. Newspapers that were vociferous in the demand that Congress should proceed immediately and without any debate whatsoever to the revision of the agricultural schedule and the revision of the paper schedule are now insisting that we shall not reduce the duties in any other schedule until we hear what the board of tariff experts has to say upon the matter.

I desire to meet that issue fairly and squarely. I desire to suggest the reasons which actuate me in insisting under the present conditions upon the reduction of other duties than those upon agricultural products. I am a profound believer in the revision of the tariff schedule by schedule as a wise policy. I am insistent, too, upon the intervention of a tariff commission in order to aid Congress in this difficult undertaking. But the answer to this insistence that we must wait is, first, that we have no Tariff Board, and it is not likely in the near future we will have a Tariff Board, in view of the political change that has been witnessed at the other end of the Capitol and that some pessimistic Republicans predict will be duplicated shortly at this end of the Capitol. We have no board clothed with adequate power. We have no board that is to be or can be the instrumentality of Congress to investigate these difficult topics and to acquire this very valuable and material information.

Now, I do not want Senators or the public to understand that in so saying I am disparaging the individuals who compose what is ordinarily known as the Board of Tariff Experts. So far as I know they are men of high character and of great attainments, but they are not the agents of Congress, they are simply persons employed by the President of the United States to work as he directs and when he directs. We have not entered upon the systematic plan which I hope eventually will be adopted, that will make a board of tariff commissioners the right hand of Congress to better enable it to deal with the subject of the tariff.

The second answer to the objection with regard to going on with the revision of certain schedules of the tariff is this: We have revised one of the prominent schedules of the tariff law. We have revised a schedule which relates to property in the United States of the value of more than $25,000,000,000. We have revised a schedule which embraces an annual product of more than $9,000,000,000. We have revised a schedule which is vital to the prosperity and the happiness of more than 30,000,000 of people in our country. Whether we have revised it wisely or unwisely I do not intend at this moment to discuss. My views upon that subject are known. It is sufficient to remember that it is done, and that, so far as Congress and the President can accomplish the purpose, the products of the farm, exceeding $9,000,000,000 annually in value, have been put upon the free list.

They were put upon the free list without any examination by a Tariff Board, even without any conclusion deduced by a board of experts. The President and the Secretary of State concluded an agreement with the Dominion of Canada before his own board had ever expressed an opinion or reached a single conclusion with respect to the cost of producing agricultural commodities in this country as compared with Canada. I only venture to remind Senators, therefore, that when they put these products upon the free list—whether they should have been put there or not it is not material now to inquire; we have accomplished it so far as our power is concerned—it made it absolutely impossible to await the slow and uncertain work of a board of experts employed by the President with respect to duties upon other commodities which the farmer in the commerce of the country must buy.

The action of those who insisted upon this revision of the agricultural schedule rendered it impossible to pursue the program that many of us believed ought to have been pursued; and, for my part, as much as I value the work of an independent commission, clothed with full and ample power, I will not wait for the creation of such a commission and then wait for the work of such a commission before I attempt at least to give the farmer a freer market in which to buy, inasmuch as we have put him in a free market in which to sell.

Let it not be thought that in so declaring I have any intention of standing for any reduction as a matter of reprisal, notwithstanding what we have done respecting the agricultural products of the country. I am not willing, because we may have done wrong in that respect, to repeat the wrong with regard to duties on manufactured products. But there are certain manufactured products covered by duties which everybody knows are too high. Those of us who ask for a reduction do not intend to reach the danger point, but we do intend to remove from our tariff laws some of the obvious, indefensible excesses which up to this session of Congress have found no defenders, as I recall.

There is another thing which I must be permitted to say, and it grieves me to say it, because it launches me somewhat into a political campaign. I feel, however, that the perversions and misrepresentations which go out from Washington day after day with regard to the situation here, the attitude of Senators upon these important subjects, require a brief notice at my hands.

Whatever may have been our hope a year ago respecting the method of dealing with tariff adjustments or readjustments in the near future, the Canadian arrangement has for the time being given the whole subject a new aspect. We must now determine—and I want Senators to gather the meaning of what I am about to say, and I especially want the country to understand what I am about to say—we must now determine, and determine at the first opportunity, whether the Canadian act represents a Republican policy.

We all understand that reciprocity in its true sense is a Republican policy. But the question which the Republicans of this country must certainly answer is this: Does the Canadian act embody the doctrine, or is it a flagrant, violent departure from the Republican faith? The manner of its passage through Congress does not establish its Republican character, for although it was proposed by a Republican President, it met the opposition of a majority of the Republicans in both the House and the Senate. In this clash of opinion there must be a referendum, and as the Republicans select their delegates to the next Republican national convention they must and they will answer the question: Is the Republican Party in favor of protection for the manufacturer and free trade for the farmer?

Canada has very wisely submitted the proposition to her voters before action. We, however, have acted first, and there is no power on earth that can prevent the policy of the arrangement which we have adopted being submitted to the Republican voters in the United States.

Is the Republican Party in favor of protection for the manufacturer and free trade for the farmer? Everybody knows my views generally with regard to the tariff. I do not believe in the high and prohibitive tariff for which some of my Republican associates in this Chamber stand. I believe in a tariff measured by the announcement of our party in 1908, but I recognize and every one else must recognize that protection must be a policy, and if it is applied to one commodity in the United States it must be applied to every other one which demands it under the conditions of its existence. In other words, if protection is to be applied to every competitive product that costs more to produce in the United States than it costs in foreign countries, then, if that commodity happens to be a product of the farm, it is just as much entitled to the benefit of protection as are the products of the manufactories, and the Republican Party can not escape a declaration upon the application of the policy.

Is the Republican Party in favor of protection for the manufacturer and free trade for the farmer, or is it in favor of protection for all alike according to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. This is the issue, and it can not be avoided, and no true, loyal, honest Republican will try to avoid it in the struggles of the next half year.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask whether or not he had anything to do with formulating the last declaration of the Republican Party upon the question of protection as embodied in the Chicago platform?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President. I was not a member of the committee on resolutions, and in that sense had nothing whatever to do with it. I would be immodest if I were to insist that, indirectly, I had anything to do with that platform, and therefore I would rather leave it without any further suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield for just a moment to the Senator from Michigan, as he wants to ask me another question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There seems to be considerable unwritten history in connection with that declaration. I did not ask the question for the purpose of embarrassing the Senator from Iowa, but for the purpose of finding, if possible, the source from which that declaration came and with which I am completely out of accord.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that. The Senator from Michigan and I, while we agree upon the doctrine of protection, do not understand it in the same way. I am for a protection that protects; he is for a protection that prohibits. That is the difference between his view of the economic policy and mine.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am for a protection that prohibits the destruction of American industries.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am in agreement upon many things with the Senator from Michigan, and I hope he will not obtrude the differences which do exist between us while I am making an argument in which in a general way I think he must concur.

I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I intended to ask the Senator from Iowa if I understood him correctly—that he is not in accord with the Republican platform as promulgated at the last national convention upon the subject of the tariff.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Michigan said he is not. I am very much in accord with it. I fought for such a declaration for nearly eight years before it was announced.

Mr. OVERMAN. The difference in the cost of production abroad and here and also a reasonable profit in addition to the manufacture.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes, sir. Many times in this Chamber during the discussion of two years ago I considered the wording which the Senator from North Carolina has just repeated. It is entirely consistent with my view of protection, and I shall do what little I can, as I go on in my declining years, to make it the doctrine not only of the Republican Party but of the whole people of the United States. My observation in the last few days in the Senate has convinced me that the Senator from North Carolina is rapidly coming to the Republican doctrine of protection.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. I deny it. The Senator from Iowa is in favor of a reasonable profit for the manufacturer. I want to know how he is going to arrive at that profit? When he gets the facts from a Tariff Board and finds the difference between the cost of manufacture here and abroad, what profit will he allow the manufacturer and how will he arrive at the profit?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment.

Mr. President, I have, as I said a moment ago, exploited my views upon that particular subject I think a half a dozen times in this Chamber, and while I should very much like to gratify the Senator from North Carolina by repeating them, I want to hasten on with the discussion of the amendment which I have proposed to this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the Senator in favor now of revising the tariff?

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as I am doing my very best to revise it, I am sure the Senator from North Carolina ought to be in no doubt about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator object to my having read from the desk an extract from a speech which he made in answer to Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON, ex-Speaker of the House, on this subject?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask him to read what the Senator said. Of course, the Senator has the right to change his opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not changed my opinion, however.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I do not think it is fair in the middle of the Senator's argument to have a newspaper article read. I think I will object to it at this time. Wait until the Senator has finished his argument.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] objects.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand perfectly that the Senator from North Carolina wants to embarrass me. I understand his purpose and his motive, and I have no objection whatever to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand he wants to save the cotton schedule, and he will do everything he can to save it, and if he can prolong the discussion and embarrass me——

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a part, a fair part, of the game of war.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator misinterprets what I intend. The Senator, as I understand his speeches made in public, made upon the floor of the Senate just at the close of the last session, was not in favor of revising the tariff until he should receive a report from the Tariff Board.

Mr. CUMMINS. That shows how unfair it is for the Senator to come in here suddenly and, without having heard my discussion up to this time, suggest a thing of that sort. I have spent 15 or 20 minutes in my argument showing why those who favored the revision of the tariff upon a report of a Tariff Board ought not now to wait until we create a tariff board and receive the conclusion of its labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows why I was absent. I am sorry I was not here to hear his remarks. I do not want to be unfair to the Senator, I assure him.

Mr. CUMMINS. I commend the Senator, however, to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to-morrow morning.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know what the Senator has said on different occasions, and I did not know whether he——

Mr. CUMMINS. I gave a very full account of what has happened since the declaration for revising the tariff by a Tariff Board was made, and the Senator from North Carolina has helped to destroy the possibility of so doing——

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, Mr. President, how, and in what manner?

Mr. CUMMINS. By voting for the bill which puts all of the agricultural products of the United States upon the free list without the intervention of any tariff board or tariff commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood from the message read by the Senator when governor to the legislature of his own State that he was in favor of reciprocity, and that he said that the farmers would not complain.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from North Carolina believe that is a fair comment? I have never suggested any such sham and pretense as is the bill passed by the Congress of the United States and labeled "reciprocity." There is no reciprocity in it. It does not comply with or comport with any conception that the people of this country of any party ever had of reciprocity. I am sure that the Senator from North Carolina will not hold that because many of us were in favor of reciprocity, certain reciprocity, therefore we ought to have supported this particular arrangement.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was only speaking of what the Senator said in reference to barley and wheat——

Mr. CUMMINS. Every word of which was true, and I have never said a word that is inconsistent with what I said in 1904. It was as true as Holy Writ, and it is the Senator from North Carolina who is now endeavoring to draw an unfair inference from an extract from a long address.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not offer it. The Senator from Mississippi offered it and read it into the RECORD.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I was very glad that the Senator from Mississippi did read it. But the Senator from North Carolina handed it to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. OVERMAN. And I spoke to the Senator from Iowa about it before I did hand it to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad the Senator did it.

Mr. OVERMAN. He was informed about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am glad that he did it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was that taking any unfair advantage, when I spoke to the Senator about it; told him I had it, and he came and read it? Was that taking an unfair advantage?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina is not listening to what I am saying. There was no unfair advantage in it. The unfairness is in the inference which the Senator from North Carolina now attempts to draw from it. He is perfectly at liberty——

Mr. OVERMAN. The language speaks for itself. I might draw my inference and some other Senator might draw a different inference.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have a perfect right to characterize it as an "unfair inference" as well.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. LIPPITT. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa, who seems to be laying a good deal of emphasis upon the passage of the reciprocity bill, if he would not still have advocated this reduction if that bill had not been under consideration?

Mr. CUMMINS. I would not at this time. I had hoped—and I speak with the utmost candor upon it--I had hoped and I stated many times that when we closed the revision of 1909 we might organize a Tariff Board and that it might proceed with its work as rapidly as possible, with full power of investigation and inquiry, and that then we might take up its reports as they came in from time to time and revise such schedules of the tariff as came within the scope of its investigation.

But contrary to that plan of the Republican Party and that policy of the Republican Party the revision of the agricultural schedule was precipitated upon Congress, and it was revised so as to put the farmers of this country into free competition with their only rivals, or their chief rivals. Then it seemed to me, and it seems to me yet, that it became the high duty of Congress to reduce within the limits of safety the duties upon some of the things that the farmer must buy without waiting the slow process of a Tariff Board yet to be created.

Returning, however, to my subject, I assume that the great fight of the coming year will be over the platform. Of course it does not concern my Democratic friends, because they will not be engaged in that fight. The chief fight in our coming convention will not be over the nomination of a candidate for President, it will be over the platform, which will declare in clear and specific terms what the Republican doctrine is respecting protection.

I am not gifted with an imagination either varied or brilliant, but I can see in my mind's eye that mighty assemblage representing all the Republicans of the United States considering a proposed platform declaring for free trade in agricultural products which come from the only great field of industry in which there is still full and effective competition, and for protection in manufactured products which come from a field choked and smothered with combination and monopoly. How long do you think such a proposition will endure in a forum where thought is free and where votes express conviction?

I can see also the learned Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the cultured and capable Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], all ardent advocates of the Canadian act, as members of the committee on resolutions from their respective States, laboring with their accustomed skill to write into the platform in words so plain that every voter will understand them the war cry of the ensuing campaign, "Free trade for the farmer; protection for the manufacturer. The farmer is strong and can stand alone; the manufacturer is weak, and his tottering steps need help. Free trade for Minnesota, Dakota, and Idaho, protection for Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania."

With all their facility of expression they can not make such a proposition either harmonize with Republican principles or agreeable to Republican voters. The convention, I predict, will not announce a doctrine so absurd and so unjust; but if it should do so, the party it represents will be hopelessly defeated in the following election.

I could not refrain from saying so much respecting the general aspects of a revision of the tariff. I now approach and will confine myself rigidly to the duties which I have proposed for the metal schedule.

With the exception of the structural iron and steel paragraph the duties upon the various items are fairly related to each other, and my proposal is to rewrite the paragraph I have named and reduce the duties upon some of the paragraphs—those relating to tonnage iron and steel, 40 per cent; and, upon the remainder, those which relate to the finer and more intricate forms of manufacture and to other metals, 30 per cent.

I will not occupy your time in going over all the items of this schedule. I want to remind Senators who are here, however, of the duties upon some of the particular items of the schedule so far as tonnage iron and steel are concerned.

The duty on pig iron is $2.50 a ton; upon bar iron it is $6 a ton; upon steel rods and iron rods, $12 per ton; upon structural iron not assembled, not fitted, not ready for use, from $6 to $8 a ton; and upon other forms, $15 to $18 per ton; upon boiler plate and other plate, $6 a ton and upward; upon hoop, band, and scroll iron, $6 and upward; upon steel rails, $3.50 a ton. You will understand that I am using here 2,000 pounds for a ton. That is true in the tariff act, although not true always in commerce.

The duty on iron and steel sheets is $10 a ton and upward; on steel ingots and the like, $3.50 and upward; wire fence rods, $6 and upward; drawn wire, $25 per ton and upward; cut nails,

$8 per ton; wrought nails, $30 per ton; wire nails, $8 and $15 per ton, depending upon their size; barbed wire, $15 per ton.

I have proposed to reduce these duties 40 per cent, and I intend to prove, not experimentally, not abstractly, but I intend to prove certainly and mathematically, that the reduction which I have proposed is well within the limits of the protective principle; and if I do not prove this, then I shall not ask any Senator here to vote for these amendments simply because they constitute reductions in the tariff.

Fortunately, with respect to this subject, I am in a position to prove what I say, to prove it by evidence that would be conclusive in any court of justice, to prove it by evidence that is admissible in the trial of a case, to prove it by evidence far superior to the conclusions of any Tariff Board or any other investigating tribunal.

I will assume as a basis—and you will all agree with me the moment you go over the subject at all that I am assuming a basis—strongly against myself and the conclusions that I desire to reach and will reach. I assume that the average duty on what is ordinarily known as tonnage iron and steel is $11 per ton. It is as nearly that as I can discover. I agree that it is not easy to reduce the subject to an average, but I am so far within the limit that I might fairly reach, that I propound with a great deal of confidence my basis that the average duty on tonnage iron and steel is about $11 per ton.

My amendment reduces that $4.40, leaving an average duty of $6.60 per ton. You can at once see how that will affect the various and principal items. It will reduce pig iron just $1 per ton. It will reduce bar iron $2.40 per ton.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator has it convenient, will he state the present rate and what the reduced rate would be?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am just giving it now.

Mr. BRISTOW. I thought the Senator stated the reduction and not the amount. I understood the Senator to state that it would reduce the duty on pig iron $1 a ton. From what figure and to what figure?

Mr. CUMMINS. From $2.50 to $1.50.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is what I desired to know.

Mr. CUMMINS. Bar iron would be reduced from $6 a ton to $3.60 per ton; rods, from $12 a ton to $7.20 per ton; beams, from $6 and $8 and $15, as is the case with assembled structural iron and steel, accordingly. I will ask leave to print, without reading, the table I have in my hand, which shows the duties upon these articles and the results of a reduction of 40 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Tonnage steel.

118.	Pig iron	per ton	$2.50
119.	Bar iron	do	6.00
120.	Rods	do	12.00

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like, with the permission of the Senator, to make an inquiry of him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. Gladly.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand that the Senator makes a reduction on all the various grades and articles of iron in equal proportion?

Mr. CUMMINS. On all tonnage iron—what is ordinarily known as tonnage iron and steel.

Mr. BACON. The object of my inquiry is this: The Senator will remember that in 1909, when we had the tariff bill under discussion, there was a very marked increase made in assembled structural iron, and the Senator will recall the debate which accompanied that action. He took part in it himself.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offered the amendment.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not offer the amendment which was accepted.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking about what was done.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, yes; I remember it well.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will remember the fact that the then Senator from Rhode Island gave as an illustration of the importance of the excessive raise in that particular class of iron, structural iron, that a certain building had been erected in New York where the iron had been cut the necessary lengths and assembled and the building erected entirely out of imported material. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BACON. The question I wanted to ask the Senator is on this line. The Senator will doubtless recall that the duty upon assembled structural iron, if I may so term it—that is, iron cut to certain lengths with a view to being used in a certain structure—was very largely increased over structural iron not thus cut and assembled, and the avowed purpose of it was to prevent iron of that kind from being brought into the country. In other words, a prohibitive duty was not only undisguisedly, but avowedly, put upon that class of iron.

I want to ask the Senator if, in view of that fact, he thinks that a ratable reduction upon that class of iron is sufficient, and if there should not be ratably a very much greater reduction in the tariff duty on that class of iron than in the tariff duty upon other structural iron not thus cut to lengths and assembled?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad the Senator from Georgia has suggested that, because it enables me to make an explanation that I think is due to the Senate.

The revision of 1909 not only did not reduce the duty upon such structural iron and steel as has been described by the Senator from Georgia, but it immensely increased the duty. It increased the duty so that it became from $15 to $18 and $20 per ton, depending upon the price or value of such iron and steel abroad. In other words, instead of leaving it with the duties prescribed in the Dingley law, that kind of structural iron and steel was taken out of the paragraph and put into the basket clause, upon which there was a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem.

Now, I have rewritten that paragraph of the iron and steel schedule. As I said in the beginning, I believe the paragraphs of the metal schedule are fairly well related to each other except the structural iron and steel paragraph, and I have repealed that by my amendment entirely, and rewritten it so that all structural iron and steel bears a duty of one-quarter of a cent per pound; that is, $5 per ton.

Mr. BACON. In other words, the Senator has eliminated the different rates of tariff duty upon the different classes of structural iron.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have, and then reduced the duty below that of 1909.

If it be further assumed, Mr. President—and I do not assert this with positiveness, it is a matter of argument and observation—if it be assumed that the price will be reduced by that amount, that is, by the reduction in duty, what will occur?

Now, I understand perfectly that it may be that foreign competition will even under those reductions not compel American manufacturers to reduce their prices to the point of this reduction, but I intend to carry on my argument upon the hypothesis that when these duties are reduced $4.40 per ton the result of the reduction will be that the manufacturers of iron and steel will be compelled to reduce their prices $4.40 per ton; and if I can defend these reductions upon that hypothesis it seems to me I have made a complete and perfect case.

If the prices of tonnage iron and steel should be reduced $4.40 per ton, it would save the consumers of the United States substantially $100,000,000 annually upon tonnage iron and steel. The manufacturers of tonnage iron and steel create and put upon the market each year something like 23,000,000 tons of this product; and if we were to decrease the average price $4.40, our consumers, our buyers, would receive a benefit of $100,000,000 per year. But they ought not to be compelled to sell at $4.40 per ton cheaper than they now sell unless they can pay the wages which are now prevalent in the United States and still make a fair profit upon the capital which they have invested in the business, and it is to that inquiry that I now turn the attention of the Senate.

The first question is whether the domestic manufacturers will still be well protected if they are compelled to reduce prices as suggested in order to prevent further importations; that is, to shut out foreign competitors. I am about to prove, if I am successful in my effort, that the American manufacturers can reduce their prices on an average $4.40 per ton and make large profits upon their capital, pay the American scale of wages to their employees, and prevent the importation of a single pound of these commodities.

This question can be answered with much certainty, for the reason that the greatest corporation in the world is engaged in this business and publishes every year what I shall assume is an accurate account of its operations. If there be any inaccuracies in its reports, they are not mistakes against its own interest. I intend to accept the report of the United States Steel Corporation for the year 1910 in order to answer my question whether that company can endure or suffer a reduction on the average of $4.40 upon the price of its products and still be prosperous, still pay capital a full reward, and still award to labor its full measure of compensation.

[1] And $8. [2] And upward. [3] And $15.

I have before me the report of the United States Steel Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1910. I intend to pause at this point long enough to explode a firm and prevailing notion that mere publicity is a cure for the evils of industrial combination. We have become so accustomed to great things in this country that nothing seems to challenge our attention.

Here is a report put out every year by this corporation and, I think, truly compiled, which shows in and of itself the wrongs of a combination of capital such as this is. This report is but a repetition of the report that has been put before the American people for now 10 years, so that every inquiring mind can know and does know precisely what the operations of this great company are and just what the results of its operations are. Yet we have not taken a single step toward the correction of the mistakes which we have made in former times with regard to such combinations. But I pass that. I could not refrain from impressing upon the Senate that it is not true that publicity is enough to remedy the evils which the American people believe reside in corporations of the magnitude of this one.

If any Senator is familiar with the subject and believes that I do not state precisely what this report shows, I hope he will rise now and correct me. In 1910 the United States Steel Corporation manufactured and sold 10,720,751 tons of manufactured products.

Now mark you, I am not including in that the transactions between the subsidiary companies. I am not including ore that is mined by one company and sold to another, coke that is manufactured by one company and sold to another, or pig iron which is made by one company and sold to another, all belonging to the same system or the same corporation. I am including in this statement just the finished product sold by all the companies subsidiary to the United States Steel Corporation and the United States Steel Corporation itself; and this is the way in which the corporation states it in its own report.

Now, follow me. If it had sold the 10,000,000 tons and more at an average of $4.40 per ton less than it did sell for, it would have received $47,202,104 less than it did receive.

We pass then to the next question. What would have been the fate of the United States Steel Corporation if in 1910 it had received $47,000,000, in round numbers, less than it did receive for the product which it manufactured and sold?

I enter that inquiry. I am now speaking of its net earnings. After having deducted all the cost of operation, all the cost of maintenance, and all the cost of sustaining its various benevolent organizations looking toward the pensioning of its employees, after deducting every penny which the company paid out, including the payment of interest upon the bonds of its subsidiary companies, its net earnings for the year 1910 were $141,054,754.51, as will be shown by the report itself on page 5.

Now, in order to secure its real net earnings I add the amount which was deducted for interest upon the part of its capital, for I want to arrive finally at an amount which will show its net earnings without having made any allowance whatsoever for profit upon capital. Computing the interest upon the subsidiary bonds at 5 per cent—and the rate of interest is not stated in this report, and therefore it is an estimate—it paid during the year for interest $7,201,818.33, making a total of net earnings, without any allowance for capital, of $148,256,572.84.

Two years ago when I was presenting the history of the United States Steel Corporation my distinguished friend from New Jersey insisted that I did not make a proper allowance for depreciation. I do not want to enter into an argument as to what is a proper allowance for depreciation. I am going to take this year the exact sum which the company itself says ought to be deducted for depreciation and extraordinary replacement. It says in its report that there must be deducted the sum of $22,140,555.53 for depreciation and for extraordinary replacement.

I do not find it necessary to differ from the corporation in that respect. I do not believe that any such sum should be allowed, because I know, and every other man who knows anything about the affairs of the corporation knows, and any man who examines this report will be advised, that a large part of the $22,000,000 for depreciation and replacements is allowed for the installation of new property, for such replacements as constitute really an addition to the capital of the corporation, and ought not to be deducted as current or annual expenses. But I allow the full amount claimed by the company of $22,000,000 and more. The result is that the net earnings which this company had at the close of the year, and for which it had no other use except to pay the reward which is just upon the capital invested, were $126,116,017.31.

I now deduct the $47,000,000 and more which I have suggested would be the lessened revenue of the company if it had sold its product at an average of $4.40 per ton less than the price for which it did sell its product. The result is that if this company had so sold its product last year it would, after paying all the expenses of operation, of maintenance, and every other expense incident to its existence, and after having put aside $22,000,000 for depreciation and for replacement, it would have had in its treasury $78,913,913.31. This, Senators, is 6 per cent on $1,315,231,888. In other words, if the fair capitalization of the United States Steel Corporation had been $1,315,231,888, it could have paid 6 per cent upon it, even though it had sold its product for $4.40 per ton on the average less than it did sell it for.

We now know, however, that it has no legal or moral right, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, to a reward upon $1,300,000,000; we now know that what I asserted two years ago, viz, that the value of the property, at the highest possible estimate, which passed into the United States Steel Corporation in 1901 was less than $700,000,000. It organized in 1901 with a capital—I mean of bonds and stocks—aggregating $1,400,000,000. The inquiry recently made—and the results are published in the report of the Bureau of Corporations—shows that the real value of the property was $700,000,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator include in that statement the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. property, which it acquired for $31,000,000?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the $700,000,000 does not include the compensation or price of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., because, as the Senator from North Carolina will remember, that company was not absorbed by the Steel Corporation for several years after its incorporation.

Mr. OVERMAN. What I mean is, does the Senator, in his estimate, estimate the $700,000,000 to include the property of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., which the Steel Corporation acquired?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; not at all. The $700,000,000 includes only the properties which were combined in 1901, and which became, either directly or indirectly, the property of the United States Steel Corporation. Its property has now increased.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should merely like to ask whether the statement includes in the earnings those derived from the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co.?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senators seem to me to be at cross purposes. I was speaking about the condition in 1901, when the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. was not included within the property of the United States Steel Corporation. When I speak of its earnings in 1910, gathered from the report to which I refer, those earnings do include the earnings of the entire property, of course, with the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. included as a part of them.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then, of course, in addition to the capital on which interest or dividends would be allowed, the Senator should also add the cost of the purchase of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co.?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I would not.

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will immediately answer why, if the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me.

Mr. OVERMAN. The United States Steel Corporation only paid $31,000,000 for the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., as I understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will answer both Senators if they will allow me. This company was organized, as I stated, in 1901. Its property was then worth $700,000,000—not more. It began immediately to earn enormous profits, and the profits which it has earned and received and which it has not paid out in interest on bonds and dividends on stocks amount to something like $500,000,000. The company has added very largely to its property since 1901. I am not saying that the property of the United States Steel Corporation is not now worth more than $700,000,000. On the contrary, I believe it is worth more than a billion dollars; but it has been paid for out of the excessive profits which the company has derived in these intervening years by selling its product at more than a fair price. It had a perfect legal right to do that if it was validly organized. I am not complaining of that, but I say that we, the people of the United States, the Congress of the United States, are under no obligation to protect interest or profits upon that capital, which has been accumulated by and through excessive profits demanded and received by the company from the American people. If this capital had come into the company independently, and if these operations had been carried on so that upon the independent capital there had only been a fair profit earned, the argument I am now making would not apply.

The United States Steel Corporation will pay for the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., and more than pay for it, out of the profits of a half year. It has built a great city near Chicago, where it has invested sixty or seventy—I think I am understating it—million dollars, and during the whole time it has not received from extrinsic sources during the 9 years or 10 years of its existence more than $53,000,000.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I am not in any way trying to criticize the Senator's figures; I am very much interested in them; but I am anxious that he shall state the problem completely. I have no doubt he is going to do it before he finishes, but in order to state the problem completely, it seems to me that he must show what dividends have been paid out, on what amount they have been paid out, and whether the amount is equivalent to a fair dividend payment on the whole $700,000,000 that he is discussing. If, instead of paying out the entire amount, they choose to keep in the form of reserve a certain amount of their earnings, and then pay those earnings out for additional property, it is, of course, not quite fair to take earnings on that money that has been so invested and apply it only to the $700,000,000 of the original valuation. I think the Senator sees that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that my understanding is that the United States Steel Corporation took advantage of the panic of 1907 and forced the sale of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., acquiring thereby over $200,000,000 worth of property for $31,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend in this discussion to go into the merits of the acquisition of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., because it would unduly prolong my discussion upon the other question. I can not, however, agree with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I hope he will not think I am unfair and I hope that he will catch my point of view. We are not trying to fix the profits which may be earned by the United States Steel Corporation or by any other corporation. I assume that the policy we have adopted up to this time will permit any individual or any corporation to earn all that he or it can upon the capital employed; but when we adopt a policy of protection, which is intended simply to equalize the conditions which exist here as compared with the conditions which exist abroad, then in so equalizing conditions it would be flagrantly wrong to levy a duty or a system of duties that would enable a manufacturer to earn more than a fair profit upon the actual value of the property which he employs in the business. When we are trying to ascertain the extent of the duties which we can in justice levy upon a particular business or a particular product, we ought not to take into account the capital that has been created by contributions for excessive profits. So far as the United States Steel Corporation is concerned, in determining what the duty ought to be, we must begin with 1901, and we find that that company has employed in its business property of the value of $700,000,000.

It has taken in no independent capital since that time, with the exception of about $50,000,000, and that has been vastly more than repaid by the sinking fund of the corporation. Therefore, when we find a duty on iron and steel that will enable this company to earn a fair and reasonable reward upon $700,000,000, we have found a duty that complies with and fulfills the standard of the Republican platform of 1908; and if the company is able to sell for vastly more than enough to pay a reasonable reward upon its capital, and, so selling, invests the proceeds in the enlargement of its properties, well and good; but it can not ask the Government to maintain duties that will enable this additional capital, wrested from a defenseless people, to pay dividends. It seems to me that such a policy ought not to be maintained by anybody.

I am not asking here that the Government shall say that the United States Steel Corporation shall not earn interest on more than $700,000,000. We may come to that some time in the administration of our affairs; we may come at some time to an inquiry into what ought to be done with these corporations, so large that competition no longer influences their affairs; but we have not yet reached it; and I am not attempting to reach it in the adjustment of tariff duties. I am only saying that, in levying tariff duties, I do not intend to stand for duties that will protect the United States Steel Corporation in a capitalization of more than $700,000,000. When we have done that, we have answered the full demands of the Republican platform, and we have exemplified the full policy of the Republican Party.

Mr. LIPPITT and Mr. OLIVER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. I first yield to the Senator from Rhode Island, and then I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not want to unduly interrupt the Senator. I understand that the product of the United States Steel Corporation is, by and large, perhaps 50 per cent of the total steel product of the country.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not quite 50 per cent.

Mr. LIPPITT. Something under 50 per cent; and that the remainder of the business is done by smaller corporations, some of them quite small. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that the United States Steel Corporation can make its part of the total product at a less cost than the smaller manufacturers; and if the result of forcing the United States Steel Corporation to lower prices would not be to put the smaller manufacturers, to a considerable extent, entirely out of business?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do believe that the United States Steel Corporation can make its product for slightly less cost than any other company engaged in that business. I do not believe, however, that the reduction of the duties which I have proposed would put any company engaged in that business out of it, or would interfere with fair and lawful profits upon the part of any other company engaged in the business, as I shall show the Senator from Rhode Island before I have finished.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield now to the Senator from Pennsylvania, if the Senator from Utah will permit.

Mr. OLIVER. The inquiry I was about to make was in the same line as that made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT].

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer that in a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that under the present tariff rate structural steel made in foreign countries has taken the entire market of the Pacific coast? Is it not also a fact that under the present rate of duty there are certain limited areas on the Atlantic coast using foreign steel; and if $4.40 is taken from the present rate, will not the foreign product preempt a greater scope of country and utterly prevent any domestic structural steel being used on the Pacific coast, so that the market for American structural steel will be confined to the interior points?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has combined a great many questions in a single sentence. He first assumes, which is not, of course, accurate, that the duty on structural iron and steel is reduced by my amendment $4.40 per ton. The present duty on structural iron and steel, not assembled, is $6 a ton upon certain classes and $8 upon certain other classes. Assembled structural iron and steel bears a duty of from $14 to $18 a ton, according to its value as imported. I believe that there will be some structural iron and steel imported into this country from abroad under the paragraph as I have rewritten it, not, however, upon the Atlantic seaboard, but those importations will be confined to a very narrow region on the Pacific seaboard.

It is utterly impossible, Mr. President, for us to prescribe a duty on iron and steel that under all circumstances will protect the Pacific coast if the Pacific coast desires to buy only the American product. The Senator knows that the mere matter of transportation from Pittsburgh or Johnstown or Birmingham to San Francisco renders the price of the domestic commodity there almost prohibitive; and there will at times be imported some of the heavier forms of iron and steel to the Pacific coast. I do not think that the Senator from Utah would venture to say to the people of this country that he wants a duty upon all iron and steel that will enable the American manufacturer to transport it for more than 3,000 miles by rail with all the attending expense of such transportation.

I suppose that during the last year there has been no assembled structural iron and steel sent even into San Francisco; in fact I have been informed there has not been. There has been some of the cruder forms of structural iron sent to San Francisco, but with the duty of $15 or $18 a ton upon it, you have prevented the people of that portion of the country from buying this commodity at a fair price, and you have, as I am advised, absolutely excluded it from the shores of the United States anywhere. I do not think that we can pay that price for the policy of protection; and I hope that the Senator from Utah will not stand for that application of the doctrine, but if he does stand for it it will be condemned by an intelligent people, for there are distances and there are conditions which can not be covered by the doctrine of protection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. If structural steel had to be shipped over the country by rail, and the rail rate was an exceedingly high one, then the argument of the Senator from Iowa would be all right and favorable to the proposition of a reduced duty; but remember that most of our iron manufacturers are located upon the Atlantic coast or a short distance inland, and structural steel can be shipped by water, as all foreign structural steel is shipped.

If the water rates are the same from New York or the Atlantic coast to San Francisco as they are from Germany to San Francisco—and they should be no more—then it seems to me that it is a question of competition and of the price at which rails can be made in a foreign country as compared with the price of rails made in this country. That is where the protective tariff comes in, and not to hold up railroad rates, as the Senator has intimated.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if Pittsburgh, Birmingham, and Chicago can reach San Francisco upon anything like the rate that prevails between Germany, Belgium, France, or England and San Francisco, then the rate that I have provided in the amendment proposed is abundant to protect our manufacturers; and I can prove that in a single minute. We have attached a duty of $3.50 a ton upon steel rails. Does the Senator from Utah remember how many tons of steel rails have been imported into the United States in the last year?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not had occasion to look the matter up, but I doubt very much whether there was a very large amount. However, the cost of making steel rails is an entirely different matter from structural iron, and we were discussing the question of structural iron.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply wanted to get the Senator's answer to the question that I suggested with regard to the extent of the importations. The fact is that the importations of steel rails into the United States since our duty was placed at $3.50 a ton have been negligible. Steel rails are sold at $28 per ton in this country. That, of course, is on board cars at the point of shipment, which is usually near the eastern seaboard of the United States. Nonassembled structural steel is worth, we will say, $35 to $45 a ton, as against $28 a ton for steel rails; so that, at the very most, it can not be said that it costs more than $7 a ton to manufacture that quality of structural iron and steel in excess of the cost of manufacturing steel rails. The present duty upon that kind of imports is from $6 to $8 per ton, and that not only will cover the increased difference between the cost of production, but it will almost cover the entire difference between the cost of producing a steel rail and a structural beam; but that duty is altogether too high, Mr. President, and by this proposed amendment I reduce it to $5 per ton, and we will have a duty of $5 per ton on structural steel as a whole and a duty of $2.50 per ton upon steel rails as a whole. I look upon that as about the proper relation between steel rails and structural iron and steel; and if $2.50 per ton is fair protection for steel rails, then $5 a ton is fair protection for structural iron and steel.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. While we are on the subject of the shipment of structural iron and steel to the Pacific coast, I ask the Senator from Iowa if he is aware of the fact that the entire Pacific coast market for pig iron is now held by China? The Chinese, under the present tariff, are shipping practically all of the pig iron used upon the Pacific coast in opposition to our manufacturers—not in competition with, but in opposition to them—and yet the Senator proposes still further to reduce the duty on pig iron.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that the Senator from Pennsylvania states the case with reasonable accuracy. I am in favor of free pig iron. I think it is a travesty upon political economy to suggest the transfer of pig iron from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific coast. I do not believe that one who examines the subject with any care at all will ever propose a duty that will protect pig iron; that is, to cover the difference between the cost of producing it here and abroad, and then add the cost of transporting it from New York to San Francisco.

We will be compelled to take in these remote quarters of the country such products as pig iron from those sources that can send them to the country with a reasonable expense of transportation.

A commodity so tremendously heavy, a commodity that so nearly approaches a raw material, can not economically be sent from one border of this country to the other. If we had transportation from the points of production to San Francisco that were fairly related to the cost of transportation from other sources or points of production to San Francisco, I would be very glad to cover by a duty the difference between the cost of producing them anywhere and the cost of producing them here, but I am not willing—and it might just as well be understood now if it is any satisfaction to the Senators in the Chamber—to use the doctrine of protection for the purpose of equalizing in such extreme cases the difference in the cost of transportation from one part of the country to the other.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to elucidate by way of a question at this time the remark of the Senator from Pennsylvania regarding the statement of the Senator from Iowa of being in favor, under the peculiar circumstances, of no duty on pig iron.

I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if that is high treason to the Republican doctrine of protection, what would he denominate the color of 21 other Republican Senators who within the past two weeks voted in this Chamber for free trade on everything the farmers of this country produce. Why is it high treason for the Senator from Iowa to be in favor of one item being put on the free list when 20 Republican Senators from the great manufacturing States of the East go on record by their votes for free trade not in one article but in everything that the American farmer produces. I should like the Senator from Iowa to yield while the Senator from Pennsylvania answers that question. I want to get my protection straight.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for an answer to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. Now, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me, I will answer the question of the Senator from Montana by saying that I leave it to others, for fear of giving additional offense, to characterize the votes of some of my associates upon the measure to which he refers, but will simply ask him to remember that I at least was consistent in my vote upon that measure, and I do not regret that vote.

Mr. DIXON. I do not want to interrupt the speech of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator from Montana for a moment.

Mr. DIXON. I continually resent the statements in the debates in the Senate and the headlines in the newspapers about Republican Senators being insurgents because they see fit to stand up for the principle of protection as applied to the farmers of this country when 20 or 19 Republican Senators by their votes annihilated the principle of protection to one-third of the people of this country who make their living on the farm. I did not quite appreciate the remark of my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania, in referring to the statement of the Senator from Iowa, while 20 other Republican Senators are praised in the papers as being regular Republicans.

I resent it, and I want to reiterate that until the Republican Party comes back to its old-time doctrine, protection for all or protection for none, we are never going to write another protective tariff bill in this Chamber that will stand the test of the approbation of the American people.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I reiterate——

Mr. OLIVER. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to call the Senator's attention to a statement he made some time ago and give him an opportunity to correct it, because I think it is very incorrect. He stated, as I understood, that the product of structural steel in this country amounted to something like 23,000,000 tons.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I made no such statement.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I understood the Senator to state.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I stated that the aggregate product of tonnage iron and steel is substantially 23,000,000 tons.

Mr. OLIVER. I understood the Senator applied that to structural iron and steel.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no; to the entire output of those——

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator was talking about structural steel at the time. I knew that to be largely in excess of the amount.

Mr. CUMMINS. The aggregate output of what is ordinarily known as tonnage iron and steel, and by that I mean such iron and steel as are manufactured and sold by enterprises like the United States Steel Corporation, is somewhere between 22,000,000 and 23,000,000 tons.

Mr. President, when interrupted a long time ago I was about to pursue my analysis of what the United States Steel Corporation did or could do with its net earnings.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Before the Senator leaves the subject of free pig iron on the Pacific coast, I wish to say a word. I thought I was correct in my recollection. I have refreshed my memory since the Senator made the statement that he is in favor of free pig iron.

Now, in view of the fact that more than one-third of the pig iron produced in the United States is produced in the Western States, even as far west as Colorado, and within the last two or three years furnaces starting in Oregon and Washington and other States, and with the official figures showing the existence of very large quantities of iron ore clear out into the islands of Puget Sound and through the mountains of the chain of States extending up and down, does it not seem to the Senator that those people should be given some consideration in determining the question of their competition with the pig iron of countries like China or Asiatic cheap-labor countries, in order that they may do just what the East did—develop their mines?

I think the Senator will find from the official figures that there is as much raw material on the Pacific coast from which pig iron is produced as there is on the Atlantic coast. The country is new, the population is not so great, and the time that has elapsed since the settlement of the country not being so great, those interests have not advanced as they have here. But these interests would not have advanced had they been thrown in competition with such cheap production as that which comes from China.

I know the Senator is consistent, or desires to be, in the distribution of the benefits of government and protective laws. Ought not that country to be encouraged and assisted rather than to be thrown into competition with China's production while we protect the eastern country, which is less in need of protection than the West? Bear in mind that the producing section of this country has been going west greatly and rapidly, so that in 10 years the western supply—that is, the pig iron accredited to the West—has multiplied four times in 10 years, and the actual production of it has multiplied that much in 10 years. So that it would be hardly fair to limit it by giving us free pig iron from China.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know whether I fully understood the Senator from Idaho, but as I understood him he said that one-third——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will give the figures.

Mr. CUMMINS (continuing). Of the pig iron of this country is produced in the Western States. Does the Senator mean by that to include Michigan in the Western States?

Mr. HEYBURN. I take the Government's classification. I am speaking from Government figures.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator knows well that the very, very large proportion of pig iron produced in this country comes from ores mined in Michigan and ores mined in Alabama and Minnesota and the East.

Mr. HEYBURN. In view of that statement, I think the Senator would like to have the figures. The production of Michigan pig iron last year was 1,250,103 tons. That State is not at all among the large producing States of pig iron. The iron in Michigan does not go into pig iron to so large an extent—that is, as an article of commerce—as that produced in some other States.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not go into pig iron for sale at all, because the United States Steel Corporation mines and uses practically all of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is the classification. Now, in regard to the different sections, I take the Government's figures. The New England and Middle States had 216 furnaces on December 31 last, and they produced 13,992,765 tons. The Western States produced 10,412,854 tons. You see there is only about 3,000,000 tons difference between them, the product of both being large. That is the product accredited to the West, and that extends as far west as Colorado and even to the Pacific coast. The figures show the progressive growth of the industry. There are the two sections of the country. The Southern States produced 2,892,926 tons. We must bear that in mind.

Now, the difference in the distance between the Michigan mines and the eastern market or the Atlantic coast and the Michigan mines and the Pacific coast is slight. The Michigan mines, those on Lake Superior, pretty nearly divide the distance. The pig iron and the products of it go west from the nearest point of large production. So we must bear that in mind.

I do not care to set myself up as a statistician, but we know something from observation of the existence of large ore bodies on the Pacific coast. It is safe to say that the ore bodies on some of the islands around Puget Sound are of as great extent as those in Pennsylvania. The only reason they have remained undeveloped is because of the fact that they were not in as good a position to compete, either through equipment or capital or development or persons who were free to engage in that business, as those in the East; but quite recently, within a few months, a very large combination of iron men—men who have been in the business in this country and are looking for new fields—have acquired a large quantity of iron land on the Pacific coast, with a view to its speedy development. So I think the Senator might reconsider the statement that he would be in favor of admitting pig iron from China free.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am first concerned with the accuracy of the statement which began this controversy. The Senator from Idaho will remember that it all grew out of a discussion as to whether duties should be levied upon pig iron that would cover the transportation of pig iron from the eastern point of production to the Pacific coast. I said in my opinion such duties ought not to be levied, and that inasmuch as we, in my further opinion, can produce and do produce pig iron in the eastern part of the United States as cheaply as pig iron can be produced in the world, therefore pig iron should be free.

Now, if we should reach a time when it was proposed to put a duty on pig iron in order that the iron mines or iron ores of the Pacific coast States or communities that were within fair transportation distance of the western country should be protected, the whole matter would have to be reconsidered, of course. I am speaking about conditions as they exist.

I now recur to the statement that I made. I have before me Table 121 of the Statistical Abstract of 1910, page 210. I presume it is the same table from which the Senator from Idaho was reading.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the table.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order to show that I was right, I want to read the States which produce pig iron:

Alabama, Colorado—

Colorado produced, in 1910, 428,612 tons.

Connecticut, Georgia, Indiana, Illinois—

Illinois, I think, probably was the third State in the Union in the production of pig iron, but of course, as is well known, she produces her pig iron mainly from ores brought from Lake Superior.

Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin.

Washington produced none at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, there is no statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. The only Western State, as I was speaking of Western States, which produced any pig iron in 1910 was Colorado, and that produced 428,612 tons.

Now, I am not saying that the time may not arrive in the future when the iron ores of the western part of this country may be utilized under proper protection. I only say, and I want the Senator from Idaho to clearly understand me, that we can not afford to transport pig iron from Chicago or from New York to San Francisco. Plainly we can not do it, because we had vastly better manufacture the pig iron into the forms that are ultimately to be used and transport those manufactured forms of iron or steel. It would be more economical to do it than to send the pig iron; and I am sure the Senator from Idaho will not dispute with me on that point.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think we will agree, because we have figures, but it does not follow because no production of pig iron is shown in such States as Missouri and Indiana and others that none is produced. They only have not included in this table the statement. We have foundries in my State; one in my city of very considerable magnitude. We have pig-iron furnaces at Port Hill. I could name, probably, a dozen without stopping to think, but they are not included in this statement. I only used this statement for that which it did contain, and not for that which it did not contain.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not pursue this particular subject further, but recur to the point I was endeavoring to make when diverted into this long and interesting colloquy with regard to pig iron.

I had just stated that the United States Steel Corporation, after reducing its average price last year $4.40 per ton, would have sufficient net earnings applicable to capital to pay 6 per cent interest on $1,315,231,888. I had ventured to say that my statement of two years ago—that the actual property of the United States Steel Corporation was not worth more than $700,000,000—had been corroborated since that time by the complete and illuminating inquiry made by the Bureau of Corporations with respect to the organization of this company.

I had endeavored to establish the proposition that so far as protection is concerned, if we established a duty which would enable this company to pay 7 per cent on $700,000,000, we had fully complied with the doctrine of protection and with the pledge of the Republican Party. If we do allow 7 per cent on $700,000,000, the result is $49,000,000 required by that company to make a fair and reasonable return upon the capital invested.

Now, let us see. If we deduct the $49,000,000 from the net earnings of this company there would still remain $29,913,000.31. After compensating capital, after laying aside $22,000,000 and more for replacements and depreciation, after paying all the expense of maintenance and operation, this company would have in its treasury, even though it had sold its product for $4.40 per ton less than the price at which it did sell it, $29,913,000.

This represents the amount of undivided and excessive profit even upon the lowered plane of prices which I have suggested. This means further, that allowing for all the extravagant deductions for depreciation and replacement and exorbitant profits, for a large part of this capitalization would be represented by bonds bearing not more than 5 per cent per annum, the company could have sold every ton of its product at an average reduction in price of $7 a ton and still have rewarded capital in the way I have suggested.

Now I come to the point that was remarked upon by the Senator from Rhode Island, and a very proper point it is, because we can not afford to adjust our tariff duties solely upon the basis of the cost of that company or enterprise which can produce at the lowest or minimum expense, but we must adjust our tariff duties upon a fair average of the cost of production.

I heard debated here two years ago, as all did, this very point; and while I have no precise information with regard to the cost of other companies as I have in regard to the cost of the United States Steel Corporation, I never heard it suggested by anyone debating the matter that upon the average the United States Steel Corporation could produce for more than $2 a ton less than the cost of other companies. If there is anyone here who has better knowledge upon that subject than we have had heretofore, I shall be glad in the course of this debate to hear the result of his observation or his experience upon the subject. I assert that upon the average it does not cost any large company engaged in this business in the United States to exceed $2 a ton in excess of the cost of the United States Steel Corporation; and if that be true, and I think it can not be fairly questioned, and if I have proved, as I have beyond any controversy whatever, that the United States Steel Corporation can sell its product at $7 per ton less than it sold it for last year, the fear that it will destroy any legitimate industry in the hands of the smaller companies becomes purely imaginary, because in my judgment the duties which I still propose upon these products will more than measure the difference between the cost of production of any of them and the cost of production of like articles abroad.

These reductions will not confine the United States Steel Corporation to fair profits, even though its prices be reduced the full amount of the reduction I have proposed. It will, however, in my opinion confine other companies—the companies which manufacture about 54 per cent of such products in the United States—to fair prices if they would exclude competition from abroad.

Mr. President, I have finished my review of this subject. If there is anything that I have omitted I shall be very glad to respond to anyone who desires to make an inquiry.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I want to ask a single question to get a little more elucidation of the point the Senator from Iowa and myself were discussing when some others broke in upon the discussion. I asked him if the profits of the United States Steel Co. would not be larger than the profits of the other half of the industry. As I understood him, his opinion agreed with mine that those profits would be larger, but he thought, as I understood him, that the difference in the profits was very slight.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I did not say slight; I said not more than $2 a ton. I do not think that a slight difference.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then I understand the Senator thinks the difference in the profits is considerable. It seemed to me, if that was the case, the effect of reducing the duty would inevitably be to throw more and more of the industry out of the hands of the small producer and into the hands of the large unit of production represented by the United States Steel Co., and that it was scarcely fair to the industry to take solely the profits of one producer, which, on account of its composition, had certain advantages in which none of the others shared, and figure upon those profits as a proper basis for the whole iron industry. It seemed to me that the inevitable tendency here is to increase the consolidation of the business into a single hand, which many people are very much objecting to.

The Senator also a minute ago said that he did not know of any large producer of iron that had not been able to make a good profit, as I understood him.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I said nothing about that.

Mr. LIPPITT. That had not been able to compete successfully, we will say.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there are some producers that are not doing very well.

Mr. LIPPITT. As I understood the Senator, he challenged anyone to bring forward the case of a large producer of iron fabrics that had not done well under existing circumstances. If that is the case, I should like to call his attention to the Lackawanna Steel Co., which has a capital of more than $34,000,000, every dollar of which was paid in in cash. It was founded, I understand, some 10 years ago, and not a single dollar of dividends, I believe, has since been paid on the original investment. It seems to me that that would be pretty strong evidence that in some cases at least the competition had been pretty severe. But that was not particularly the point I had in mind; it was rather the question as to the effect of this reduction upon the small producer.

Mr. CUMMINS. In regard to the last suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, I do not know about the affairs of the Lackawanna Steel Co. There are in every business companies that will not and can not succeed. The tariff alone will not enable any person to highly succeed in business. There must be in addition certain natural advantages and a certain skill and sagacity in management and operation. The Senator from Rhode Island knows, because it has often fallen under his observation, that a certain business given into one hand will fail, no matter how favorably it may be situated, and given into another, surrounded by the same conditions, it will succeed. It is not intended by our tariff policy to eliminate the personal equation, if I may use the words of a distinguished Senator. It is not intended to guarantee against mismanagement or incapacity. I would be sorry to see our Republican doctrine converted into a guaranty for ignorance and unintelligence.

I do not know, however, that this is true of the Lackawanna Steel Co. I am simply saying that I do not agree that its failure, if it has been a failure, can be used as an argument against the proposition I have advanced.

Now, answering the first suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, if I had said or if I had proved that the United States Steel Corporation could not suffer a reduction of more than $4.40 per ton upon the average of its product, then the conclusion stated by the Senator from Rhode Island would follow, in view of my admission that I believe at least the cost of production is greater with some of the lesser companies than with the United States Steel Corporation.

I have proved that the United States Steel Corporation could reduce its prices $7 a ton and still pay 7 per cent interest upon the whole capital originally invested in the business and all the independent capital that ever was invested in the business. When the Senator from Rhode Island says, and says truly, that there are other companies whose products cost more, I say that there is no established company, no company of considerable proportions, whose product costs $2.60 in excess of the product of the United States Steel Corporation, and no one whom I have ever heard has so claimed. Therefore, when I have shown that we could reduce these duties so far as the United States Steel Corporation is concerned to $7 a ton, I have proved that there is ample protection in it for any of the companies which now manufacture steel.

I intended, Mr. President, to take up somewhat in detail other items in the metal schedule, but I have consumed now much more time than I intended to consume. These interruptions have been very helpful; I do not complain of them; but I do not feel that I desire at this time to go into the remaining items of the metal schedule. I think everybody will agree that if I have fixed upon a proper reduction for tonnage iron and steel my proposal with respect to other manufacturers of iron and steel can not be successfully assailed; and therefore thanking the Senate and the Senators for listening to me so patiently, so far as I am concerned I submit the amendment I have proposed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

During the delivery of Mr. CUMMINS's speech a message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon, and announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. CANNON, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BATES, Mr. LLOYD, Mr. MCKINLEY, Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina, Mr. RODENBERG, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. CRAVENS, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey, Mr. WOOD of New Jersey, Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey, Mr. HAMILL, Mr. MCCOY, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. SCULLY, and Mr. TUTTLE.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

After the conclusion of Mr. CUMMINS's speech,

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I had intended to present the conference report upon the wool bill, so called, but as many Senators have already left the Chamber, and as it is understood that it will provoke some debate, I will not present it until to-morrow morning. I will therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin withhold his motion, that I may call up resolutions from the House of Representatives?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withdraw the motion at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions from the House of Representatives relative to the death of my late colleague in that body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions as follows:

In the House August 12, 1911.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That a committee of 20 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the Senate and also transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, as a resident and fellow citizen of New Jersey, I would like to say a word.

The grim reaper has again done its work, this time in the other House of Congress. Had HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER lived his term out he would have served the Government of the United States consecutively 20 years.

All who knew him, everybody who had touch with or an inclination for politics in the Commonwealth of New Jersey, knew kindly and well the loving, genial, and hospitable HARRY LOUDENSLAGER. The State of New Jersey in his death has lost a splendid son, society a delightful and loving companion, these United States a grand patriot and a broad statesman. New Jersey stops to weep at his bier and pay the last tribute it can in wishing for his family God's speed and God's blessing to him.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions, and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey submits resolutions, which will be read by the Secretary.

The resolutions (S. Res. 137) were read and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER at Paulsboro, N. J.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution Mr. BRIGGS, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. NIXON, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. HITCHCOCK.

Mr. BRIGGS. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Jersey.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 15, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 14, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we need Thy guiding and restraining influence in all the intricacies of this strenuous and complicated existence, hence we pray for self-control, self-respect, self-reliance under Thee, that we may be strong, and pure, and noble in all our intercourse with our fellow men; that Thy purposes may be fulfilled in us, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2246. An act to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald, who enlisted and served under the assumed name of Joshua Porter in Company K, Seventh Regiment, and Company C, First Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, from March 9, 1865, to March 10, 1866, and to issue to him an honorable discharge in his true name of John P. Fitzgerald;

S. 2534. An act to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes;

S. 3115. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the funds of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, and for other purposes; and

S. 304. An act for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller at Peterboro, N. H.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 31) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Astoria Centennial, to be held at Astoria, Oreg., August 10 to September 9, 1911.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2246. An act to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald, who enlisted and served under the assumed name of Joshua Porter in Company C, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, from March 9, 1865, to March 10, 1866, and to issue to him an honorable discharge in his true name of John P. Fitzgerald; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2534. An act to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

S. 3115. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the funds of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 304. An act for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller at Peterboro, N. H.; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2925. An act to extend the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Brownsville, Tex.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on August 12 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 6098. An act to authorize the Campbell Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Francis River from a point in Dunklin County, Mo., to a point in Clay County, Ark.;

H. R. 11021. An act to authorize the Levitte Land & Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in Drew County, Ark.; and

H. R. 11477. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Matewan Station, in Mingo County, W. Va.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CANDLER, indefinitely, on account of the dangerous illness of his father.

LETTERS, DOCUMENTS, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALASKA COAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report on House resolution 217.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama presents a privileged report. The Clerk will read the resolution and the report.

The Clerk read House resolution 217, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the House of Representatives the following:

A copy of all letters, documents, affidavits, testimony, or evidence, and of all reports of special agents, employees, assistants, or district attorneys, and all other information of whatsoever kind or from whence derived, in possession or under the control of the Department of Justice, relating to the matters and things alleged and contained in that certain affidavit signed by H. J. Douglas and sworn to on the 23d day of May, 1910, before Ben Vail, notary public in and for the District of Columbia, a copy of which was forwarded to the Attorney General on May 24, 1910, by the Delegate from Alaska, the receipt of which was acknowledged by the Attorney General, by his letter of May 31, 1910, addressed to the Delegate from Alaska.

With the following amendment:

In line 2, after the word "directed," insert "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report. (H. Rept. 145.)

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. CLAYTON), as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House resolution 217, make the following report thereon:

The resolution calls for certain information and is limited to such purpose. Its language is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the House of Representatives the following:

"A copy of all letters, documents, affidavits, testimony, or evidence, and of all reports of special agents, employees, assistants, or district attorneys, and all other information of whatsoever kind or from whence derived, in possession or under the control of the Department of Justice, relating to matters and things alleged and contained in that certain affidavit signed by H. J. Douglas and sworn to on the 23d day of May, 1910, before Ben Vail, notary public in and for the District of Columbia, a copy of which was forwarded to the Attorney General on May 24, 1910, by the Delegate from Alaska, the receipt of which was acknowledged by the Attorney General by his letter of May 31, 1910, addressed to the Delegate from Alaska."

The information called for by the resolution is "a copy of all letters, documents, affidavits," etc., "in possession or under the control of the Department of Justice, relating to the matters and things alleged and contained in that certain affidavit signed by H. J. Douglas," etc. Inasmuch as the particular letters, documents, affidavits, etc., which are desired are not described except by mere reference to the Douglas affidavit, it was necessary for the committee to be informed of the contents of such affidavit. Therefore, for the purpose of being informed as to the contents of such affidavit a hearing was given to Mr. WICKERSHAM, the Delegate from Alaska, the author of the resolution. Accordingly, at the committee hearing on July 13, 1911, the Delegate furnished a copy of the Douglas affidavit to the committee, a copy of which affidavit is appended to this report. After having furnished this information to the committee, the Delegate in his statement went beyond the scope of the resolution itself and made certain references to the Attorney General. The Attorney General was not present at such hearing, but afterwards took exception to these references made by the Delegate.

On July 17, 1911, the Attorney General, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee, signified his desire to appear before the committee. On July 24, 1911, the Attorney General did appear before the committee and made a statement in regard to the matters covered by the resolution and the other matters referred to by the Delegate in his statement. At this hearing the Attorney General said:

"I have no objection to the resolution, and had that been the only matter before this committee I should not have asked to appear here, because resolutions calling upon the Attorney General for information relating to various matters under consideration by the Department of Justice are commonly passed and are dealt with in a routine manner. But in the hearing before the committee on the 13th day of July the Alaskan Delegate undertook to accuse me, to use his own language, of purposely shielding and defending 'Alaska syndicate criminals from punishment for crimes against the Government in this specific instance and also in other instances wherein I personally gave him the evidence which would justify him in finding indictments.' Therefore, the question really before your committee is, I take it, as to my personal part in dealing with information laid before the Department of Justice referred to by the Delegate in his statement before the committee at the last hearing."

When he appeared before the committee, the Attorney General furnished a copy of the letters, documents, affidavits, etc., called for by the resolution and described in the Douglas affidavit. At the same time the Attorney General likewise produced and laid before the committee copies of various other papers and documents, some confidential and some not confidential in character, and not called for by the resolution, but pertaining to certain matters discussed by the Delegate before the committee. In doing this the Attorney General expressed his purpose to present, and the fact that he had presented to the committee, all the papers which had come into his possession touching any of the matters criticized or complained of by the Delegate. In so far as these documents relate to the resolution, the committee deemed it proper that the same should be laid before the House by the Attorney General in conformity with the resolution as hereinafter reported and in the customary manner, but the remaining documents were by your committee returned to the Attorney General for the twofold reason that the same were not germane to the resolution and were, in the opinion of your committee, of such character that, pending investigations by the Department of Justice and the administration of justice would probably be impeded by their publication.

Your committee considers itself without power to pass upon matters presented by the Delegate on the one hand and the Attorney General on the other which were beyond the scope of the pending resolution, but permitted the introduction of the same only by courtesy and because of the request of both of the gentlemen concerned. The duty of the committee, so far as this resolution is concerned, does not authorize the committee to go beyond the mere ascertainment of the meaning and purpose of the resolution and the propriety of reporting back the resolution itself. The practice of the House seems to be, and certainly it has been the practice of the present House, to require investigations of executive departments to be made by the several standing committees having jurisdiction of the expenditures in the several executive departments or by select committees appointed by the House for specific purposes. Whatever inquisitorial power the committee has in this matter, such power is limited to the scope of this resolution, which simply calls for information in the shape of a copy of letters, etc. Of course, a resolution could have been offered which might have imposed a more comprehensive duty upon your committee. But under the authority necessarily involved in the consideration of the resolution and under the law and the practice and rules of the House, this committee is without power to investigate conditions in Alaska or to subpœna and swear witnesses, or other like power usually conferred upon investigating committees.

Your committee recommend that the resolution be amended by inserting after the word "directed" in line 2, page 1, of the resolution the following words, "if not incompatible with the public interests." And your committee therefore report back the resolution with the amendment and recommend that the resolution as amended be adopted.

APPENDIX.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, ss:

H. J. Douglas, being first duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says:

That during the spring and summer of 1908 this affiant was the auditor of the Northwestern Commercial Co., the Northwestern Fisheries Co., the Northwestern Lighterage Co., the Northwestern Steamship Co., and to December 31, 1909, general auditor of the Copper River Railway, the Copper River & Northwestern Railway, and the Katalla Co.; in fact, all of the Alaska Syndicate companies at Seattle, Wash.; that as such auditor and accountant this affiant had intimate knowledge of the accounts of the said various corporations as kept in their said account books at Seattle, Wash.

That it has been the custom for the War Department to advertise for bids for supplying coal to the Alaska military posts; and that in the spring of 1908 the United States Government did advertise for bids for coal for Fort Davis and Fort Liscum, in the Territory of Alaska; that at that time one D. H. Jarvis was treasurer of the aforesaid companies, and, as such, and as the confidential manager of the said companies, became interested in securing the contract for furnishing the coal for the said two military posts; that the John J. Sesnon Co., of Nome, was also a competitor; that at that time one John H. Bullock was the manager of the said John J. Sesnon Co., and was in the city of Seattle; that he and the said Jarvis had many conferences in respect to the said bids and agreed one with the other, each for his corporations interested, to put in bids which would insure the award of the said bid to one or the other of these competitors, there being no other competitors, at a price which would insure a very large profit to them.

They agreed upon certain lighterage tariffs which were prepared between them, and agreed upon a division of the profits of the said bids, and, thereupon, each put in a bid for the said contract. Each of the said parties, the said Jarvis and the said Bullock, made, signed, swore to, and delivered to the United States an affidavit, which, substantially, to the best information of the affiant, stated that no one but the company which the affiant represented had any interest in the contract for which affiant presented a bid for his company; that the said affidavit made by the said Jarvis in that respect was false, and known by him to be false, because previous to the making thereof he had agreed with the said Bullock to a division of the profits between them. This affiant is informed and believes that said affidavits and bids were forwarded to the quartermaster at Fort Vancouver, Wash., by the said Jarvis and Bullock, who went personally to that post at the opening of the bids. Affiant is informed and believes, and refers to the bids for exactness, that the contract was awarded to the John J. Sesnon Co. for about $28 per ton for about 4,000 tons; that the said Jarvis affidavit was made by him in that matter before one Harris—in Seattle—a notary public, about April, 1908.

That immediately thereafter, during the summer of 1908, the said Sesnon Co. delivered the said coal to the said United States military posts, and the Government paid for the same, as shown by the bids and the accounts of the Government. That thereafter, and about February or March, 1909, and in settlement of the agreement between Jarvis and Bullock, the said Sesnon Co. paid to the said Northwestern Commercial Co., at Seattle, the sum of $6,700, or thereabouts, as the share which was agreed to be paid by the said Sesnon Co. to the corporations represented by the said Jarvis, and the said sum of $6,700, or thereabouts, was carried into the accounts of the Northwestern Commercial Co. and credited to the Nome station.

Affiant is now informed that said transaction was illegal, and that the said statement in the affidavit of Jarvis was in violation of law. That affiant says, of his own knowledge, that the credit of the $6,700 and odd was carried into the book accounts of the said Northwestern Commercial Co., but affiant has no knowledge where the bids and affidavit of the said Jarvis are now.

H. J. DOUGLAS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 23d day of May, 1910.
[SEAL.] BENJ. VAIL,
Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

THE WOOL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I wish to make a point of order on the report. If the waiting of the reading of the report would not affect the right to make the point of order, then I have no objection to waiving the reading of the report and reading the statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman desires to make a point of order on the report, I think the report ought to be read, so that the House may understand the point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will make the point of order at the proper time, when the report has been made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if there is a point of order to be made, I suggest that the report ought to be read to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report.

(For report, see proceedings of Saturday, August 12, 1911.)

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as the report has been read, I have no desire to have the statement read. It is not necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the conferees exceeded their authority and jurisdiction in coming to the agreement which they did. Under the bill as it passed the House, the Underwood bill, it is provided that on Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and on all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem; also, that on velvet and tapestry-velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 35 per cent ad valorem. Under the bill as it passed the Senate it is provided that on Brussels carpet, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 35 per cent ad valorem. The language of the description in the Underwood bill and in the La Follette amendment is precisely the same. In the Underwood bill the rate is fixed at 30 per cent ad valorem and in the La Follette amendment at 35 per cent ad valorem. The conferees bring in a report fixing the rate at 40 per cent ad valorem.

Not only that. I read the paragraph in the Underwood bill on velvet and tapestry-velvet carpets fixing the rate at 35 per cent ad valorem. In the La Follette amendment, in the same language, velvet and tapestry-velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the rate is fixed at 35 per cent ad valorem. On the description of velvet and tapestry-velvet carpets, which is precisely the same in the Underwood bill and the La Follette amendment, each House fixed the rate at 35 per cent ad valorem; but the conferees fix the rate at 40 per cent ad valorem.

On Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets the House fixed the rate at 35 per cent ad valorem, and in the same language the Senate fixed the rate at 35 per cent ad valorem, both bodies fixing the same rate in the same language. The conferees, however, fixed the rate at 50 per cent ad valorem, a rate 15 points greater than that at which the House fixed it and 15 points greater than that at which the Senate fixed it.

On Axminster and other carpets carried in paragraph 10 of the Underwood bill the rate was fixed by the House at 40 per cent ad valorem, but in the same language of description the Senate fixed the rate at 35 per cent ad valorem. The conferees, having before them a dispute or disagreement whether the rate should be 40 per cent, as fixed by the House, or 35 per cent, as fixed by the Senate, split the difference by making the rate 50 per cent, 10 per cent more than fixed by the House and 15 per cent more than the rate fixed by the Senate. On manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and so forth, the House fixed the rate of 40 per cent ad valorem, and the Senate fixed the rate of 30 per cent ad valorem, and in this conference over the disagreement between the 40 per cent and the 30 per cent the conferees arrived at an agreement and fixed the rate of 49 per cent, 9 points higher than that fixed by the House and 19 points higher than that fixed by the Senate. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Senate amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts a substitute bill, but in all parliamentary precedents it has been held that where the House and the Senate both provided in the same language for the same thing, so that on that particular point there was no dispute between the two bodies, the conferees had no right to change it, and where the only dispute or disagreement was the question of figures as to the amount, the House having set one amount and the Senate having set another amount, the only jurisdiction of the conferees was between the two amounts fixed by the two Houses. Under the theory of this conference report, if the House passes a bill making an appropriation for $100,000 and the Senate increases that amount to $150,000, having precisely the same language, the conferees, having to agree upon the disputes between the two bodies, may change it by fixing the sum at $1,000,000. We have a right, where a matter goes to conference, to know that the conferees will only act on the question in dispute between the two bodies. I have called attention to the items as to carpets. I now wish to call attention to the change made by the conferees, without authority, as to wools. The House fixed the rate on all wools at 20 per cent ad valorem. The Senate fixed the rate on class 1 wools at 35 per cent ad valorem, and excepted from class 1 wools, what is now class 3, and hair, in this language:

Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and all such wools of like character as have been heretofore imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for; the hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

Upon these wools and hairs the rate was fixed by the Senate at 10 per cent ad valorem. The controversy between the House and the Senate was whether all wool rates should be fixed at 20 per cent ad valorem or whether certain wools should be fixed at 35 per cent, as provided by the Senate, and other wools 10 per cent, as provided by the Senate. It was within the province of the conferees to fix any rate which they were pleased to agree upon as to class 1 wools between 20 per cent and 35 per cent, but I deny that it was within the power of the conferees, having a dispute between this body fixing all wools at 20 per cent and the Senate fixing certain wools at 10 per cent, to make any figures outside of some figure between 10 per cent and 20 per cent, and yet the conferees have fixed the rate on these classes of wools and hairs at 29 per cent. I have taken the trouble, Mr. Speaker, to figure out what the effect would be——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question for information.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Of course, this thing has been brought up suddenly, but the Chair would like to inquire, after the hasty examination of these bills from time to time, and after inquiry, if it is not true that all the difference as to this raw-wool proposition that the gentleman is now talking about is not a matter of classification on this one item of raw wool and then a change of rate not exceeding the higher rate suggested by either House?

Mr. MANN. Now, let me explain, Mr. Speaker. Let us see what the application of the rates in the three cases would have produced if applied to the wool receipts for the fiscal year 1910, the figures of which have been frequently quoted on the floor of this House.

The Underwood bill puts the duty on wool at 20 per cent. The La Follette amendment puts the duty on wool part at 35 per cent and part at 10 per cent. During the fiscal year 1910 there were imported wools to the value of $47,687,293.20. Of these $32,114,802 would have been subject under the La Follette amendment to a 35 per cent duty, and $15,572,491.20 under the La Follette amendment would have been subject to a 10 per cent duty. Thirty-five per cent of the thirty-two million and odd dollars is $11,240,180.70, and the 10 per cent of the fifteen million and odd dollars is $1,557,249.12. So that under the La Follette amendment the importations for 1910 would have paid a total duty of $12,797,429.82. Under the Underwood bill as it passed the House the duties would have been 20 per cent of the total value of importations, or $9,537,458.64. Therefore there was in dispute between the two bodies items which under the Senate bill would have produced 12 million and odd dollars and under the Underwood bill nine million and odd dollars, and the only thing the conferees had power to do was to decide upon some bill, or language, or rate, which would fix the duty either at one of these sums or at some amount between them. What did they do?

Under the conference report they fixed the rate at 29 per cent on all importations, and 29 per cent of the $47,687,293.20 of importations would be $13,829,315.02, or $1,031,885.20 greater than would have been raised under the La Follette amendment and $4,291,856.38 greater than would have been raised under the Underwood amendment.

The conferees had the power to adjust all differences between the Houses. That is what conferees are appointed for, namely, to adjust the differences between the two Houses; but in this case—and I would not for a moment think it was because Texas raises Angora goat hair, a State which had two men on the conference committee—the conferees exceeded their jurisdiction. They not only did not confine their agreement to points of difference between the two Houses, but they raised the rate which had been fixed by the House at 20 per cent and the Senate at 10 per cent to 29 per cent. They would have raised the importation duties a million dollars and more greater than would have been raised under either the Senate amendment or the House bill.

I think this matter is one of sufficient importance for the Chair to hold that, where the House appoints conferees to adjust differences between two bodies, we have the right in the House to hold the conferees to their authority and their jurisdiction, and to only adjust the differences between the two bodies.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention before he sits down to the fact that in addition to the changes he has already suggested the House bill and the Senate bill both fixed the date at which the bill shall go into effect as the 1st of January, 1912. The text of the House bill and the text of the Senate bill are identical in that respect. The report of the conferees makes the date at which the bill shall go into effect October 1 of the present year.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. LENROOT rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Senate and the House both disagree, one to the House bill and one to the Senate bill, if there would be any agreement on the subject whatever? Has not each House expressly disagreed to the bill of the other?

Mr. MANN. The text is the same in both bills. It has been decided times without number that the conferees can not change the text agreed to by both Houses.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask whether he contends there was any agreement between the two Houses as to any part of the text in either the House bill or the Senate substitute?

Mr. MANN. I do not contend that technically there was any agreement, because the Senate struck out all the House bill and inserted a new bill. We had precisely the same question before the conferees on the railroad bill at the last Congress, and in that conference report we changed the date when a part of the bill should go into effect, although both the House and the Senate had fixed the same date in the original bill—the same date both in the House bill and in the Senate substitute; and when we did this, reporting it back to the House as we did, we called the attention of the House to the fact, so that if anybody desired to make a point of order upon it he would have the privilege and the right, and would have his attention attracted to it.

I stated in conference at the time that it was unquestionably true that where both the House and the Senate had agreed to precisely the same language, although in one case it was in the House bill and in the other the substitute bill, the conferees had no right to change it over a point of order; but if they made a change which everybody wanted, and if they called attention to it in the House, so that any Member could preserve his rights by a point of order, I thought it was a proper thing to do, and it was so done.

Now I do not care when we fix the date in this bill, so far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Illinois how they fixed the date in that railroad bill? Was there any action upon it by the House? Did anybody raise the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Nobody raised the point of order, but I called attention to the fact that the date had been changed as to the time of going into effect of certain sections of the bill, one of which provided for the Interstate Commerce Commission having the right to suspend the new rates. The rest of the bill did not go into effect until later.

Now, I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the conferees in this case have entirely exceeded their jurisdiction. I do not desire to detain the House discussing a point of order in this way. There are other things in the conference report which I think are also subject to a point of order along the same lines—other places where raises have been made beyond those fixed by either the House or the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would be disposed to take the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seriously, from the solemn manner and forceful way in which he has presented his case to the House; but knowing, as I do, and as every man in this House knows, that the gentleman from Illinois is one of the best-informed parliamentarians in the House, and certainly has not presented a case of this kind to the House without having made an examination of the authorities, I am constrained to believe that the gentleman is not serious in his presentation of the case to the Speaker.

Now, the whole case in a nutshell is this: The House passed the House bill fixing certain rates. The Senate struck out every word of the House bill after the enacting clause and enacted an amendment to Schedule K of the Payne tariff law. The Senate, when they struck out all of our bill, did not agree to anything in the House bill. They inserted the Payne tariff law, amended. When their amendment came back to the House it brought back Schedule K of the Payne tariff law, putting into conference everything that was in Schedule K of the Payne tariff law, as well as in amendments that were adopted to Schedule K of the Payne tariff law.

Now, the conference report does not pass technically on the original bill that passed this House. The conference report amends Schedule K of the Payne tariff law. There is not a rate in this bill that was not thrown into conference by that situation. There is not a rate in this bill that is not below the rate in the Payne tariff law. The whole matter was thrown into conference, and the authorities are absolutely clear on the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Alabama this question: What does he say about the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that when the House passed the bill and the Senate amended it and it went to conference the conferees can not go lower than the lower rate and they can not go higher than the higher rate in one of the two bills?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, wherever there is an agreement between the two Houses the conferees can not change the language of the agreement, but there is nothing in what the gentleman says about the higher rate or the lower rate, any more than there is about this language or that language in the bill. It has nothing to do with that. The question before this House and the question before the Speaker is whether the conferees have changed an agreement made between the two Houses. There had not been one line of agreement reached between the two Houses before the bill went to conference. The Senate struck out every word of our bill. The House, when it brought the Payne law back here with an amendment, disagreed to every word that was brought back here, and there was not a word of agreement between the two Houses then.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I will ask my friend to excuse me, as I wish to conclude this statement as soon as possible, and my argument is directed to the Speaker.

Now, of course I do not dispute the fact that where there has been an agreement on a bill, and there is merely a change in figures, as often happens in an appropriation bill, the conferees can not go below the lowest rate or above the highest rate, because up to that point there has been an agreement. The disagreement lies between the two rates. Or, where language has been inserted in one House and agreed to in the other House the conferees can not change it. But, as I said to the Speaker, the Senate amendment brought all of Schedule K of the Payne bill before this House, because it brought in an amendment to that schedule, and we disagreed to that amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the precedents are clear. I call the attention of the Speaker to the Rules and Practices of the House of Representatives, page 278, paragraph 536, where it states that the conferees can not change language agreed to by the two Houses. But at the latter part of section 536 it says:

Under certain circumstances managers may report an entirely new bill on a subject in disagreement, but this bill is acted on as part of the report.

Now, turning over to page 279, paragraph 539, the latter part of that paragraph says:

Managers may not change the text to which both Houses have agreed. But where the amendment in issue strikes out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substitutes a new text, the managers have the whole subject before them and may exercise a broad discretion as to details, and may even report an entirely new bill on the subject.

I call the attention of the Speaker to that language. Now, what is the subject? That statement is borne out by Hinds' Precedents, sections 6421, 6423, and 6424—Republican precedents, cited by Republican Speakers—in which they say:

But where the amendment strikes out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substitutes a new text, the managers have the whole subject before them and may exercise a broad discretion as to details, and may even report an entirely new bill on the subject.

How could it be broader than that?

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How could it be broader than that? What was the subject before the conferees? The subject matter was the amendment of the entire Schedule K. That entire Schedule K was before the conferees. There was not a line of it agreed to between the two Houses. The precedents say we may write an entirely new bill. Mr. Speaker, we were compelled to write an entirely new bill. When the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] insisted on one rate on raw wool and the House conferees insisted on another rate on raw wool, and we could not agree on either rate and it came to a compromise, a compromise not entirely satisfactory to the House conferees or entirely satisfactory to the Senate conferees, but an effort on the part of both conferees to reach a rate by which a bill could be written on the statute books to relieve the people of the United States from unjust taxation, we had to write a new bill.

It was all we could do. After we changed the rate on raw wool, which is the basis for any wool bill, we had to readjust the rates on the finished products to conform to the duty on raw wool.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not like to yield. If I yield to the gentleman from Illinois after having refused to yield to other gentlemen, it looks discourteous; but the gentleman from Illinois made the point of order, and I suppose I will have to yield.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Senate conferees insisted on raising the rates which the Senate had fixed at 10 per cent ad valorem to 29 per cent ad valorem or a higher rate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My friend is going outside the question of the point of order and going into the politics of the case.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said that he had to yield to the Senate conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to my friend very broadly both questions. We wrote the tax on raw wool for revenue purposes. We would not have written any tax on raw wool if the exigencies of the Government did not require the revenue. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Senate wrote the tax on raw wool for protection purposes. Now, from a protection standpoint, you could write a low tax on noncompetitive wool and a high tax on competitive wool and not violate your principles. But if you attempted to write a low tax on noncompetitive wool and a high tax on competitive wool for the purpose of protection, we would have written on the face of our bill that we believed in the Republican doctrine of protection, and we could not do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the reason.

Mr. MANN. You increased the rates.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the reason we insisted on a uniform rate. A uniform rate on noncompetitive wool and competitive wool is the only rate upon which a Democratic House can write a tax on raw wool, and the only basis on which it will write a tax on raw wool. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wyoming very briefly.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit for the consideration of the Chair a very brief suggestion with regard to the duty on raw wool as affected by the conference report.

The gentleman from Illinois has called attention to the fact that the duty on third-class, or carpet wool, in the Underwood bill was 20 per cent and in the La Follette bill 10 per cent; that the conferees bring in a report proposing a rate of 29 per cent. It may be argued that inasmuch as there are various classes of wool the conferees were within their authority if the rate they proposed, applying as it does to all classes of wool, was not higher than the highest average rates contained in one or the other of the measures in conference. The fact is, however, that the report of the conferees proposing 29 per cent duty on all classes of wool proposes a rate 5¼ per cent higher than the average rate contained in the higher of the two measures, to wit, the La Follette bill. The importations of wool last year of classes 1 and 2 was approximately 143,000,000 pounds and of class 3 120,000,000 pounds. So that class 3 wool constituted about 45 per cent of the importations.

In the La Follette bill third class or carpet wool was made dutiable at 10 per cent and wool of classes 1 and 2 at 35 per cent, making an average on the basis of last year's importations of 23¾ per cent ad valorem on all wool imported. So that even though it might be held that the conferees were within their rights in the matter of the tariff on wool, if they did not bring in a rate which on the average was higher than the highest rates in either measure; the fact is that the rate they have agreed to is, as I have stated, 5¼ per cent more than the average rate in the La Follette bill, and therefore clearly beyond the authority of the conferees.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish it understood that I object to the conferees having brought in a wool bill with a higher rate than that proposed either in the House or in the Senate. Rather do I congratulate the majority that in view of the coming report from the Tariff Board, and in the shadow of an impending veto they have seen somewhat of light and have become in a measure converted to the Republican doctrine of protection.

I realize, of course, that in fact there is no such conversion; that the Democratic majority in the House, if it had its way about it, would still insist upon free wool or a 20 per cent duty at the highest, but their action to-day ought to at least foreclose them in the future from demanding a lower rate on raw wool than that to which they have now given their approval.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in what he said to the House very obviously neglected to distinguish between a revenue bill and other kinds of legislation. I should be very sorry to hear the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who is peculiarly the custodian of the constitutional prerogative of the House, admit that the Senate has the right to strike out all after the enacting clause of a revenue bill and substitute a bill of its own. That would reduce the prerogative of the House to originate the bills simply to originate the mere number, and the gentleman would be conceding to the Senate the power to take away this great constitutional prerogative, which was thought so essential to be given to the Representatives of the people. The Senate, as he says, has originated a new bill. They have struck out all after the enacting clause and have put in a bill entirely of their own, and that confers the power to originate revenue bills upon a new body, because he said under that condition of things the conferees might originate a revenue bill. I think it is time that the House should stand upon its prerogatives. I believe that the Senate has exceeded its power, that the conferees have exceeded their power, and that this conference report should be held not in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I want to speak only of that feature of this report relating to the date. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says that by virtue of the Senate striking out the entire House bill and substituting an amendment of Schedule K, therefore Schedule K is the matter in conference. Schedule K says nothing about the date at which this law shall take effect. The House and the Senate, however, both have. The House has said that whatever wool bill it passes shall take effect on the 1st of January. The Senate has said that whatever bill it passes shall take effect on the 1st of January. The conferees, however, have changed that; have gone entirely beyond Schedule K, or any kind of a wool bill at all, and have decided this law shall take effect on the 1st of October.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, strictly for information. Suppose it turns out that there is a long line of precedents to the effect that where everything after the enacting clause is stricken out the whole subject goes to the conferees, and they can do as they please with it, even to the extent of bringing in a new bill; does the gentleman think that they could not change the date of it as easily as they could change the substance of it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in this case, leaving out all technicalities as to what changes might be made, where one House has said that whatever law on the subject it shall pass shall take effect on a certain date and the other House when called upon to act upon that has said also that any proceeding that that House may take shall take effect on the same date, that that matter is not and can not be construed in any way to be a matter of disagreement between the two Houses. It seems to me that that is at least the spirit if not the letter of this rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] confuses this case with a case that is common in the practice of the House. The House frequently passes a bill carrying certain items and a number of appropriations, and the Senate amends by striking out the amount appropriated and inserting a different amount. Then, unquestionably, the difference between the Houses is the difference between the two amounts. One is stated by the House and the other is stated by the Senate. In this instance the House passed a bill to reduce the duty on woolen goods, and one of the paragraphs of the bill repeals all laws in conflict with the provisions of the House bill. The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted practically a new bill purporting to reduce the duties on woolen goods.

There is a precedent, not very old; very recent. It is found in section 6424, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents, and I shall read from it.

The SPEAKER. From where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Page 732, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

After debate the Speaker said:

"The Senate during the last session passed an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,"' etc.

"This Senate bill was broad in its provisions and substantially amended the immigration laws then in force. It was very general in its nature, as will be found upon examination. The bill came to the House. The House struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause by way of amendment and passed a substitute therefor. So that the House entirely disagreed with every line, with every paragraph, with every section of the Senate bill—everything except the enacting clause—and proposed a substitute therefor, and this substitute on examination is found to be a complete codification and amendment of existing immigration laws, and incidentally the labor laws connected therewith, especially those dealing with contract labor, and with many other questions to which it is not necessary to refer. * * *"

Again:

The House substitute by way of amendment went to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to every line, paragraph, and section of the House provision, and with that disagreement to the Senate provision, and with the House provision in effect a disagreement to the original Senate bill, the whole matter went to conference. That is, by this action there was committed to conference the whole subject of immigration, and, as connected therewith, the prohibition of immigration by way of contract labor in the fullest sense of the words. * * * The Chair has not had time to hunt up all the provisions of the immigration laws of the country, but the repealing clause, with the exception as proposed by the House and the disagreement of the Senate, sends this whole matter, in the opinion of the Chair, to the conferees.

That decision was rendered by Mr. Speaker CANNON in the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. This case is exactly similar, although the procedure was the reverse. In that case a bill passed by the Senate came to the House and the House struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted an entirely new bill. The bill went back to the Senate, the Senate disagreed to the House amendment, and the bill was sent to conference. In this instance the House passed a bill which went to the Senate; the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and sent back an entirely new bill to the House. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment. In both the Senate bill and in the House bill there was a clause repealing all laws affecting the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, so that the entire question of duties upon wool and woolen goods is sent into conference. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] bases his argument largely upon the fact that in the report of the managers on the part of the House the language relating to the duties on certain kinds of carpets, tapestry Brussels carpets, velvet carpets, and tapestry velvet carpets is identical in the House bill and in the Senate substitute, but there is this great distinction, Mr. Speaker. In the House bill there is a paragraph on page 4, section 13, fixing the duty on velvet, tapestry velvet carpets, and so forth.

Then, in paragraph 14, it fixes the duty on tapestry, Brussels carpet, figured or plain, and so forth. In the Senate substitute the classification is entirely changed, and these carpets, instead of being separately classified, are classified with a number of other kinds of woolen manufactures. While the particular language used may be identical, as the Senate disagreed to every line, in the language of Mr. Speaker CANNON, and every paragraph of the House bill, and the House disagreed to every line and every paragraph of the Senate amendment, there was no agreement upon any particular language or upon any language affecting any rate.

The gentleman's point of order would have applied if the Senate had taken the House bill and, as one of the amendments thereto in paragraph 13, had stricken out "35 per cent ad valorem" and inserted "forty" or "thirty-eight," and then the managers, representing both Houses, had inserted a higher percentage than found either in the House paragraph or the proposed amendment to the House paragraph; but in this instance there is agreement neither upon the House paragraph nor upon the Senate paragraph. The entire question of the duty on wool or woolen manufactures, by reason of the proposed repeal of the existing law, is thrown into conference, and the conferees, I understand from an examination of the report, have made an entirely different classification from that contained either in the House bill or in the Senate substitute and have fixed a rate of duty thereon.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to ask the gentleman just this question. Does the gentleman believe it would have been in the power of the conferees to fix the date of the taking effect of this bill in 2011 instead of 1911?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unquestionably.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They would have had that right?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In other words, they would have had the right to destroy the bill utterly, no matter what?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Democratic House would not have been so idiotic as to agree to it, no matter what might have been done by the Republicans. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a question I do not care to bring into the conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House had in the bill a provision fixing a time at which this law, if enacted, should go into effect. The Senate by striking out that provision had disagreed to it. Then the Senate inserted a provision fixing the time at which the law should go into effect, and the House disagreed to the proposition of the Senate. The only question sent into conference, so far as that is concerned, is the time when the law should go into effect. The entire matter is within the control and jurisdiction of the conferees. In the decision to which I have called attention, Mr. Speaker CANNON referred to another precedent which he held was not in point. That was a case in which a claims bill had come from one body to the other, and specific items in the bill had been thrown into disagreement, and the conferees had inserted in their report a number of items not germane, and which could not under any possibility be considered within the control or jurisdiction of the conferees. But in this case under this decision every question affecting the reduction of duties on wool and manufactures of wool was thrown into conference and within the control of the managers upon the part of the House, and under the precedent established in 1907 it seems to be clear that so long as the conferees did not include anything other than provisions affecting the duties on wool and woolen goods they were clearly within their rights.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I appreciate the difference between a case where the Senate simply amends the amount fixed by the House in a bill or amends the language of the House bill and a case where the Senate strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts a new bill. And I realize that where the latter action is taken it gives to the conferees a very broad latitude of discretion in formulating a new bill. But let us see where the logic of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr.

UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] leads.

Suppose when we pass the sundry civil appropriation bill, which covers everything possible under the Government, the Senate strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts the same language as the House bill with a few variations in amount, does anyone contend, much less the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that that would authorize the conferees to increase the amounts over the amounts fixed either in the House or the Senate bill, or to include entirely new propositions which had never been considered either by the House or the Senate, because they might have been included in a sundry civil appropriation bill? Suppose when we pass the public-building bill or the river and harbor bill the Senate strikes out all after the enacting clause. Does anyone contend that that would give to the conferees power to change the amounts, which were the same in the House and the Senate bills, and that if the House had provided for a public building at Jonesboro to cost $100,000 and the Senate had provided for a public building at Jonesboro to cost $100,000 that the conferees could authorize a public building at Smithville to cost $250,000?

The pretense is ridiculous when you carry it to its logical end. The conferees had a broad power over the woolen schedule, but where the House had fixed a rate on a certain article of wool or woolen goods and the Senate had fixed the same rate, both Houses had agreed upon that rate. In Jefferson's Manual—and I do not know whether it is proper to quote it in a Democratic House after it was ruled out of order the other day [laughter on the Republican side]—in Jefferson's Manual, Jefferson quotes approvingly a statement, on page 272:

So the Commons resolved that it is unparliamentary to strike out, at a conference, anything in a bill which hath been agreed and passed by both Houses.

These items have been agreed to and passed by both Houses, some of them in precisely the same language. The conferees have no more right to change that than they would have to change the amount in a public-building bill where both bodies had agreed to the same or to change an amount in any other appropriation bill. The House, when it agrees to a conference, has a right to know that the conferees will confine themselves to the points in disagreement, because in no other way can the House protect its integrity and prevent in the end, in some cases, improper influences being used upon the conferees. The conference report is a whole. If the conferees insert an item, it can not be differentiated from others except upon a point of order, and where conferees claim the power to make a new bill, both Houses having agreed to the same item, and they present a new proposition, it lays the conferees open to the suspicion of undue influences; and that ought not to be permitted, and the rules ought to be observed in a way which would not permit it.

Why was the rate on Angora goat hair raised from 20 per cent, as fixed by the House, and 10 per cent, as fixed by the Senate? Whose influence was that? Why was the rate on hair goods raised from 40 per cent, as fixed by the House, and 35 per cent, as fixed by the Senate, to 49 per cent? Whose influence was that? Is that light upon the conferees, or is it influence? I fear it was influence. [Applause on the Republican side, and cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words, and they will be very brief. I believe, under the Constitution of the United States, the House has the right to originate revenue legislation. I believe the claim made by the chairman of the committee on the other side is utterly destructive of that principle. I care not for all the precedents, or anything of that kind. I have observed, in 17 years' service in this House, that precedents are quoted according to the necessity for sustaining a decision. I have more faith in the good, sound common sense of the Speaker of this House than to believe that he will consent to a proposition that, where the House has said that the bill shall go into effect on the 1st of January next, and where the Senate has said that the bill shall go into effect on the 1st of January next, a conference committee can change the date fixed by both Houses and put it on the 1st of October. If so, the power of this House has gone, and legislation is transferred inevitably to its conference committees in the future. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The desire of the present occupant of the chair is to rule fairly; and, so far as I am individually concerned, I would rather have it said of me, after I have finally laid down the gavel, that I was the fairest Speaker that the House ever had than that I was the greatest.

The gentleman from Wisconsin last Saturday made a remark which deserves the consideration of the House, and that was that no Speaker could afford to render a decision for temporary benefit to his party fellows without considering the ultimate and general effect of it. That is absolutely true.

The Chair thoroughly agrees with one proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL]—that the House originates revenue measures; and the Chair thinks that the first House of Representatives that ever sat ought to have determined that the Senate could not substitute a new tariff bill for one passed by the House. [Applause.] But they have been going on in that course for 122 years. If I can get one House of Representatives which will agree to stay here for two years, I shall be perfectly willing to tackle the Senate on that proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. We will stay.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. We are with you.

The SPEAKER. The particular matter at bar seems to have been differentiated into two classes by previous Speakers: One, where the dispute between the two Houses is simply a dispute about rates or about amounts, and the other where one House strikes out everything after the enacting clause and substitutes an entirely new bill.

The Chair has no doubt whatever that at least one contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct. That is, that if it is a mere squabble about amounts or rates, the conferees can not go above the higher amount or rate named in one of the two bills or lower than the lower rate named in one of the two bills. But that is not this case. In this case the Senate struck out everything after the enacting clause and substituted a new bill. Last Saturday there did not seem to be any precedents to fit the point under consideration. This time, fortunately for the Chair at least, four great Speakers of this House have ruled on the proposition involved—Mr. Speaker Colfax, who was subsequently Vice President; Mr. Speaker Carlisle, subsequently Senator and Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. Speaken Henderson, and Mr. Speaker CANNON. The Chair does not know anything about the parliamentary clerks to Mr. Speaker Colfax and Mr. Speaker Carlisle, but the Chair is fully persuaded that every Member of this House who has served in prior Congresses will agree that Mr. Speaker Henderson and Mr. Speaker CANNON had the advantage of being advised by one of the most skillful parliamentarians in this country, the present Member from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. [Applause.]

All four of these Speakers, three Republicans and one Democrat, have passed on this question, and they have all ruled that where everything after the enacting clause is stricken out and a new bill substituted it gives the conferees very wide discretion, extending even to the substitution of an entirely new bill. The Chair will have three of these decisions read, and will have the decision of Mr. Speaker CANNON, just read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], incorporated into this opinion, because the question ought to be definitely settled during the life of this Congress at least. The Chair will first have the decision of Mr. Speaker Colfax read, and the Clerk will announce the volume and section of Hinds' Precedents.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6421:

"Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text, and the differences over this substitute are referred to conference, the managers have a wide discretion in incorporating germane matters, and may even report a new bill on the subject. On March 3, 1865, Mr. Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 51) entitled 'An act to establish a bureau of freedman's affairs,' reported that the Senate had receded from their amendment, which was a substitute, and the committee had agreed upon, as a substitute, a new bill, entitled 'An act to establish a bureau for the relief of freedmen and refugees.'

"As soon as the report had been read, Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point that the report did not come within the scope of the conference committee. It did not report the proceedings of the Senate or an agreement by the committee on an amendment to the Senate's amendment to the House bill, but it reported an entire substitute for both the original bill and the substitute adopted by the Senate, and it established a department unprovided for by either of the other bills."

The Speaker [Mr. Colfax] said:

"The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead. Two separate bills have been referred to the committee, and they can take either one of them or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either. They have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them."

On an appeal the Chair was sustained—yeas 89, nays 35.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the ruling of Mr. Speaker Carlisle.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 6422 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5:

"6422. On August 3, 1886, the House had under consideration the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill.

"Mr. William M. Springer, of Illinois, made the point of order that the conferees had included new matter in their report.

"The Speaker (Mr. Carlisle) ruled:

"The House passed a bill to provide for the improvement of rivers and harbors and making an appropriation for that purpose. That bill was sent to the Senate, where it was amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a different proposition in some respects, but a proposition having the same object in view. When that came back to the House it was treated, and properly so, as one single amendment and not as a series of amendments as was contended for by some gentlemen on the floor at the time.

"It was nonconcurred in by the House and a conference was appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. That conference committee having met, reports back the Senate amendment as a single amendment with various amendments, and recommends that it be concurred in with the other amendments which the committee has incorporated in its report. The question, therefore, is not whether the provisions to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes are germane to the original bill as it passed the House, but whether they are germane to the Senate amendment which the House had under consideration and which was referred to the committee of conference. If germane to that amendment, the point of order can not be sustained on the ground claimed by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair thinks they are germane to the Senate amendment, for, though different from the provisions contained in the Senate amendment, they relate to the same subject, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the decision by Mr. Speaker Henderson.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 6423, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

"6423. On February 25, 1901, Mr. GILBERT N. HAUGEN, of Iowa, presented the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898.

"The conferees recommended that the House recede from its amendment, which was in the nature of a substitute, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a new text; and they further recommended that the House agree to the Senate text with certain specified amendments.

"Mr. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, made a point of order that the conferees had exceeded their authority and incorporated in their report matters not in difference between the two Houses. The House text had substituted reference to the Court of Claims instead of to the commission proposed by the Senate text. The conferees not only recommended the adoption of the Senate text, but had enlarged the provisions of it, making the number of commissioners five instead of three, although, he asserted, there was no issue between the two Houses on this point, and also materially changing the Senate text in those portions relating to the right of appeal.

"After debate the Speaker [Mr. Henderson] held:

"The current of authorities in regard to the action of the conferees is that they must be held strictly to the consideration of such matters as are in issue between the two Houses. That is the general governing principle, and a most valuable one, and a necessary one. In this case, however, the Chair sees no difficulty. As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Mahon], the Senate presents a proposition for a commission; the House turns that down, so to speak, and adopts an amendment, by way of substitute, providing that these Spanish claims shall be referred for determination to the Court of Claims. In other words, the Senate contends for a commission, the House for the Court of Claims. The method of treating these Spanish claims is thus put in issue. The House, when it sent over to the Senate its amendment by way of substitute, said: 'We will not entertain your method; we have a better one; we offer you a substitute whereby these matters shall be referred to the Court of Claims instead of a commission.' That puts in issue every question bearing upon this controversy between the two Houses. The able remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] have not suggested a single question that is not brought in issue between the two Houses in the present position of this question. The conferees have not gone beyond the matters in issue. On this point the Chair will ask the Clerk to read from the Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representative, section 1420, a decision made by Speaker Colfax.

"The section having been read, the Speaker concluded:

"The House will readily see that the precedent just read bears strongly on this question, although in the present case the conferees have not gone so far as they did in that case. There is nothing here that is not germane to the main issue. In reference to no matter in controversy between the two Houses have the conferees attempted to trench upon or change a single expression that the two Houses have agreed upon. The Senate sends to this House a bill for which the House presents a substitute, and the report of the conferees seeks only to treat the matters in issue. The Chair feels clear that he is justified in overruling the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the report."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the decision by Mr. Speaker CANNON.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 6424, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

"6424. Where the disagreement is as to an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire text of a bill, the managers have the whole subject before them and may exercise a broad discretion as to details.

"A point of order against a conference report should be made or reserved after the report is read and before the reading of the statement.

"On February 18, 1907, Mr. William S. Bennet, of New York, submitted the report of the managers of the conference on the bill (S. 4403) entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.'

"Before the report was read Mr. JOHN L. BURNETT, of Alabama, proposed to reserve a point of order.

"The Speaker said:

"The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama, who desired to reserve points of order, that it is the impression of the Chair that the point of order, if any is made, is in time after the report is read; but if the gentleman desires, out of abundant caution, he may reserve at this time points of order. * * * All points of order are reserved. The proper time to reserve points of order, as the Chair is informed, on conference reports is after the conference report is read and before the statement is read."

The report having been read, a point of order was made by Mr. BURNETT, who insisted that the managers had exceeded their authority in inserting the following provisions:

"Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States, to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone."

And in another portion of the report the following:

"SEC. 42. It shall not be lawful for the master of a steamship or other vessel wherein immigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, have been taken at any port or place in a foreign country or dominion (ports and places in foreign territory contiguous to the United States excepted) to bring such vessel and passengers to any port or place in the United States unless the compartments, spaces, and accommodations hereinafter mentioned have been provided, allotted, maintained, and used for and by such passengers during the entire voyage; that is to say, in a steamship the compartments or spaces, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow for each and every passenger carried or brought therein 18 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to his or her use, if the compartment or space is located on the main deck or on the first deck next below the main deck of the vessel, and 20 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to his or her use for each passenger carried or brought therein if the compartment or space is located on the second deck below the main deck of the vessel: Provided, That if the height between the lower passenger deck and the deck immediately above it is less than 7 feet," etc. (continuing in detail).

After debate, the Speaker (Mr. CANNON) held:

"The Senate during the last session passed an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,"' etc.

"This Senate bill was broad in its provisions and substantially amended the immigration laws then in force. It was very general in its nature, as will be found upon examination. The bill came to the House. The House struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause, by way of amendment, and passed a substitute therefor. So that the House entirely disagreed with every line, with every paragraph, with every section of the Senate bill—everything except the enacting clause—and proposed a substitute therefor, and this substitute, on examination, is found to be a complete codification and amendment of existing immigration laws and, incidentally, the labor laws connected therewith, especially those dealing with contract labor, and with many other questions to which it is not necessary to refer. And in the final clause of the House substitute there is the provision:

"'That the act of March 3, 1903, being an act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof, and the act of March 22, 1904, being an act to extend the exemption from head tax to citizens of Newfoundland entering the United States, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons,' etc.

"So that not only does the House by its substitute amendment codify and amend all the laws touching immigration, but incidentally changes those relating to labor, especially contract labor. The House substitute is found to be abounding in section after section with the prohibition of contract labor in connection with immigration, and with various other provisions of a similar nature.

"The House substitute, by way of amendment, went to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to every line, paragraph, and section of the House provision; and with that disagreement to the Senate provision, and with the House provision in effect a disagreement to the original Senate bill, the whole matter went to conference. That is, by this action there was committed to conference the whole subject of immigration, and, as connected therewith, the prohibition of immigration by way of contract labor in the fullest sense of the words. * * * The Chair has not had time to hunt up all the provisions of the immigration laws of the country, but the repealing clause, with the exception as proposed by the House and the disagreement of the Senate, sent this whole matter, in the opinion of the Chair, to the conferees.

"Now, then, there is but one provision that is seriously contended for in the point of order that is made, and that is to be found on page 2 of the House conference report, No. 6607, and is as follows:

"'That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States, from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.'

"Now, then, one of the principal efforts in legislation heretofore have been to exclude labor that is brought in under contract or is promoted, so to speak; and the very reason of that legislation has been and is that the labor conditions in the United States should not be affected unfavorably. Three sections of the House substitute deal expressly with that question. It is not like unto the precedent cited by the gentleman from Mississippi, which was made by the ruling of Mr. Speaker Henderson. The only thing there was a disagreement between the House and the Senate as to certain specified claims, and between the Senate and House as to certain other specified claims. The conferees in that case, taking in the whole sea or ocean of claims, from the birth of Christ to the supposed death of the man with hoofs and horns, picked out a number of claims that the House or Senate never had heard of or dealt with and put them in the conference report, and Mr. Speaker Henderson properly sustained the point of order to the conference report. The Chair has no difficulty nor any hesitation in holding that this is germane first; and, second, that it comes within the scope of the disagreement between the House and Senate as affects immigration on the one hand and the interest of labor on the other, and therefore overrules the point of order."

Mr. Burnett having appealed, the appeal was laid on the table on motion of Mr. SERENO E. PAYNE of New York, by a vote of yeas 198, nays 104.

The SPEAKER. It will be observed from one of these decisions that in days gone by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] had the other end of this question than the one he has to-day [laughter], and that he was overruled. In view of this long line of decisions by illustrious Speakers, the Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the statement of the conferees has not yet been read. Does he desire to have that read?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to have the statement read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if there is to be any arrangement about debate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was just about to state that I understand if the previous question is ordered there will be 20 minutes debate on each side.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not understand the gentleman to move the previous question. Several gentlemen on this side would like to be heard.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to have that length of time for debate. I do not think there is any necessity for delaying the House on this conference report, however. Everybody knows what is in it, and knows all about it. Twenty minutes on a side will enable the gentleman from New York and myself to present the case.

Mr. PAYNE. No gentleman in the House knows the reason for any of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will agree with the gentleman that we have an hour's debate, each side to control half an hour.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman agree to two hours' debate and then that the previous question shall be considered in operation? That would close debate at 4 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We have had some debate already. If I move the previous question I will cut off debate. I will announce——

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is the case. There has been no debate on this proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unless the gentlemen are willing to agree to debate of an hour on the bill, I will move the previous question, which will give them 20 minutes on their side and give us 20 minutes on our side.

Mr. MANN. That is only 10 minutes more. Would not the gentleman concede an hour on a side and then have the previous question operate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would be very glad if there was anything to debate about.

Mr. MANN. But we think there is.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman must appreciate that this is the first time that an entirely new revenue bill has ever originated in a conference committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman wants an hour, half an hour on each side, I will agree to it, and if not, I will move the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we do not care to be cut off in that way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 118, answered "present" 9, not voting 88, as follows:

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. GARDNER, is recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. PADGETT. I have a pair with the gentleman for to-day, and I wish to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. PADGETT was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WILDER] is recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MURRAY. I have a pair with the gentleman for to-day, and I wish to withdraw my vote "aye" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. MURRAY was called and he answered "present."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether Mr. AUSTIN voted on this roll call? I do not think he did.

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I voted "aye," and I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to 20 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the conferees' report presents to the House an amendment of Schedule K which we do not claim expresses the Democratic position in reference to a revision of this schedule. If we had had the power to write a tariff bill on Schedule K we would write a lower rate—a much lower rate [applause on the Democratic side] in some particulars—but we have control, so far as our party is concerned, of only one House of Congress, and we are limited in our action by what the other House of Congress is willing to do. The conferees on the part of the House desired a lower rate on raw wool, desired lower rates on manufactured wool; the Senate conferees desired a higher rate on raw wool and higher rates on manufactured wool. Manifestly, if we desired to pass a bill to grant some relief to the American people it was necessary for the House conferees to come to an agreement and yield to some extent to the Senate, as the Senate conferees yielded to some extent to the House. In the classification of the paragraph on raw wool the Senate conferees yielded to the House and agreed to the House classsification. In reference to the classification relating to cloths and women's dress goods and webbing, gorings, beltings, suspenders, and so forth, the House bill had three separate paragraphs at different rates. The Senate bill had one paragraph, and included in that one paragraph also flannels and blankets. We insisted that there should be a very much lower rate on flannels and blankets than there were on cloths and men's dress goods and women's dress goods, because we believe that flannel underwear and flannel blankets represented the needs and the necessities of the poor people of the United States, and for that reason we insisted on a separate classification and a lower rate in reference to blankets and flannels, and the Senate conferees yielded, and, although not agreeing to a rate as low as the House rate, they have agreed to a very much lower rate—11 per cent lower—than they insisted on on cloths and clothing and women's dress goods.

Now, in reference to the classification in the carpet schedule, we had eight or nine different classifications in the House bill. Your conferees finally agreed on three classifications. The Senate bill had only one classification in reference to carpets. We finally yielded and made three classifications in reference to carpets, one embracing that high grade of carpets and rugs that only the very rich are able to buy, and put a high rate of duty, 50 per cent ad valorem, as high as the House bill provided for, on those luxuries. We agreed on a third classification as to carpets embracing the medium grades of carpets that the well-to-do people buy, and put a rate of 40 per cent ad valorem on them, a lower rate on that than the Senate bill. We agreed on a third classification for carpets, those very low grades of carpets that only the poor people are able to buy, and on that classification we put a rate of 30 per cent ad valorem, only raised the rate 5 per cent above the rate in the House bill. So that, having carpets and flannels and blankets very close to the House bill and the raise in the rates in the conference report being largely on the higher grades of goods that the wealthier people of the United States buy, we feel that we have presented to the House a reasonable bill, a bill higher than we would have passed ourselves, but a bill that we can defend before the country and a bill that will bring great relief to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

As to raw wool, the House rate was 20 per cent. The Senate divided the bill into two classes, embracing in the first class the classes 1 and 2 in the Payne bill, relating to clothing wool, and placed the rate on that class at 35 per cent. That was competitive wool. That was wool that competed with the American flocks. They put a low rate on carpet wools, which are not competitive wools. As your conferee I stated to the Senate committee that the only purpose that we had in levying a rate on raw wool was for revenue, and that if we levied a higher rate on competitive wool and a lower rate on noncompetitive wool, that of necessity recognized the principle of protection in the face of our bill, and I could not agree to it.

The Senate, without yielding their principles, could agree to a uniform rate, because, although they may say that you can put noncompetitive articles on the free list without violation of the principle of protection, yet you can put a revenue duty or any duty on noncompetitive articles and not violate the principle of protection. For that reason the Senate agreed that we should have a uniform rate on raw wool. As I said, our bill called for 20 per cent; their bill called for 35 per cent on the competitive wools, which amounted to about two-thirds of the importations into this country, and 10 per cent on the noncompetitive wools, which amounted to about one-third of the importations into this country. We finally compromised and agreed to take 29 per cent on all raw wool, which was an advance of 9 per cent over the House bill.

The present revenues that are raised under the Payne bill on raw wool amount to $21,128,000. The revenue raised under the House bill was $13,398,000 as estimated. The estimated revenue under the conference report on raw wools amounts to $17,400,000. Now, as to manufactures of wool there is not nearly as much advance in the Senate bill over the House bill as there is in reference to raw wool. In fact, there is only a very reasonable advance on manufactured goods. The imports under the Payne bill were $23,057,000. The duties obtained on manufactures of wool amounted to $20,776,000. The House bill estimated $63,831,000 of imports, with a revenue of $27,157,000. The conference report estimated the importation on manufactures of wool at $51,890,000, about $12,000,000 less than was estimated in the House bill, but it is estimated that the conference report, by reason of the increased rate of duty, will produce $25,094,000, a loss of something over $2,000,000 when compared with the duties obtained by the House bill on manufactures of wool, and a gain of something over $4,000,000 on the duties raised by the Payne bill.

The total revenue that was derived by the Payne bill for the year 1910 amounted to $41,934,000. The estimated revenue raised by the House bill was $40,556,000. The estimated revenue to be derived from the bill reported by the conferees is $42,494,000, an increase of revenue as estimated of nearly $2,000,000 above the revenues obtained from the House bill; so that, if this conference bill becomes a law, instead of a loss of revenue there will be an increase of revenue of nearly 5 per cent over the House bill.

I want to call your attention to this fact: The place where the people of the United States pay their taxes is not on raw wool, but on the finished product. It is on the dress goods, on the cloth, on the blankets, on the women's clothing that they buy, and not on the raw wool that is imported into the United States.

Under the present law the taxes levied on the American people upon the finished manufactures of wool that they buy amount to 90.10 per cent ad valorem. Under the House bill it amounted to 42.55 per cent ad valorem. Under the conference bill, as it is presented to the House to vote on to-day, the taxes that the American people will pay on the average amount to 48.36 per cent ad valorem. In other words, if you pass this bill and the Senate of the United States passes the bill and the President signs it, you will save to the people of the United States in their taxes on manufactures of wool the difference between 90.10 per cent and 48.36 per cent [applause on the Democratic side], or, in round figures, 42 per cent on all the manufactures of wool that the American people buy.

Now, I want to call your attention to what the House conferees have conceded to the Senate in order to enable us to pass a bill which I hope the President of the United States will have the patriotism to sign. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The House bill provided, on manufactures of wool, for a tax of 42.55 per cent. The conference bill provides for a tax on manufactures of wool of 48.36 per cent, or an increase of 5.79 per cent. In other words, the average increase in the bill presented by the conference report on manufactures of wool over the bill that this House passed is less than 6 per cent. And I say to the Democrats on this side of the House and to our friends on that side of the House who want to give relief to the people, that we can well afford to put this bill through the House and send it to the President of the United States in order that we may get some relief for the American people, even if it does not entirely express our views on this question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and insert the following comparative statement:

Comparative statement of the imports, duties, average unit of value, and equivalent ad valorem rate of duty on wool and manufactures of wool, on the basis of the imports of 1910 and as estimated for 1912, in the House and conference bills.

Items.	Present act—Results for year ending June 30, 1910.	Proposed act—Estimated results for a 12-month period.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time that the people of the United States have ever seen legislation enacted through a slot machine. [Laughter on the Republican side and cries of "Louder!" on the Democratic side.] Oh, you will hear from the country by and by if you do not hear from me now, so that it is not necessary to shout "Louder!" [Laughter on the Republican side.] The House has dropped one piece of legislation in the slot, and the Senate has dropped another in, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] have pulled out a piece of chewing gum. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Alabama has just made a statement that this bill gives a certain average rate of duty, and if the Democratic Party had its way they would make it lower yet. I call his attention to the fact that the chief item of importation under the woolen schedule, aside from wool itself, is woolen cloth; and under the rate of duty he has given and with the rate on wool out of which it is made it will give to the manufacturer of woolen goods in this country a duty of 30.15 per cent, which is 20 per cent less than his predecessors in the Democratic Party gave under the Wilson bill; that on the lower class of woolens, which were 40 cents a pound and less, deducting the compensatory duty on wool, it will give a duty of 21.65 per cent; and that both of these duties on woolen goods manufactured in the Northern States are less than the corresponding duties on cotton manufactures both in the North and the South.

Now, I called the gentleman's attention the other day to the mode of classification used in this woolen bill. It was the first one of the schedules presented. I said that there should be a graded duty on woolen cloths. I said it not because of my own judgment, because I distrusted that, but I had gone back to the Walker tariff bill, and I had found in 65 years of American history since that law was enacted that there never had been either a woolen or a cotton bill that did not have graded duties, whether specific or ad valorem.

I call the attention of the gentleman now to the fact that this woolen bill has only one duty on cloths; but when you come to your cotton bill it has six duties, rated according to fineness and quality; and unfortunately the coarse, common grades, many of them, have their duties raised, while the duties on the better grades and the finer cotton cloths are very materially lowered. Why did you do it? Ah, the gentleman replied the other day:

> I will state to the gentleman that the committee having adopted an ad valorem rate all through the bill that rises and falls with the value of the goods concluded that the ad valorem rate would adjust itself without having to make a specific change.

It was a good argument as long as it lasted. I now call the gentleman's attention to his own language in the report on the cotton bill, absolutely destroying what he said with regard to the woolen industry and putting himself in an unfair light before the American people with regard to his treatment of these two different textiles. On page 34 of the report he says:

> Slightly higher rates are provided for cloths when bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, printed, or mercerized, in order to secure more revenue from such cloths, which include the fabrics of greatest value.
> Moreover—

I call the attention of the House to this, for the raise is 20 to 30 per cent with reference to cotton and no raise for like processes with reference to woolen cloths.

> Moreover, it is considered entirely equitable to impose higher rates of duty on finer and more costly fabrics.

It is more equitable in cotton. Is it more equitable or not in woolen? Why did you not treat the two textiles in the same way? Why did you bring in a classification here under which you have given three times the rate of duty on a piece of mercerized cotton that the Payne bill gave? I remember distinctly when some of our Republican friends from the West and some of our Democratic friends from the South and West elaborated on the duty of 1 cent a yard on mercerized cotton. Yet this bill gives 5 per cent on the whole fabric if there is one mercerized thread in the piece of cotton.

I saw a gentleman here last week with a very fine suit of clothes composed of unbleached cotton mercerized. It was like silk. I asked him what he thought the cost of the cloth was. Fifty to sixty cents a yard was a reasonable price. Yet under this Democratic bill you put 5 per cent extra on a piece of mercerized cotton, which in that case would be 3 cents a yard, instead of the 1 cent which the Payne bill carries. Why did you do it? Did you not know that it costs more to make woolen cloth than it does to make cotton cloth? Do you not know that you take your cotton from the field and put it into a picker, and then it goes to the carder and spinner and is woven, while the wool must be sorted by hand, the pieces of fiber picked out, and put in the different qualities? And it is the highest-paid labor in the industry for sorting it. After that is done it must be scoured before it is ready for use, while it is not necessary to do this to cotton. Do you not know that woolen goods must be dyed? Do you not know that they must be woven? Yet in your cotton industry you have absolutely advanced the duty on some grades. By fineness, by weaving, by mercerizing you have made nine different classifications, from the raw cotton up to the fabric, and you have made two in wool—one on yarn and one on cloth. Why did you do it? The American people will want to know why.

We saw here the other day that in the Democratic cotton bill some coarse, common, unbleached cotton was raised enormously in duty; but they said: "There are only a thousand dollars' worth imported; the duty is prohibitive." I took the trouble to go to the greatest expert in cotton manufacturing in the United States and ask him whether there was only a small quantity produced here, and he told me that out of the 10,000,000 spindles running in the Southern States between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 spindles were exclusively engaged in that class of production. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the elaborate apology of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] for this conference report, I do not wonder why that side of the House has applied the gag in this debate. [Applause on the Republican side.] If the gentleman from Alabama can not praise this measure—and even his genial smile did not conceal his lack of enthusiasm for it—it is not surprising that there are not many gentlemen on that side of the House who want to be heard in praise of it.

The gentleman from Alabama says that this is not a Democratic measure; that it is not a revision of the wool schedule such as he would write had he the power. But he defends his position in assenting to this conference report by calling it a compromise. Since he made that statement a few moments ago I desired to find out exactly what a "compromise" is. I consulted the Century Dictionary and found the following definition:

Compromise: A thing partaking of and blending the qualities, forms, or uses of two other and different things; as, a mule is a compromise between a horse and an ass.

[Laughter.]

Of course we will not all agree here as to which is the horse and which is the ass in this case, but we apparently do agree about the general characteristics of the resulting "compromise." The apology of the gentleman from Alabama lends additional force to the ancient description of the mule as being the only animal in existence without either pride of ancestry or hope of posterity. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen on the other side expect that the country will take this as a serious, honest, and bona fide revision of the wool duties, they reckon without their host. Their half-hearted defense of this makeshift "compromise" will not appeal to thinking men, nor does it hold out bright promise of the success of their efforts in tariff revision in the future. This "compromise," based as it is on an avowed lack of accurate knowledge as to wool production and manufacture, conducted as it was under a system of barter and sale between two gentlemen, one advocating protective duties, the other revenue duties, would be bad enough in any case, but under the existing circumstances is, in my view, indefensible. In only a little more than three months we shall have an exhaustive report by the Tariff Board upon the whole wool question. To anticipate this report is in the highest degree inadvisable. Nothing can be gained by action now. Nothing would be lost by delay. In spite of all that the gentleman from Alabama has said of the possibility of the President's signature to this bill I do not believe that he or any other Member of this House thinks that it will become a law at this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall occupy the three minutes yielded to me, because it goes without saying that it would be utterly impossible to discuss a tariff bill within that period of time. I rise simply to enter my protest against the unfairness with which this legislation is being pressed. I do not believe that in all the history of the American Congress ever before has the minority been compelled to discuss a great tariff measure within the brief space of 20 minutes, and those 20 minutes imposed on them by the application of a gag in the passage of the previous question. This measure has been ill-considered from the very outstart. The original bill that went from the House to the Senate was never considered in this House. The only time that it was ever considered at all was in the two or three hours that was spent in a Democratic caucus, and when the bill was brought into the House it was brought in with an apology, a denial that it represented Democratic doctrine. A resolution, in the words of the peerless leader, was passed by the Democratic caucus for the purpose of disinfecting the caucus. It strikes me that some action is necessary on your part, gentlemen, now to disinfect this conference report. This bill is not the bill that went from the House to the Senate, nor is it the bill that came from the Senate to the House. It is a new bill that has never been discussed anywhere. It has never been explained to this House save in the few minutes when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] occupied the floor. I venture to say that every gentleman within the sound of my voice will indorse what I say when I say that he does not understand any part of this bill from the beginning to the end of it. For instance, the gentleman from Alabama has given us no excuse, no reason, why in the trade made between him and the Senator from Wisconsin he agreed to raise the rate of duty on third-class wool as fixed in the Senate bill 190 per cent, nor does he give any reason for the raises of duties all along the line from those fixed in the House bill. Does he believe that the country will be satisfied with his little 20-minute explanation and apology and with his application of the gag rule to the minority who are desirous of intelligently discussing and finding out something about this measure? Even now, without further opportunity for debate, my limited time expires.

Mr. Speaker, I may desire hereafter to put some figures in the RECORD in connection with this bill, and for that reason I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has six minutes remaining and the gentleman from New York has six minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there will be but one other speech on this side of the House, and I will ask the gentleman from New York to consume his time.

Mr. PAYNE rose.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Tell us all about it Mr. PAYNE. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I hardly know where to begin on this mongrel that has come in here as the product of the brain of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and one of the Senate conferees. It was the open conference, Mr. Speaker, which we had that marked the new era in legislative history. When we went in there a motion was made to refer the question in dispute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and that was carried. After several days they came in there and reported they had come pretty near to an agreement. It was after they had gotten to an agreement, as it afterwards appeared. Gradually they yielded one point a little higher and one a little lower until they agreed to 29 per cent duty on all wools. It was a revelation to me for the gentleman from Alabama to work himself up to that point, after the speech he made here commending this bill, because it was simply a free-trade-tariff-for-revenue-only when he brought it into the House and he was going to fill up the "depleted" Treasury in this bill by 20 per cent on wool, and that was the only excuse for it. Why did he get up to 29 per cent? The whole effort was so patent, Mr. Speaker! They wanted to put a bill up to the President to see whether he would veto it or not. They will find out when they get it up to him, and pretty sudden [applause on the Republican side], because there will be some words about it, inasmuch as he has unlimited time and we have only 20 minutes on our side to dissect this iniquitous proceeding.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] pleaded almost with tears in his eyes to keep blankets down to a duty of 30 per cent, and they would not have that. And then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] repeated that old argument made on the stump about the high duty levied on the poor man's blanket and that he had to sleep without one, and he wanted to get that duty down to the House bill. But no; the Senate conferee was inexorable, and blankets, the poor man's and the rich man's and all the other men's blankets, were put up to the same duty of 38 per cent. And so their argument about the poor man's blanket has gone glimmering in this bill. You can never raise it with good faith in your districts after this.

And then they go on and regulate the duty on cloths. The gentleman from Alabama, having gone through the cotton bill in the meantime, made a plea for a different duty on different kinds of cloths—fine and coarse—and for a difference between cloth and ready-made clothing. But the Senate conferees said no, and with that smiling disposition of his the leader on the other side had to yield to the contention and put a uniform duty on cloths and on clothing, forgetting that on every suit of clothes that is made there is a large waste of the amount of woolen cloth that is cut away and becomes nothing but rags, with rag prices on it.

And so it went on. It was pitiful, gentlemen. I have been on many a committee in this House where I have seen conferees willing to yield, and sometimes compelled to yield, but I never saw such willing yielding as there seemed to be in this instance, simply confirming our suspicion that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] had agreed on the thing, and the only argument that had convinced them, the only argument that was brought, was the necessity of the case; that they could not put this and that through the Senate; they could not put it up to the President unless the Senator from Wisconsin had his way—and they must put this bill up to the President, having proceeded so far and made this bluff—and then the only acknowledgment that was made in this committee when we did meet was that this was only "an experimental bill," being made with "blacksmith's tools," and all that sort of thing. And when the Senator from Wisconsin challenged the gentleman from Alabama to say what the difference should be in the duties on the different classes of goods, on goods differentiated from clothing, the Senator from Wisconsin said, "Why, I have not and you have not any sufficient information on which to make an intelligent schedule of that kind." "Oh, we will send it up to the President." It only emphasized, Mr. Speaker, from the beginning to the end of that conference the contention made on this side of the House of the necessity for gathering information. It was criminal on the part of these gentlemen to try to guess out a bill affecting over 500,000 people employed in those industries without awaiting the 1st of December until we could get a report of the Tariff Board.

Well, that they have to wait, Mr. Speaker, is my firm belief, and when that message comes to the House the American people will see why they have to wait until the 1st of December, and you will have spent your summer in plotting and counterplotting against the President of the United States in vain, because the people will not indorse any such summary, ignorant, undigested action as you present here through this bill. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The gentleman from Alabama has six minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] says that we accomplish nothing by the reduction on blankets. The rate in this bill on cloths and women's dress goods and other like articles is fixed at 49 per cent. The classification was fixed by the Senate conferees, but the language is the language of the House bill, and when we insisted on a different classification on blankets we finally placed it at 38 per cent, which is 11 per cent lower than the rate placed on dress goods and on women's dress goods and articles of that kind. Now, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] thinks it is no relief to the poor people of this country to have their taxes reduced 11 per cent, why I do not doubt that is the point of view from which he looks at it. He has never in any tariff bill he has every written in the history of this country, or taken part in writing, looked at the question from a standpoint of the people who have to pay the taxes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The only question that has confronted the gentleman from New York is the protected industries of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He says that the Senator from Wisconsin and myself "rushed" to an agreement on this bill.

I say that the gentleman from Wisconsin was very generous in his concessions; that he allowed us to write a bill on which the increased taxes to the American people are less than 6 per cent above that we fixed in the House bill. The reason the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself endeavored to settle the differences between the two Houses and bring in a bill here that could be presented to the President of the United States was that we recognized that the greatest monstrosity that had ever been written on the tariff books of this country was the Payne law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We recognized that when the gentleman from New York, knowing the public sentiment of this country, forced, under a gag rule, through this House Schedule K, when there were scores of men on that side of the House who would have voted against it if they had been given the chance, that he stood for the protected interests of this country and turned the back of his hand to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And yet the gentleman from New York says that we "rushed" to this agreement in order that we could agree on a bill that would put the President of the United States in a hole. The President of the United States has repudiated the Payne bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has said, not in so many words, but in effect, that Schedule K in the Payne tariff bill was a stench in the nostrils of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has said that it should be rewritten, that this monstrosity should be taken from the statute books, and when the Senator from Wisconsin and myself attempted to reconcile the differences between the two Houses and present a bill to the President of the United States to give him a chance to keep his word, his plighted word, to the American people, the leadership on that side of the House scoffs at our effort and hurls back the proposition that the President of the United States can not be relied on to keep the faith. [Loud and continued applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The gentleman from Alabama demands the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 90, answered "present" 8, not voting 83, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted in the affirmative.

The Clerk announced the following additional pair:

Until further notice:

Mr. JONES with Mr. MATTHEWS.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, being paired with my colleague, Mr. AUSTIN, I desire to vote "present." If he were present, I would vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was just in the rear here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wish to vote "present," that is all.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that if I had been present at the time my name was called, I would have voted against this bill, but I was called out of the Hall and did not return in time to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's statement is not in order.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present to the House for printing in the RECORD, under the rule, a conference report on the bill (H. R. 2958) popularly known as the publicity bill. (S. Doc. 96.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents for printing in the RECORD under the rule the conference report which he sends up. It will be printed in the RECORD and as a document.

The conference report (No. 147) and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2958) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same, amended to read as follows, viz:

SEC. 2. That section 8, as above amended, and sections 9 and 10 of said act be renumbered as sections 9, 10, and 11, and that a new section be inserted after section 7 of the said original act, to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The word 'candidate' as used in this section shall include all persons whose names are presented for nomination for Representative or Senator in the Congress of the United States at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement or election at any general or special election held in connection with the nomination or election of a person to fill such office, whether or not such persons are actually nominated, indorsed, or elected.

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general or special election, as Representative in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election at which candidates for Representatives are to be elected, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made, for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement at any general or special election, or election by the legislature of any State, as Senator in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election at which he is seeking indorsement, and not less than 5 nor more than 10 days before the day upon which the first vote is to be taken in the two houses of the legislature before which he is a candidate for election as Senator, file with the Secretary of the Senate at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

"Every such candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement or election at any general or special election, or for election by the legislature of any State, shall, within 15 days after such primary election or nominating convention, and within 30 days after any such general or special election, and within 30 days after the day upon which the legislature shall have elected a Senator, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or with the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, up to, on, and after the day of such primary election, nominating convention, general or special election, or election by the legislature, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination, indorsement, or election.

"Every such candidate shall include therein a statement of every promise or pledge made by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent or to whom he has given authority to make any such promise or pledge, before the completion of any such primary election or nominating convention or general or special election or election by the legislature, relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any position of trust, honor, or profit, either in the county, State, or Nation, or in any political subdivision thereof, or in any private or corporate employment, for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy, and if any such promise or pledge shall have been made the name or names, the address or addresses, and the occupation or occupations, of the person or persons to whom such promise or pledge shall have been made, shall be stated, together with a description of the position relating to which such promise or pledge has been made. In the event that no such promise or pledge has been made by such candidate, that fact shall be distinctly stated.

"No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall promise any office or position to any person, or to use his influence or to give his support to any person for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person, or of any person, in his candidacy; nor shall any candidate for Senator of the United States give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any money or thing of value to assist in procuring the nomination or election of any particular candidate for the legislature of the State in which he resides, but such candidate may, within the limitations and restrictions and subject to the requirements of this act, contribute to political committees having charge of the disbursement of campaign funds.

"No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, in procuring his nomination and election, any sum, in the aggregate, in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise under the laws of the State in which he resides: Provided, That no candidate for Representative in Congress shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum, in the aggregate, exceeding $5,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election; and no candidate for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum, in the aggregate, exceeding $10,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election: Provided further, That money expended by any such candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidate by the laws of the State in which he resides, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing (other than in newspapers), and distributing letters, circulars, and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service, shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this section, and shall not be considered any part of the sum herein fixed as the limit of expense and need not be shown in the statements herein required to be filed.

"The statements herein required to be made and filed before the general election, or the election by the legislature at which such candidate seeks election, need not contain items of which publicity is given in a previous statement, but the statement required to be made and filed after said general election or election by the legislature shall, in addition to an itemized statement of all expenses not theretofore given publicity, contain a summary of all preceding statements.

"Any person, not then a candidate for Senator of the United States, who shall have given, contributed, expended, used, or promised any money or thing of value to aid or assist in the nomination or election of any particular member of the legislature of the State in which he resides, shall, if he thereafter becomes a candidate for such office, or if he shall thereafter be elected to such office without becoming a candidate therefor, comply with all of the provisions of this section relating to candidates for such office, so far as the same may be applicable; and the statement herein required to be made, verified, and filed after such election shall contain a full, true, and itemized account of each and every gift, contribution, expenditure, and promise whenever made, in any wise relating to the nomination or election of members of the legislature of said State, or in any wise connected with or pertaining to his nomination and election of which publicity is not given in a previous statement.

"Every statement herein required shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths under the laws of the State in which he is a candidate, and shall be sworn to or affirmed by the candidate in the district in which he is a candidate for Representative, or the State in which he is a candidate for Senator in the Congress of the United States: Provided, That if at the time of such primary election, nominating convention, general or special election, or election by the State legislature said candidate shall be in attendance upon either House of Congress as a Member thereof, he may at his election verify such statements before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered within the time required herein shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act.

"This act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the nomination or election of candidates for the offices herein named, or to exempt any such candidate from complying with such State laws."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the title as amended will read as follows, viz: "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2958) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected" submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The first two lines of H. R. 2958 as it passed the House reads: "That sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made,' etc."

Senate amendment No. 1 strikes out "and" after the word "five," and Senate amendment No. 2 inserts "and eight" after the word "six," in the language above quoted. These amendments are made necessary by reason of the fact that the bill as it passed the House only amended sections 5 and 6 of the publicity act, while Senate amendment No. 4 amends section 8 of said act also. These two amendments make the first two lines of the bill read: "That sections 5, 6, and 8 of an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made,' etc."

The House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendments Nos. 1 and 2 and agrees to the same.

Senate amendment No. 3 strikes out "third" in line 5, page 2, of the bill and inserts "sixth," the effect of this amendment being to require committees operating in two or more States to file a supplemental statement of receipts and disbursements every sixth day after the first preelection statement instead of every third day, as provided in the bill as it passed the House. The House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 3 and agrees to the same.

Senate amendment No. 4 amends section 8 of the publicity act. Section 8 of existing law provides that certain persons, not candidates, may incur "all personal expenses for his traveling and for purposes incidental to traveling, for stationery and postage, and for telegraph and telephone service without being subject to the provisions of this act."

Senate amendment No. 4 is really a substitute for the present section 8 of the law. It inserts "necessary" before the words "personal expenses" and omits the phrase "and for purposes incidental to traveling" after the words "expenses for his traveling."

The House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 4 and agrees to same.

Senate amendments Nos. 5 and 6 constitute a new section to the publicity act, to be known as section 8 of said act.

These amendments require publicity of campaign contributions and expenditures by all candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, before and after nomination and election, and applies to nominations at primary elections or nominating conventions, and to indorsements or nominations or elections at general or special elections and to elections by legislatures.

The conferees agreed upon many minor amendments to Senate amendment No. 5, including the merging of the substance of Senate amendment No. 6 into said amendment No. 5.

The conferees also agreed upon an amendment to Senate amendment No. 5 exempting certain necessary personal expenses from the provisions of the new section to said act, including charges or fees imposed upon candidates by the law, expenses of travel and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing and distributing letters, circulars and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service.

As agreed upon and recommended by the conferees the Senate amendment No. 5 is in form a substitute for the original Senate amendment. It proposes a new section, to be known as section 8 (Senate amendment No. 5) of the publicity act, which will read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The word 'candidate' as used in this section shall include all persons whose names are presented for nomination for Representative or Senator in the Congress of the United States at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement or election at any general or special election held in connection with the nomination or election of a person to fill such office, whether or not such persons are actually nominated, indorsed, or elected.

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general or special election, as Representative in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election at which candidates for Representative are to be elected, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement at any general or special election, or election by the legislature of any State, as Senator in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election at which he is seeking indorsement, and not less than 5 nor more than 10 days before the day upon which the first vote is to be taken in the two houses of the legislature before which he is a candidate for election as Senator, file with the Secretary of the Senate at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

"Every such candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement or election at any general or special election, or for election by the legislature of any State, shall, within 15 days after such primary election or nominating convention, and within 30 days after any such general or special election, and within 30 days after the day upon which the legislature shall have elected a Senator, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or with the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, up to, on, and after the day of such primary election, nominating convention, general or special election, or election by the legislature, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination, indorsement, or election.

"Every such candidate shall include therein a statement of every promise or pledge made by him, or by anyone for him, with his knowledge and consent or to whom he has given authority to make any such promise or pledge, before the completion of any such primary election or nominating convention or general or special election or election by the legislature, relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any position of trust, honor, or profit, either in the county, State, or Nation, or in any political subdivision thereof, or in any private or corporate employment, for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy, and if any such promise or pledge shall have been made, the name or names, the address or addresses, and the occupation or occupations of the person or persons to whom such promise or pledge shall have been made, shall be stated, together with a description of the position relating to which such promise or pledge has been made. In the event that no such promise or pledge has been made by such candidate, that fact shall be distinctly stated.

"No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall promise any office or position to any person, or to use his influence or to give his support to any person for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person, or of any person, in his candidacy; nor shall any candidate for Senator of the United States give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any money or thing of value to assist in procuring the nomination or election of any particular candidate for the legislature of the State in which he resides, but such candidate may, within the limitations and restrictions and subject to the requirements of this act, contribute to political committees having charge of the disbursement of campaign funds.

"No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, in procuring his nomination and election any sum, in the aggregate, in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise under the laws of the State in which he resides: Provided, That no candidate for Representative in Congress shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum, in the aggregate, exceeding five thousand dollars in any campaign for his nomination and election; and no candidate for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum, in the aggregate, exceeding ten thousand dollars in any campaign for his nomination and election: Provided further, That money expended by any such candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing (other than in newspapers) and distributing letters, circulars, and posters and for telegraph and telephone service, shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this section, and shall not be considered any part of the sum herein fixed as the limit of expense and need not be shown in the statements herein required to be filed.

"The statements herein required to be made and filed before the general election, or the election by the legislature at which such candidate seeks election, need not contain items of which publicity is given in a previous statement, but the statement required to be made and filed after said general election or election by the legislature shall, in addition to an itemized statement of all expenses not theretofore given publicity, contain a summary of all preceding statements.

"Any person, not then a candidate for Senator of the United States, who shall have given, contributed, expended, used, or promised any money or thing of value to aid or assist in the nomination or election of any particular member of the legislature of the State in which he resides shall, if he thereafter becomes a candidate for such office, or if he shall thereafter be elected to such office without becoming a candidate therefor, comply with all of the provisions of this section relating to candidates for such office, so far as the same may be applicable; and the statement herein required to be made, verified, and filed after such election shall contain a full, true, and itemized account of each and every gift, contribution, expenditure, and promise, whenever made, in anywise relating to the nomination or election of members of the legislature of said State, or in anywise connected with or pertaining to his nomination and election of which publicity is not given in a previous statement.

"Every statement herein required shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths under the laws of the State in which he is a candidate, and shall be sworn to or affirmed by the candidate in the district in which he is a candidate for Representative, or the State in which he is a candidate for Senator in the Congress of the United States: Provided, That if at the time of such primary election, nominating convention, general or special election, or election by the State legislature said candidate shall be in attendance upon either House of Congress as a Member thereof he may at his election verify such statements before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act.

"This act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the nomination or election of candidates for the offices herein named, or to exempt any such candidate from complying with such State laws."

The title is amended so as to read: "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses."

The Senate recedes from its amendment No. 6, the same as agreed upon having been embodied in amendment No. 5.

It is recommended that the amendment of the Senate changing the title of the act as amended in conference be agreed to.

W. W. RUCKER,
M. F. CONRY,
M. E. OLMSTED,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order, and ask for a separate vote on each of the amendments——

The SPEAKER. The report is not before the House. It is merely presented for printing, under the rule.

Mr. WATKINS. I desire to reserve all points of order.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This is District day. If any gentleman has any District of Columbia business, it is in order to present it.

ASSIGNMENT OF SALARIES, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10649) to regulate the assignment of wages, salaries, and earnings in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all assignments of wages, salaries, or earnings made, or to take effect, or to be enforced in the District of Columbia shall be in writing, signed by the person to whom such wages, salaries, or earnings are due, which writing shall contain the correct date of the assignment and the amount assigned and the name, or names, of the person, firm, or corporation owing the wages, salaries, or earnings so assigned; and the assignment of wages, salaries, and earnings not earned at the time the assignment is made shall be null and void.

With the following committee amendments:

Amend by inserting, in line 9, after "-poration" and before the word "owing," the following: "including the Governments of the United States and of the District of Columbia."

Further amend by adding to the last line the following: "Provided, That no assignment of a salary or wage by a married man shall be valid unless his wife join him in the assignment thereof."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have just obtained a copy of this bill.

Referring to the last committee amendment, which provides—

That no assignment of a salary or wage by a married man shall be valid unless his wife join him in the assignment thereof.

I move to strike out all after the word "valid."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment to the last committee amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the last committee amendment by striking out all after the word "valid."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of that amendment is to provide that no assignment of a salary or wage by a married man shall be valid.

The trouble with people in the District of Columbia is in the matter of assigning their salaries. When a man is single it makes no particular difference. No one is dependent upon him; but where he has a wife and family, then it is certain that if he wishes to assign his salary it is a mere matter of form to obtain the signature of his wife to an assignment. If it is proposed to accomplish anything by this bill, then you should prohibit a married man from assigning his salary.

Congress has been deluged for many years with demands by Government employees for increases of salary. I believe the foundation of this difficulty lies in the fact that Government employees, and particularly married men, assign their salaries and mortgage their personal property, and pay such high interest that they can not make ends meet. They are charged exorbitant rates of interest and find themselves falling behind, so Congress is overwhelmed with demands for an increase of the salaries of Government employees. What are you going to do about it? My opinion is that if you will wipe out this practice, and reduce interest in the District of Columbia to a fixed legal rate, this demand will no longer exist.

I understand from what I read in the papers that there exists in this city to-day an organization having for its purpose the passage of a retirement bill, and that an ex-Senator from the State of Ohio is at the head of this organization. Its purpose is to obtain from Congress some legislation in the shape of old-age pensions, a civil pension list, so to speak.

One publication that I have seen stated that a fund of $100,000 had been raised to push along this proposed line of legislation. I wish to say to the Members of the House, that if you do not propose to enact legislation like this you should lay heavy hands on these Government employees who assign their salaries—those who fall into the hands of the loan sharks—and unless you do this the time will come when conditions in the District of Columbia will be utterly intolerable. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to one matter, and I will be brief.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask unanimous consent for the gentleman from Missouri, Dr. BARTHOLDT, to have 40 minutes to address the House on the subject of peace.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment before this bill is concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will have that opportunity. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes on the subject of peace. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, constitutionally the House of Representatives is not a part of the treaty-making power, hence it might be said that we have no official concern in the arbitration treaties which are now awaiting the sanction of the Senate. That is true in a technical sense. However, as representatives of the people, I hold we are most vitally interested in propositions which involve the great question of peace or war. Not only are the constituencies which we represent on this floor those of the Members of the other House, but we ourselves are their constituents. Most likely they are entirely willing to hear from us on this great question. There was a time when weighty international problems were decided and settled in the chancelleries here and abroad, especially abroad, without the knowledge of either the people or their representatives, but that time is rapidly passing. To-day the people want to know what is being done to promote their welfare, and nearly all Governments religiously observe the rule of giving them the fullest information. In the matter of the arbitration treaties the President and Secretary of State took the people into their confidence from the very start, and not only was the tentative draft published as soon as it was completed, but the people were advised, through the public press, of every important step taken in the course of the negotiations. In England great mass meetings were held in which the leaders of both the Government and the opposition parties took part and which declared enthusiastically in favor of the principle of a peaceful settlement, by arbitration, of all international controversies. From what I know of the true sentiment of the American people on this subject, they would have spoken out just as emphatically, only on a still larger scale, but for some inexplicable reason these public demonstrations were discouraged by some private citizens and influential friends of the cause. But in view of the publicity which our Government has given to this matter, the statement that there has been no opportunity for consultation about it is far from the truth and appears rather as a pretext for opposition.

I shall not now undertake to point out the great and lasting benefits of treaties which will secure, by judicial decision and law, the people's peace against the arbitrary will of rulers on the one hand and the passions of the mob on the other, nor is it necessary to extoll the example of lofty statesmanship which the three treaty-making powers hold up to the rest of the world for emulation.

I am sure there is to be found nowhere, not even in barracks and navy yards, a lack of appreciation or a lack of patriotic pride on account of the American initiative. If there were, as American citizens we would have reason to be ashamed of it.

My purpose to-day is to refer briefly to the various objections interposed against the treaties. As this subject has been discussed for half a century, the friends of arbitration were prepared for them and are able to meet them. If somehow I could bring the opposition together into some sort of a body, I would, figuratively speaking, cut off the head and the limbs and throw the trunk away. Not one of the arguments advanced against ratification, whether based on selfishness and prejudice or inspired by honest and conscientious scruples, is tenable in the face of the public weal and the sum total of human happiness which these international agreements will vouchsafe. Or shall we seriously listen to those who, like the big-stick philosopher of Oyster Bay, insist on the perpetuation of war or to those who for business or professional reasons want us to leave the door open for fight and bloodshed? Shall the capitalist who builds our battleships and the militarist whose profession is war be called in to decide the pending questions for us, or shall we rather be guided by considerations of "the greatest good for the greatest number"? But there is still another element of opposition. Some of our Irish friends are opposed to the treaty with Great Britain for reasons which need no explanation. To the credit of that sturdy element of our citizenship be it said that the great majority did not approve and could not be induced to join demonstrations which meant the obstruction of a great American policy by a European heritage. And there is good ground for hope that the concession of home rule to Ireland by a liberal British Government will soon reconcile whatever opposition manifests itself from that quarter.

I might interject here, it has been stated in the public prints that even our German-American citizens were opposed to these arbitration treaties. I stand here to refute that statement. The few that have been lead astray are simply the exception which proves the rule. The great National German-American Alliance, counting 2,000,000 citizens of this country as its members, have sent an appeal to the people of Germany asking them to induce their Government to join the league of peace by negotiating, the same as Great Britain and France have done, an arbitration treaty with the United States. I think that fact disposes of every doubt as to where the German-Americans stand on this great question. [Applause.]

A few days ago the country was given a genuine surprise by the action of a labor union in this city protesting against the arbitration treaties. I say a surprise, because it is well known that labor all over the world is more or less actively enlisted in the cause of arbitration and peace for the simple reason that labor has to bear the scars and pay the freight of every war. [Applause.] How the intelligent workers everywhere must have wondered at this peculiar attitude of their Washington comrades! Is it possible that because there is a navy yard here the employees have taken such a stand from fear that through the President's peace policy they will lose their bread and butter? Surely there is no cause for alarm on that score. A reduction of armaments is sure to follow the general adoption of arbitration, because the iron law of nature stipulates that what is no longer needed will eventually cease to exist, but it is hardly probable for the present generation to derive the full benefit of such a happy eventuality. The main reason assigned for the action just referred to is that our country would soon be overrun by cheap Japanese labor, which, after the adoption of arbitration with Japan, could no longer be kept out. This objection is based on false premises, of course, but as many other good people, especially on the Pacific coast, have been misled by it, it merits special mention.

I frankly admit that it might have been preferable to prefix a preamble to all our arbitration treaties, past as well as present, by which the high contracting parties mutually guarantee to each other, first, their independence; secondly, territorial integrity; and, thirdly, absolute sovereignty in domestic affairs. The older Members of the House will remember that I have advocated this precaution on several occasion on this floor. It would at once silence a number of fears and clear the deck for a better understanding. The reason why this preamble was not inserted in the present treaties is probably because there is absolutely no danger of the questions of independence and territorial integrity ever being raised as between the United States on the one hand and Great Britain and France on the other. And as to sovereignty in home affairs, that is already a well-recognized principle of international law. In other words, in accordance with well-established international rule, no nation can interfere with another in questions of internal policy, hence the United States has a perfect right to regulate the immigration question to suit ourselves. In accordance with this right we exclude the Chinese without a treaty and Japanese laborers in pursuance of one.

And the special treaty we have with Japan on this subject would, of course, not be superseded by any arbitration treaty into which the United States and Japan might enter hereafter. The question of the interpretation of a treaty might, of course, become the subject of arbitration, and let me suggest in this connection that no government, however reluctant in its recognition of the principle of arbitration, has ever objected to its application in the matter of the interpretation of treaties. To sum up the case, no nation can, under the authority of international law, make another nation change its internal policy with regard to any subject, and if it is a matter affecting the interests of the other nation, such as immigration, changes can be brought about only by friendly negotiation and voluntary concession, but can not be demanded as a matter of right. So neither our friends of the Pacific coast nor American labor need have any fear on that score. No international tribunal or commission would ever deny to any nation the right to regulate ad libitum its own domestic affairs, or include within its dicta any decision bearing on a settled and internationally well recognized policy, such, for instance, as the Monroe doctrine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me briefly explain the treaties according to my understanding of their letter and spirit. The friends of arbitration have contended from the beginning that after a brief trial of the judicial system of settling international disputes the area of arbitration would soon be enlarged, and that contention has proved true. The treaties now in force expressly exempt from arbitration all so-called questions of vital interest and honor, and thus leave the door wide open for war to be ushered in, because any question, however trivial, might be puffed up, if there be a disposition to fight, to the proportions of one of vital interest or national honor. These exemptions, therefore, rendered arbitration practically futile. The pending treaties exempt nothing and broadly stipulate that all differences "which are justiciable in their nature"—and happily this is the only qualification—shall be submitted to arbitration.

This is a great step in advance on the theory that if arbitration is a good thing in any respect, why not in all respects? If judicial decisions are right nationally, why not also internationally? And have you ever given thought to the contradictory position of a nation which compels its citizens to go to court for the redress of wrongs, forbidding them to take the law in their own hands, but refuses to obey this rule of conduct itself by resorting, or maintaining the right to resort, to violence and war in the prosecution of its alleged rights? To-day, Mr. Speaker, every civilized government is guilty of such duplicity, and no one can measure the extent to which it encourages disrespect of our social order and increases the difficulty of maintaining even our domestic peace, not to mention the fighting spirit of the human animal which is kept alive by what the nations recognize abroad but forbid at home, namely, the application of force. By the new arbitration treaties this contradiction, I may say this immoral contradiction, is wiped out, the application of law and justice is made the general rule, and force is practically outlawed.

Before I speak of the technical objections which, according to public prints, have been raised against certain provisions of the treaties, permit me to point out their next great feature, second in importance only to the first article, which, as I have shown, provides for compulsory arbitration of all differences, and therefore might well bear the headline, "Let us have peace." That feature is the joint high commission of inquiry. Let us hope that the members of the other House, in their eagerness to pick flaws in the Magna Charta of peace agreed upon by three great governments, will leave unchanged the article which provides, in case of any controversy, for an impartial investigation of the facts. In making this provision the contracting governments again take high moral ground. Up to the present day each nation has presumed to be the judge in its own cause, an idea obnoxious to every sense of justice and absolutely intolerable according to the jurisprudence of every civilized country. Yet in international affairs it is the common practice to-day. That an impartial deliberative body, composed of learned jurists of both contending parties, will be a better and safer judge of the facts in a case as well as of what is right and wrong than a single nation whose passion might have been aroused and its judgment blinded by some unfortunate incident of an international nature needs, I believe, no demonstration. So here again is international conduct brought in harmony with national conduct, which compels contending parties to submit their differences to impartial judges to them unknown.

The institution of such commissions has been one of the postulates of the peace movement from its very inception, not alone for the reason above stated, but because an investigation allows cooling time to elapse, during which the peaceful sentiment of a nation can be marshaled and all the moral forces united for compelling a peaceful settlement of the question at issue. It was one of the provisions of a model arbitration treaty which I have had the honor to draft and to present to the Brussels and the London conferences of the Interparliamentary Union, and I remember well how eloquently at the latter conference a distinguished American delegate, Mr. William Jennings Bryan, advocated its adoption. Honor to whom honor is due. Through Mr. Bryan's support I carried the day at London; and I shall never forget the applause he received when he said:

> Man excited is very different from man calm. [Applause.] When men are mad, they swagger around and say what they can do; when they are calm, they consider what they ought to do. [Applause.] The investigation gives time for the claims of conscience and reason to assert themselves.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, we were confronted by a difficulty which has a direct bearing upon the present situation. The arbitration treaties submitted by President Roosevelt to the Senate had come to naught because the Senate had changed them and insisted on being consulted in each particular case. This stickling for a prerogative proved a great obstacle to the further progress of the arbitration movement, for every student of this question knows that arbitration, in order to be effective or even to be made possible, must be resorted to without delay; that is, before the passions of the people are aroused. To refer an international dispute to a legislative body for discussion will surely add fuel to the excitement and passion of the populace, and will thus tend to render a question which might easily be arbitrated incapable of such peaceable adjudication. It was for this reason that the draft of an arbitration treaty I have just referred to specified all the several questions to be arbitrated, and we were in hopes that, if the nations at The Hague would agree to it, the Senate by its ratification would confer wholesale authority upon the Executive to enter into arbitration agreements in all the cases specified in the treaty. The same authority is impliedly to be conferred on the Executive in the pending treaties, and on this point I wish to make some special observations.

Each nation is jealous of its sovereignty, and with European rulers particularly this is sacred ground. Yet every international agreement means a surrender of part of that sovereignty, because to the extent of the terms of such an agreement the sovereign power is circumscribed. You may well imagine that this fact has proved a great obstacle, especially in Europe, to the progress of arbitration, for if the American Senate is solicitous as to its prerogatives, European monarchs are much more so with regard to their sovereign power.

Mr. DONOHOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DONOHOE. Does the gentleman believe that the Peace Trust would make for human freedom?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is not exactly in line with where I was in my speech, but I shall be glad to discuss the question with the gentleman at the end of my remarks.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. I understand that the gentleman is now arguing that the power of deciding what shall be the subject of war shall be conferred on some foreign court.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, not at all. Under the pending treaties we agree to submit to arbitration every question, but before we resort to arbitration article 2 provides that a high joint commission may be appointed, to be constituted of three members of the one contending country and three members of the other contending country, and these six men shall form a joint high commission to determine the facts in the case, and also the question whether the controversy shall be submitted to arbitration or not. It is further provided that if five of these men agree that the question is arbitrable, it shall be submitted to arbitration.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman think that that in a way takes away the power of Congress to declare war, which is a constitutional right?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I think not. For one I would gladly, if conditions of the world were such as to justify it, waive the right to declare war.

Mr. JACKSON. Is it within the power of Congress to do that?

Only the people can amend the Constitution. Let me trouble the gentleman with a concrete illustration along the line of what he has been arguing. Suppose that Japan should accept the President's invitation and become a member, and the labor question should become an international question. Would not it be within the power of this commission to take out of the hands of Congress the jurisdiction and power to settle that labor question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No. If the gentleman had done me the honor to listen to my remarks he would have heard me say that under a well-established rule of international law no policy—and what the gentleman refers to is a policy—of any government or any people can ever be subject to arbitration, because it is a nation's internal affair. A policy can never be arbitrated.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me one suggestion? The treaty embraces only justiciable questions. The admission of immigrants is not a justiciable question; it is a political question, and the joint high commission are to determine what are not and what are questions of a justiciable character and what may be of a political character, and political questions are not embraced in the treaty.

Mr. JACKSON. That is just what we are talking about. Who settles that question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I did not take the floor to listen to what my friend may have to say, but to say what I have to say.

Mr. JACKSON. I desire only to complete the sentence.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield at this time. If I have some time left at the conclusion of my remarks then I will be very glad to yield.

When interrupted I was speaking of the jealous regard European rulers have for their sovereignty. Yet the great cause of the world's peace has wrung concession after concession from them, and the great and holy purpose to be subserved will, let us hope, also induce our Senate to subordinate technicalities to the common good of the human family. Certain it is, Mr. Speaker, that you can not eat the cake and have it, too. In other words, we can not enter into international agreements and at the same time maintain intact in every respect what is called sovereign power or senatorial prerogative. As the individual surrenders natural rights in order to live in a community of individuals, so a nation must sacrifice part of its sovereignty in order to meet the obligations imposed by agreements with the family of nations. And remember that it is a sacrifice solely in the interest of the common welfare, in behalf of the greatest boon of all the nations—their peace. Besides, Mr. Speaker, a close study of the new treaties will disclose the fact that the prerogatives of the Senate have been as carefully guarded as they were in the old, because where actual arbitration is resorted to the special agreement in each case is subject to the "advice and consent of the Senate," and it is only where an investigation through a commission is provided that the Executive asks the Senate to confer upon it wholesale authority to so refer a question for investigation.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at this point? My question is very pertinent to this subject.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Very well, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMILL. Is it not a fact that these treaties in the section which has been stricken out by the Senate committee divests the Senate of its constitutional power of saying what questions shall be arbitrable and what not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker I thought I had answered that question in what I have stated here this afternoon.

Mr. HAMILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I said there are two reasons why the Senate should consent to this sacrifice. The first is that no nation should hereafter insist on being the judge in its own cause; that every nation, if its cause is just, should be willing to submit to the judgment of an unbiased, impartial tribunal, or a commission representing it and the other contending party. [Applause.] That is one reason.

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; and now, Mr. Speaker, does not that divest the United States Senate of the power conferred upon it by the Constitution, and thus by treaty alter the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have just stated that in order to secure peace in this world we will have to divest ourselves of something. The individual divests himself of certain natural rights for the purpose of living in a community of nations, and a nation must divest itself of certain inherent rights, to the extent of the terms of the treaty or the agreements which may be entered into with other nations. We will come to that conception of things sooner or later whether or no. The evolution has been that way, and neither the prerogatives of the Senate nor the sovereignty of European rulers can stop it. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMILL. Would the gentleman agree to arbitrate questions arising under the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have referred to that, and the gentleman has not heard me. Now, let me continue. I stated that a reservation is made in case of special agreements, and the advice and consent of the Senate must be obtained before the President can refer any case to arbitration; and this reservation in regard to the Senate, which our Government had to make under the Constitution, explains, by the way, why in the British treaty the government of the self-governing dominion whose interests are affected is to be consulted and why in the French treaty it is stipulated that the agreement shall be "subject to the procedure required by the constitutional laws of France." These reservations, in other words, are made to place the high contracting parties on an equality. What the consent of the American Senate is to Great Britain and France is the consent of the British dominion that may be affected on the compliance with the constitutional laws of France to us.

In the short time allotted to me I could touch only very slightly the arguments in favor of the position which our great President and the Secretary of State have taken on this all-important question, but if the House will grant me the time, I shall come back to this subject on some future occasion.

I hold, Mr. Speaker, that the signing of these arbitration treaties marks a new era in the history of the world, which will come to regard brutal war as a nightmare of bygone days. It is the greatest step in advance made since the abolition of human slavery in the direction of a higher and better civilization. [Applause.] As an American I am proud of the fact that an American President has taken the initiative in the great movement for more permanent peace, namely, a peace based on law, not on force, a movement which will eventually result in relieving the human family of intolerable burdens and free the civilized world from the physical and moral damage of war. If President Taft succeeds in his world-redeeming policy, he will rank with Abraham Lincoln for having stopped man killing as the great martyr President stopped man selling. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CONRY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, if it was customary in such matters to do so, I would submit a resolution to the consideration of the House, reading as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives approve the pending arbitration treaties between the United States and Great Britain and France as instruments to lessen the possibilities and to promote the cause of more permanent peace; and further

Resolved, That as the direct representatives of the people we call upon the Senate of the United States to ratify these treaties without change and without further delay.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad now to yield to anyone who desires to ask me any question.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Missouri explain a little more clearly to me why the Monroe doctrine could not be considered under this arbitration treaty.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. To answer my friend's question I am afraid I shall have to repeat myself. I stated that the Monroe doctrine is a policy of this Government. It is true that it affects other nations, but as soon as the other nations are willing and ready to recognize that policy, then it seems to me that policy is safe. We have evidence that not only Great Britain but nearly all the other great nations of Europe have given their silent consent to that policy of the Monroe doctrine, and consequently as a policy that matter will never be subject to arbitration. Let me add right here for the information of some gentlemen who may not have paid attention to this matter. The Monroe doctrine is not nearly as important to-day as it was even 10 years ago for the simple reason that at The Hague conference it was determined—all nations agreeing in that determination and it is now a part of the international law of the world—that contractual debts could no longer be collected by force in either Central or South America. That takes out of the Western Hemisphere nearly every element of friction which has heretofore caused trouble, and therefore, I say, the Monroe doctrine is to-day not as important as it was, and the European powers are ready to recognize it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Jersey rise?

Mr. HAMILL. To ask that the time of my friend, the previous speaker, be extended for a sufficient time to answer a brief question.

Mr. GUDGER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized to resume the consideration of the pending bill. The question when the gentleman from Missouri began his speech was on the adoption of an amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, and the Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky yielded to the gentleman from Missouri.

ASSIGNMENT OF SALARIES, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, the bill which is before the House is H. R. 10649, to regulate the assignment of wages, salaries, and earnings in the District of Columbia. This bill is a copy of an act recently passed by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri. It is intended to obviate or do away with some of the most trying evils relating to the employment of salaried men and wage earners. It is intended to strike a blow, and a very effective and successful blow, at the loan shark. One of the greatest sources of evil in the loan-shark business is the sale of salaries. This salary selling and salary buying is not only an evil to the wage earner himself and a demoralizing influence in his employment, but it is a great evil to the family of the wage earner and frequently to the local merchants of the community. The method usually followed by these salary buyers is to take an assignment in blank of a man's wages with his signature on the bottom, but without any designation of how much he is earning, or where he had been employed, or who his employer is. They take this with the express or tacit understanding that if default is made on the payment of the loan they are to enforce their claim against the man's wages.

It frequently happens that the contract expressly provides that this assignment shall be good until the entire obligation, with all its accrued interest and penalties, are paid. The result is that if a man goes from one employer to another this obligation may follow him, and suddenly the employer may be confronted with an assignment of his wages made some time previously. I have always believed there was considerable doubt about the legality of the assignment of unearned wages. I know it has been held by the courts as to a public officer that the assignment of unearned wages is void, but where the obligation arises under a private contract with a private employer the assignment of unearned wages is valid. It has always seemed to me there should be a distinction between unearned wages generally and wages to be earned where the party is under a present contract of employment out of which the wages will arise. It is certainly true if a man sells his wages——

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. In a moment I will be glad to yield. If he sells his wages when he is not under contract of employment, but sells some prospective wages he expects to earn in the future, he is doing no more than selling himself into slavery.

And if he has done that thing, if he has sold his wages before they are earned, where are the butcher and the baker and the landlord and the doctor going to get their money for looking after the physical wants of his family?

Now, this bill has two parts to it, and when I have explained it briefly I am going to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. The first part applies to earned wages, which we all concede a man has a property right in. The assignment of those shall be in writing, shall designate the employer, and shall put in the date of the assignment. A man has a property right to a certain extent in the wages he has earned. The pay time of the employer may not have come around, and for various reasons he may have a desire to assign his wages. He has a property right in them, and no great harm can ensue from his selling, under proper regulations, the wages he has earned, especially if the transaction is bona fide by putting in the name of the employer and date of actual assignment.

Now, as to unearned wages, which is the second part of the bill, the bill provides that the assignment of unearned wages shall be void. In other words, it stops this thing of a man selling himself in the future into some indefinite slavery.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield on the first proposition for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I promised to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina, but if it is a brief question, I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a very brief question. Would you permit the assignment of earned wages of the head of a family without the consent of his family? I can see where it would lead under the laws of our State to a good deal of difficulty.

Mr. BORLAND. The committee, with my full approbation, have added a committee amendment to the bill that provides, in the case of a married man, that the sale of his earned wages shall be joined in by his wife. [Applause.] I accept that amendment, and with it I think the bill is perfected.

Now, my friend from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] has moved an amendment proposing to abolish the right to sell the wages of a married man. In my judgment, we have a tremendous evil to deal with in the assignment of unearned wages. When we come to earned wages, which a man has a property right in, I believe if we safeguard that by providing the assignment shall be joined in by his wife, we have gone just as far in that direction as we ought to go.

Mr. FINLEY. As to the earned wages, what does the gentleman mean by that? Does he mean wages that have not been paid to him, but that will be paid by the end of the month? I ask the gentleman what he means by earned and unearned wages? If the wages are earned, what is the necessity for an assignment of them?

Mr. BORLAND. If the wages are earned, what is the necessity for an assignment of them? I do not know how large a city the gentleman lives in, but here is the proposition briefly: If the gentleman were employed by a railroad company, whose pay day was the 10th or 15th of the succeeding month, and had earned 20 or 30 days' pay, but the pay day had not come around, he has a property right which under circumstances he desires to dispose of——

Mr. FINLEY. I think I understand the gentleman's definition now. I want to ask this: Is it not true that in the District of Columbia exorbitant rates of interest charges are made for loans on wages, both earned and unearned, under the gentleman's definition of wages earned and unearned? Is not that true?

Mr. BORLAND. I know it is true. I am very certain of it.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, there is no necessity for safeguarding an unmarried man. We agree to that, do we not?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not agree to that. I think the unmarried man may get into demoralizing habits in selling his unearned pay, and demoralize himself and prove a burden to his employer.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think that if the married man was prohibited from assigning his salary or wages in the District of Columbia it would result in a great benefit to a great majority of people in the District?

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman that I do not believe that is necessary, for this reason: The man who loans on wages does not loan on the current month's wages, because it stands to reason if the employee could get along on his current month's wages he would not borrow money. If he is getting $50 or $60 or $100 a month he will want to borrow $150 or $200. It is an absolute necessity, you will find, that the loan shark must take security on future wages. He can not accomplish any very great evil or any great oppression by taking security on wages that are earned at the time he takes the security.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, would not this amendment as to married men put an end to that evil?

Mr. BORLAND. Well, I say the evil the gentleman speaks of is——

Mr. FINLEY. I mean the amendment I have offered—would it not put an end to that evil?

Mr. BORLAND. The evil the gentleman speaks of is largely imaginary. There is no special evil in the assignment of earned salaries.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman says that my amendment contemplates an imaginary evil. Is not the gentleman mistaken about that when he says the evil is imaginary? Are there not real evils existing here in the city of Washington?

Mr. BORLAND. I have already expressed what I believe in that case, that the loan shark does not do business on assignments of earned wages, but of unearned wages.

Mr. FINLEY. Is there anything in this bill that limits the rate of interest that should be charged?

Mr. BORLAND. That is not in this bill at all.

Mr. FINLEY. What law covers it?

Mr. BORLAND. This bill regulates the assignment of wages, not the rate of interest charged on loans.

Mr. FINLEY. There is no law that covers it, is there?

Mr. BORLAND. I concede that there are a great many evils in this business that ought to be reached, but they are not within the purview of this particular bill.

Mr. FINLEY. To-day is there any law that permits an assignment of wages by an employee of the United States Government? Is that in this bill?

Mr. BORLAND. There is no law on the statute books anywhere that accomplishes or even touches the purposes of this bill. As the law stands now, it has been decided in the District of Columbia that a public officer can not sell unearned pay, but he can sell earned pay, or a private employee can sell both earned and unearned pay.

Mr. FINLEY. Just at that point: Does not this bill by express provision legalize the assignment by an official of the District of his pay where it is not legalized now? Does it not legalize the assignment of his salary or his pay?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think so.

Mr. FINLEY. I understood the gentleman to make that statement.

Mr. BORLAND. No; the gentleman misunderstands the bill. The law now is that a public officer can not sell unearned pay. This law provides that nobody can sell unearned pay. There is no conflict there. The law now is that a public officer may sell earned pay. This bill says he can do that, but it must be done in writing.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not this bill say "earned or unearned"?

Mr. BORLAND. I wish the gentleman would study the bill a little more closely. Then I could answer him more fully.

Mr. FINLEY. I did read it.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, on the question of the sale of earned salary, the right to sell it, as I believe, is an inviolable right, and I believe a man has just as much a property right in a salary that he has earned, even though the employer has not come to the point of paying it, as he has in his house or in his horse. The only safeguard we ought to throw around the married man in the assignment of his earned salary is that we should require his wife to join him in the assignment. Now, as to unearned salary, if a man commences to sell his unearned salary he goes on selling it, and it not only demoralizes him, but it also demoralizes the service he is in. He is not working for his employer any more, whether it be the District of Columbia or a private employer, but he is working for a loan shark; he is working each month in order to take down his wages to a loan shark. He is not giving the loyalty and fidelity of service he ought to give to his employer. The practice is demoralizing to him. Besides that, his wages are tied up. What does the landlord or landlady do for his board at the end of the month in trying to get it out of him? What does the butcher and the doctor and the other people in the community do when they try to get money from him which is due them? This law has been the most popular, the most universally credited to be a just law that has been passed recently in the State of Missouri.

Now, I desire to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no time to yield. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] can yield.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to yield it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yielded all my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri can yield it back.

Mr. BORLAND. I yield back the unexpired time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this bill. I think it is a good measure, and I would not undertake to improve it by amendment without having studied it; but I want to call the attention of the House, and particularly of the District Committee, to what I think is an evil that ought to be remedied by statute. I have heard that there are bureau chiefs or heads of bureaus who borrow money from their subordinates. The standing or efficiency record of these employees is made out by these chiefs, who borrow the money from them. This creates an interest between them which I am sure has had the effect to prevent some men and women from getting as good records as they should have, because they have not had the money to loan, while others more fortunate have had the desired funds.

There is another thing which grows up out of such a practice. The newspapers state that a regular gambling game was run here in one of the bureaus. Now, I am not a gambler and never was, but I have always heard that gambling leads to borrowing, and I do think this matter ought to be remedied by proper legislation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the gentleman say that there is such a condition that the chiefs loan to the subordinates, or the subordinates loan to the chiefs?

Mr. SIMS. I am advised that the chiefs borrow from the subordinates. Of course, the subordinates must loan, or the chiefs could not borrow.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is a peculiar condition.

Mr. SIMS. And I have heard of cases where the chief wanted to borrow and did not get the money, and had then treated that particular person without the consideration to which he was entitled. I do not want any committee to investigate this matter, but we can and ought to pass a proper law, without any investigation, to prevent borrowing by one Government employee from another.

Mr. FINLEY. The case cited by the gentleman was substantially a holdup, was it not?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, the gentleman can construe it as well as I can.

Mr. FINLEY. It was a holdup, under the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman could not stop me from borrowing $5 of him if I could get it, could he?

Mr. SIMS. I do not think it would take a law in a case of that kind, where there would be inability to comply with the request. [Laughter.]

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the civil-service law already cover that point, in providing that no thing of value shall be given for the purpose of obtaining a report?

Mr. SIMS. It is not done in that way. It is not given for that purpose; but where that condition exists, some employees believe they have not received the record standing they should have received, in consequence of having no money to loan.

Mr. JACKSON. It seems to me if the law were properly enforced, those things could be made to appear to be a valuable consideration.

Mr. SIMS. I think that absolute discharge from the service should be the penalty.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, all I desire to do is to offer an amendment to this bill. I understand there are some committee amendments pending.

The SPEAKER. To which amendment does the gentleman propose his amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I propose to offer an amendment to the bill. I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Kentucky in yielding me time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk may read the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "due," insert "and shall be witnessed by at least two persons."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is merely to authenticate the signature of the person making the assignment. The business of borrowing money on salaries and making assignment of wages and salary by clerks of the Government is deplorable, and as many safeguards as possible should be thrown about it. There have been instances in my own knowledge where loans have been made on wages where there has been a dispute as to the signature of the assignor; disputes have arisen between husband and wife, between employer and employee, and it seems to me that in this particular instance, where we propose to safeguard the assignments, we should have at least two witnesses to the signature. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment and have it read at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, at the end of line 4, insert: "Provided further, That no assignment of salary or wage shall be valid if a usurious rate of interest is charged for the loan in connection with which the assignment is made."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one that is much needed in this city. It is a bill that will give some relief. There are others needed along the line of regulating the loan of money at highly illegal rates of interest. There ought to be a law passed protecting the people against these people who loan money on chattels and furniture at illegal rates of interest, in many instances as high as 10 per cent a month. It is to be hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment I have presented will be adopted. It will in a way protect a great many of the people who make assignment of wages and who now only receive half and less than half their wages, while the balance goes to the people making the loan.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky can not move the previous question on the bill and all the amendments that have been read for information unless he asks unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered on the bill and the amendments pending. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask for a vote on the first committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on adopting the first committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the first committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] to the second committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of line 4 after the word "valid."

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the second committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the second committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "due," insert "and shall be witnessed by at least two persons."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, at the end of line 4, add:
"Provided further, That no assignment of salary or wage shall be valid if a usurious rate of interest is charged for the loan in connection with which the assignment is made."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INSURANCE COMPANIES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12737) to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia regarding insurance.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 646, chapter 18, Code of Law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the semicolon in line 20 the words "and such other information as said superintendent may require," so as to read:

"SEC. 646. Duties of superintendent, etc.: It shall be the duty of said superintendent to see that all laws of the United States relating to insurance or insurance companies, benefit orders, and associations doing business in the District are faithfully executed; to keep on file in his office copies of the charters, declarations of organization, or articles of incorporation of every insurance company, benefit association, or order, including life, fire, marine, accident, plate-glass, steam-boiler, burglary, cyclone, casualty, live-stock, credit, and maturity companies or associations doing business in the District; and before any such insurance company, association, or order shall be licensed to do business in the District it shall file with said superintendent a copy of its charter, declaration of organization, or articles of incorporation, duly certified in accordance with law by the insurance commissioners or other proper officers of the State, Territory, or nation where such company or association was organized; also a certificate setting forth that it is entitled to transact business and assume risks and issue policies of insurance therein; and if its principal office is located outside the District it shall appoint some suitable person, resident in said District, as its attorney, upon whom legal process may be served; and such other information as said superintendent may require; and the fees for filing with the superintendent such papers as are required by this section shall be $10, to be paid to the collector of taxes, and no other license fee shall be required of such insurance companies or associations except as provided in sections 654 and 655 of this subchapter. Said superintendent shall have power to make such rules and regulations, subject to the general supervision of the commissioners, not inconsistent with law, as to make the conduct of each company in the same line of insurance conform in doing business in the District."

With the following amendments:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "therein" insert "and such other information as said superintendent may require;".

Page 2, line 21, after the word "served" strike out "; and such other information as said superintendent may require," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, however, That should said company or association neglect or refuse to appoint such attorney, or should such attorney absent himself from the District, said legal process may be served upon the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia,".

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the amendments will be put in gross. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMODORE BARNEY CIRCLE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5618) to confirm the name of Commodore Barney Circle for the circle located at the eastern end of Pennsylvania Avenue SE., in the District of Columbia, and inasmuch as a similar bill has been passed by the Senate I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from further consideration of the bill (S. 306) to confirm the name of Commodore Barney Circle for the circle located at the eastern end of Pennsylvania Avenue SE., in the District of Columbia, and to substitute that bill in lieu of the bill H. R. 5618 and that the bill H. R. 5618 do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the circle located at the eastern end of Pennsylvania Avenue SE., in the District of Columbia, now known as public reservations Nos. 55 and 56, shall be officially known and designated "Commodore Barney Circle."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California, Mr. KAHN.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the residents of the southeastern section of Washington have asked for this legislation. There is a circle at the eastern end of Pennsylvania Avenue. It is at present unnamed, and, to my mind, it is eminently fitting and proper that it should be officially designated "Commodore Barney Circle." During the War of 1812 a powerful British fleet came into Chesapeake Bay and forced the few American vessels under command of Commodore Joshua Barney, that were protecting Washington, into the Patuxent River. This occurred in August, 1814. The British vessels were very much larger than the American ships, and they practically bottled up the American fleet in that stream. About August 21 the British troops, under command of Gen. Ross, of the British Army, and Admiral Cockburn, of the British Navy, disembarked at a point called Benedicts and started on their march to capture the city of Washington. Commodore Barney, who was in command of the American flotilla, hearing of this movement, immediately disembarked his men and hastened toward Washington to protect the city. They took possession of this very circle and pointed their guns toward the other side of the old bridge across the Eastern Branch, at the foot of Pennsylvania Avenue SE., from which direction they expected the British to approach. President Madison and members of his Cabinet went to the point where the American sailors and marines were stationed and had a conference with them. While this conference was in progress word came that the British had marched toward Bladensburg, whereupon Commodore Barney immediately asked permission to march his forces to that point. Permission having been granted, he started to meet the British, and came up with the American militiamen just at the boundary line between Maryland and the District of Columbia. Here he placed his forces in battle array.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it the purpose, following the passage of this bill, to follow it with another asking for an appropriation for a statue?

Mr. KAHN. I have no knowledge of such intent. It seems that after Commodore Barney had taken his position on the field of battle most of the Maryland militiamen ran away without having fired a single shot. The battle was ironically called the "Bladensburg Races." Both British and American authorities assert that if the soldiers had fought as well as the sailors and marines under Commodore Barney, the chances are that the city of Washington would not have been burned. As it was, Commodore Barney held the British in check for some little time. His cannon played havoc among the enemy, of whom 500 were either killed or wounded. The commodore only had about 500 in his entire command. He himself had his horse killed under him, and then was severely wounded in the thigh and was taken prisoner on the field of battle. The bullet could not be extracted, and it is believed that the wound he received resulted in his ultimate death four years later.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Where is this circle?

Mr. KAHN. At the eastern end of Pennsylvania Avenue, in southeast Washington.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything on it now?

Mr. KAHN. Nothing whatever.

Mr. MANN. No statue of Commodore Barney?

Mr. KAHN. Nothing whatever; not even the old earthworks that he erected when he planted his cannon there to keep the British out of Washington.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think this bill should be brought under that rule requiring all bills making a charge upon the Treasury to be considered in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think that this makes a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Well, I shall do my best to prevent it from being a charge on the Treasury, but, after all, I have no doubt it will.

Mr. KAHN. The citizens of southeast Washington have not expressed any desire to have a statue there.

Mr. MANN. It shows they are very smooth.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman has been here longer than I; he has perhaps known them better than I.

Mr. MADDEN. Perhaps they have not taken the gentleman from California into their confidence yet. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, understands it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, it is narrated that when Gen. Ross and Admiral Cockburn came up with the doughty commodore and learned his rank and station, the former exclaimed, "I am very glad to meet you." Whereupon Barney promptly rejoined, "I am not at all glad to meet you, sir." He was promptly paroled, after having had his wound dressed by a British surgeon, and personally agreed to see that the officers and men of the British forces who were wounded in the battle should be properly exchanged when they were reported ready for duty. The corporation of the city of Washington presented Commodore Barney with a sword as a testimonial of the high sense they entertained of his distinguished gallantry and good conduct at the Battle of Bladensburg. The States of Pennsylvania, Georgia, and Kentucky also adopted resolutions by their respective legislatures commending the splendid services of this hero of Bladensburg.

Commodore Barney had also taken an active part in the Revolutionary War. He participated in a large number of naval actions during the struggle for independence, and as captain of the George Washington was sent on a number of hazardous expeditions for the Colonies by order of the Superintendent of Finance, Robert Morris, who placed the utmost confidence in the bravery and the ability of the young naval officer. Barney invariably executed his orders with skill and dispatch, and won the esteem and admiration of the leaders of the Revolution.

After the War of 1812 he determined to settle on a tract of land he had acquired in Hardin County, Ky., in 1794. With his wife and her sister he visited his property in 1816, and spent nearly a year on his new estate. Returning to Baltimore he proceeded to wind up his business affairs in that city, and in October, 1818, started with all his family for the new home. He was taken ill at Brownsville, Pa., but managed to proceed as far as Pittsburgh. Here, on the night of November 30, 1818, he was taken with a violent spasm, and on the following morning a second spasm occurred, during which he suddenly expired. It is eminently proper that this bill to give his name to the circle at the eastern end of Pennsylvania Avenue should pass. [Applause.]

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2932. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to sell the old post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., and, in the event of such sale, to enter into a contract for the construction of a suitable post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., without additional cost to the Government of the United States; and

S. 3152. An act extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6747. An act to reenact an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across St. Croix River, and to extend the time for commencing and completing the said structure; and

H. R. 11303. An act for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 7.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit in the name and on behalf of the city of Key West, Fla., to all foreign nations an invitation to visit that city and participate in the celebration of the completion of the Florida East Coast Railway Co.'s line connecting the mainland of the United States with the said island city of Key West, both by their official representatives and citizens generally, and particularly to invite such foreign countries to send such of their respective naval vessels as may be practicable and convenient to participate in such celebration so to be held, beginning on the 2d day of January, A. D. 1912: Provided, That before the extending of said invitations the President shall be satisfied that suitable provisions have been made by said city for the entertainment of the parties or representatives of such Governments or countries so invited.

Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to direct such portion of the Army and Navy of the United States as may be convenient and practicable to be present at Key West at the time of such proposed celebration and participate therein.

Resolved further, That under no circumstances is the United States to assume, be subject to, or charged with any expense of any character whatsoever in or about or connected with such proposed celebration.

PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC PEACE AND PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8622.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8622) to amend section 4 of "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," approved July 29, 1892, as to kiteflying.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to set up or fly any kite, or set up or fly any fire balloon or parachute in or upon or over any street, avenue, alley, open space, public inclosure, or square within the limits of the District of Columbia, under a penalty of not more than $10 for each and every offense."

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "set" after the word "to" in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the word "send."

Further amend said line by striking out the words "any kite, or set up or fly," which words are the sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth words of said line.

Further amend by striking out in lines 9 and 10 the words "or upon or over any street, avenue, alley, or open space, public inclosure, or square within the limits of."

Further amend by inserting after the word "or" at the end of line 8 the word "fire."

Further amend by striking out the word "kiteflying" at the end of the title and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: "as to the flying of fire balloons or fire parachutes."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand these amendments, which have been hurriedly read, provide that the law shall only apply to a kite that takes up some fire in connection with it and would not prevent a boy from innocently flying a kite.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill is left so the boys can fly their kites, but they can not send up fire balloons.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am for the boy having permission to fly his kite.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. So am I.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that in the body of the bill he also amend it so as to give the date of the approval of the act. It is in the title, and I suggest that he insert, after the word "Columbia," in line 5, on page 1, the words "approved July 29, 1892."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I accept that amendment.

Mr. MANN. It is in the title, but not in the body of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask that those words be inserted, Mr. Speaker, after the word "Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment accepted by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "July 29, 1892."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the committee, in regard to the title of the bill——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is an amendment to correct the title after the bill is passed.

Mr. DYER. Very well.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the committee amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read as follows: "A bill to amend section 4 of 'An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia,' approved July 29, 1892, as to the flying of fire balloons or fire parachutes."

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANNUAL STATEMENTS OF INSURANCE COMPANIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 1785.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1785) to amend section 647, chapter 18, Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to annual statements of insurance companies.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 647, chapter 18, Code of Law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 647. Annual statements: The said superintendent shall furnish, in December of each year, to every insurance company or association, local, domestic, and foreign, doing business in the District of Columbia, or its agent or attorney in the District, the necessary blank forms for the annual statements for such company or association, which shall be returned to the superintendent on or before the 1st day of March in each year, signed and sworn to by the president or vice president and secretary or assistant secretary, or, if a foreign company, by its manager or proper representative within the United States, showing its true financial condition as of the next preceding 31st day of December, which shall include a classified statement of its assets and liabilities on that day, the amount and character of business transacted, losses sustained, and money received and expended during the year, and such other information as the said superintendent may deem necessary. Such annual statements shall be printed in at least one daily newspaper published in the District of Columbia, in the month of March in each year, and any such company or association failing to comply with the provisions aforesaid shall have its license to do business in the District revoked."

Mr. MANN. I see this requires the publication of these statements in the daily newspapers. That is a new proposition. Does the gentleman think that is necessary in the District of Columbia, and is it of any more advantage to publish these statements in a daily newspaper?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think not.

Mr. MANN. It is more likely to be of advantage in some insurance paper, where it could be used. If the gentleman does not object, I would like to offer a motion to strike out the word "daily."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I accept the amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. What is the purpose of any publication at all? It does not occur to me that is usual in the States in such laws as this. If a man is interested in an insurance company the statements are filed with the State superintendent or commissioner, and he can go there and inspect them. What is the use of putting them to the expense of publishing these long statements?

Mr. MANN. These statements are ordered published now. It is a mere repetition. I do not know that there is any reason for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The foreign companies are now required to do this, and the effect of this bill is to put the local companies on the same footing as the foreign companies.

Mr. MANN. That is all. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, on page 2, line 12, by striking out the word "daily."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "daily."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word in regard to this matter of publication. I am opposed to the amendment in the form in which it is presented. It seems to me a very important matter in the supervision of an insurance company that the public should have notice by advertisement. If you strike out a "daily newspaper," as is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, you leave it to the discretion of somebody to put it in a paper where it never will be seen, and most of you gentlemen who are lawyers understand full well——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will in one moment.

Mr. RAKER. I just wanted to make a suggestion, namely, to insert, after the word "newspaper," the words "general circulation," and you have got the whole thing covered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know why it should not be a daily newspaper. As a matter of fact, there ought to be two daily newspapers. There are four in the District of Columbia. If the purpose is to have this statement kept from the public, which is interested, then give somebody discretion to put it in the small corner of a monthly or a weekly that is published somewhere in a back street and has no circulation. If you want to protect the public, put it in a newspaper of large circulation, so that the public may see it. The very purpose of this amendment to the insurance law is to give protection to those who go into these companies.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I know how very active and industrious the gentleman is. Does the gentleman read thoroughly all of these Washington dailies, and all the advertisements?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I read them very carefully, but not all the advertisements.

Mr. MANN. All of the dailies? I wish the gentleman would cease and put his time to better business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman that, unless the entire theory of publication is wrong, the gentleman simply gives recourse to those who would hide information from the public, and affords them an opportunity to do so. I know very well that many of you gentlemen who are members of the bar, sometimes, when you want to give public notice, and have discretion as to the newspapers in which that notice shall be given, when it is desired the defendant shall not see it, go somewhere into a remote district in order to make publication. But when I want the public to know what the condition of an insurance company is I would have that publication in a newspaper that is published daily and which has a large circulation, where the public, that is interested, may have the opportunity to see it. I certainly am not in favor of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Which of the four daily newspapers would the gentleman select, then?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would make it two daily papers rather than to make it no daily paper at all. Of course it should not be published in a trade journal. The man who takes out a policy from one of these companies is not supposed to be a subscriber to a trade journal. The man who pays the premium and pays out money for insurance in one of these companies would never know of the condition of the company if the advertisement of the statement of the company went into a trade journal. That journal goes to the trade, but the trade is not always keeping confidence with the innocent policy holder in the city of Washington. I say give them a chance in a newspaper that they read, and then they will have a chance to know if they are in any danger or not.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Why would not the gentleman from Pennsylvania go a step further and meet the conditions that are brought up in this bill the same as we have met them in New Jersey, where, in addition to saying a "daily newspaper," we say a "daily newspaper having the largest circulation in the district"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The trouble with selecting the paper with the largest circulation is that we would then have the embarrassment of choosing from among the finest lot of affidavits that were ever seen about the relative circulations of the different newspapers. I think the "largest circulation" among newspapers is like the "best cigar." You can get it in every cigar store.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. If we are going to do it, let us do it right.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes a suggestion that strikes me very happily, and I want to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it strikes him so. The suggestion is, Would the gentleman recommend that these statements be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at regular advertising rates? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that were done, the advertisements would, at least, be seen by Members of Congress.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the gentleman think these statements would be read any more by the public than by the insurance managers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If you are going to ascertain the newspaper having the "largest circulation" you could get affidavits of all kinds, just as you can get opinions about the "best cigar."

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the law require the insurance companies to get permission from the superintendent of insurance before the companies can undertake to do business?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This law is largely intended to affect domestic companies that have been doing business here in the District.

Mr. JACKSON. All of these companies must have the certificate from the superintendent before entering into business, must they not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think so; yes.

Mr. JACKSON. Is he not better informed on the subject than the public?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He ought to be informed, but I think it is the duty of the legislative body to protect the public. During the last month a number of so-called mutual insurance companies in my city went to the wall before the innocent subscribers or policy holders knew the actual condition of these companies; and here on the floor the other day the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] described a number of companies that are doing business in the District of Columbia concerning which evidently the people paying their money into them knew nothing. I submit, if it is to be a trade secret as to what the condition of the company is, then it would seem we are making a mockery of the pretense of protecting the public. The public ought to be advised through two daily newspapers, at least once a year, of the condition of these companies.

I am quite sure that if an advertisement appearing in any one of the four daily newspapers in Washington were to show that the stocks and bonds of an insurance company were "cats and dogs," some people would make an inquiry and bring the matter to the attention of the superintendent of insurance; and I am quite sure that if publication were made of the fact that poor investments had been made by the officers of these companies, and that the funds paid in by the policy holders were not secured, there would be an inquiry that might stop the wreck and prevent a great loss on the part of those whose money is at stake.

Mr. BOWMAN. This bill provides that the publication must be made in the month of March. Why could not anyone who wanted to know about this business look through the publications of that month? Is there any difficulty about procuring all the publications and securing all the information desired?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not understand the gentleman's question, but I will repeat what I said.

Mr. BOWMAN. I will repeat it, so that the gentleman can understand it. The bill provides that the publication must be made in the month of March. If all of the libraries in the city of Washington can be supplied with these documents, why put a company to the expense of making an advertisement in a daily newspaper?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In order to make it clear to the House and to bring it to the understanding of the gentleman, I will repeat that the bill should provide, just as it does provide, that there should be an annual publication of the condition of these companies by the superintendent of insurance and that the people who do business with these companies should be informed, so that if anything is wrong they will be able to take steps to right it.

I am certainly opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and hope the House will defeat it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, just a word on the amendment. The law now requires that the local insurance companies incorporated here shall publish these statements in some newspaper. This bill proposes to require the foreign insurance companies, or companies located outside of Washington and doing business here, to make a statement which is rather long and complicated, and to have that published in a daily newspaper. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] seems to assume that the public will read these statements, and that a man who takes out insurance will study the daily papers to see whether the company that he is insured with is solvent. Everybody knows that is not true. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] does not read the insurance companies' statements. I do not read the insurance companies' statements. The gentleman from Pennsylvania pleads guilty to the offense of reading all the Washington dailies. God forbid that I should ever be guilty of that offense!

The people who read the insurance companies' statements are the insurance agents, the men who are dealing in insurance; and if they find that one company makes a statement that shows it is not solvent, the agents of the other companies will knock that company. They will tell the people who insure that the company is not in good standing, and they will do it quickly enough.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As the law now stands, under an opinion rendered in 1908, only foreign companies are required to publish these statements. The local companies are not required to publish them.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is all the difference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is all the difference. The local companies are not now required to publish, and this bill proposes to require them to do so.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The local companies are not required to publish. This makes it apply to local companies as well as foreign.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No; here is the law.

Mr. MANN. I have examined the law. The gentleman may be correct. It is not important. I think the present law applies to local companies, and that this law is intended to apply to every insurance company, local, domestic, or foreign. The language in this bill "local, domestic, or foreign," is new and not in the existing law. The existing law reads:

The said superintendent shall furnish, in December of each year, to every company or association hereinbefore mentioned doing business in the District of Columbia, its agent or attorney—

I think that applies only to local companies. However, that is neither here nor there on this question.

I can see no reason for making these insurance companies pay a very high and exorbitant rate for the publishing of these statements in one of the daily newspapers when that is about the last place that anyone who is specially interested will look for them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman know that advertising rates in the trade journals are frequently in excess of the rates in the daily newspapers, and that to publish these statements in the trade papers would cost the insurance companies more than it would to publish them in the dailies?

Mr. MANN. That might be in some trade papers, but it would not happen here. The advertising rates in the Washington daily papers are rather high, and the daily papers are not the place where people look for those things.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Where do they look for them?

Mr. MANN. In the trade papers.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. My God, they never read them at all.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would never look for them in any place, and neither would I; but the insurance agents will look for them in one place, and that is in the trade papers where these advertisements are ordinarily published. Perhaps the gentleman reads the Washington Times. That is a great paper; but an advertisement might be published in it from now until Congress adjourns, and the chances are the gentleman would not take the opportunity to read the advertisements. For that matter they might publish an advertisement in any of the Washingon papers, and I think I would not read the advertisements. The gentleman may have nothing else to do in the House except read the advertisements in the daily papers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the word "daily."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 12, page 2, strike out the word "one" and insert the word "two." Strike out the word "newspaper" and insert the word "newspapers." Line 13, page 2, add after the word "published" the words "having the largest circulation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey) there were 8 ayes and 24 noes.

So the amendments were lost.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 7, page 2, the word "classified" and insert after the word "liability," line 8, page 2, the following: "classified according to regulations made by the superintendent of insurance."

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment is of importance. I think the experience of all State departments concerning reports will show that the companies file reports in such a shape that they are of little value. They are of no value particularly for the purpose of obtaining the actual experience of fire insurance companies concerning their losses and the rates of insurance.

I have offered this amendment because I have offered a resolution which looks to a national investigation concerning the reasonableness and fairness of fire insurance rates and their relation to fire causes in this country. It is an important subject to the American people at this time.

I simply say now that every superintendent or commissioner of insurance in the country will tell you that he is not able to tell anything about what the actual fire experience and fire losses of a company are, because they refuse to classify losses according to any reasonable plan. Therefore I think while this law is being amended the superintendent of insurance should be given authority to compel these companies, when stating their losses, assets, and liabilities, to so classify them that they will amount to something and give some information to the people.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The question was taken, and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the votes whereby the last two bills were passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 15, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, recommending that legislation be enacted authorizing the leasing for a period of five years of a fireproof building for general office use by said department (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 15, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had heretofore been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

S. 2932. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to sell the old post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., and, in the event of such sale, to enter into a contract for the construction of a suitable post-office and courthouse building at Charleston, W. Va., without additional cost to the Government of the United States;

S. 3152. An act extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota; and

H. R. 2925. An act to extend the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Brownsville, Tex.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. It is necessary to have an executive session for a very few minutes. It will take only a few minutes on a matter that is important. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 45 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PRINTING OF GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

During the executive session, on motion of Mr. SMITH of Michigan, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to arbitration treaties, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES—REPORT.

The Committee on Foreign Relations has reported to the Senate, with certain amendments, two treaties—one with Great Britain and one with France—for the general arbitration of differences which may arise between those countries and the United States, and have recommended that the treaties, thus amended, be ratified by the Senate. In accordance with the instructions of the Senate the committee now submits its report explaining the provisions of the treaties and the purpose and necessity of the amendments proposed. In order to understand thoroughly the nature of these treaties it is necessary to review briefly what has already been accomplished in the same direction and to make clear the character of the existing treaties on this subject which are to be superseded, and to point out the differences between the latter and those now before the Senate.

In 1905 Mr. Hay, then Secretary of State, negotiated with Great Britain and certain other powers general arbitration treaties, which were submitted to the Senate by President Roosevelt for its advice and consent. These treaties provided for the submission to arbitration of practically all questions which did not affect the "vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting states and which did not concern the interests of third parties." Under these treaties the special agreement, which must be entered into in each particular case for the purpose of defining the questions and the powers of the arbitrators in that case, was to be made by the Executive without reference to the Senate. By a vote of more than 5 to 1 the Senate amended these treaties so as to secure the submission of all such special agreements to the Senate for its advice and consent. The treaties thus amended were not presented by the administration to the other contracting powers and never became operative. In 1908 Mr. ROOT, then Secretary of State, negotiated similar treaties with various powers in which the right of the Senate to advise and consent to all special agreements made under these treaties was explicitly provided for. Approved by President Roosevelt and by him submitted to the Senate, these treaties were ratified by the Senate without opposition, and are still the law of the land. The two treaties now submitted remove the exceptions made in their predecessors as to questions affecting national honor, vital interests, independence, or the interests of third parties, and substitute therefor in Article I a statement of the scope of arbitration which is designed by its terms to exclude all questions not properly arbitrable.

Article I is as follows:

"All differences hereafter arising between the high contracting parties, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, relating to international matters in which the high contracting parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other arbitral tribunal as may be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, define the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference and the procedure thereunder.

"The provisions of articles 37 to 90, inclusive, of the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes concluded at the second peace conference at The Hague on the 18th October, 1907, so far as applicable, and unless they are inconsistent with or modified by the provisions of the special agreement to be concluded in each case, and excepting articles 53 and 54 of such convention, shall govern the arbitration proceedings to be taken under this treaty.

"The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, His Majesty's Government reserving the right before concluding a special agreement in any matter affecting the interests of a self-governing dominion of the British Empire to obtain the concurrence therein of the government of that dominion.

"Such agreements shall be binding when confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes."

It will be observed that by the terms of this article every difference arising between the two nations is to be submitted to arbitration if such differences "are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity," and it follows necessarily that all differences which are not justiciable in their nature by reason of not being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity are excluded from arbitration under the terms of this article. It will also be observed that all special agreements made under this article must be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. To this article the committee recommends a slight verbal amendment, which only serves to make clearer the meaning of the article and which need not detain us here.

If, following the example of the treaties of 1908, these treaties stopped at this point with the article defining the scope of the subjects to be submitted to arbitration, the committee would have found no difficulty in recommending to the Senate its immediate ratification. The definition of the questions to be submitted to arbitration in these new treaties is, it is true, very large and general and somewhat indeterminate. It is stated that these questions are to be justiciable by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity. In England and the United States, and wherever the principles of the common law obtain, the words "law or equity" have an exact and technical significance, but that legal system exists nowhere else and does not exist in France, with which country one of these treaties is made. We are obliged, therefore, to construe the word "equity" in its broad and universal acceptance as that which is "equally right or just to all concerned; as the application of the dictates of good conscience to the settlement of controversies." It will be seen, therefore, that there is little or no limit to the questions which might be brought within this article, provided the two contracting parties consider them justiciable.

Under Article I, however, taken by itself, no question could be dealt with unless the treaty-making powers of both countries were agreed that it was justiciable within the meaning of the article. The most vital point, therefore, to be decided would be whether the question was justiciable according to the principles of law and equity. Everyone agrees that there are certain questions which no nation, if it expects to retain its existence as a nation, will ever submit to the decision of anyone else, and by reserving the power to pass upon all special agreements each party to the contract reserves at the same time the power to reject as not justiciable any of these questions which it is admitted no nation could submit to an outside judgment without abandoning its sovereignty and independence.

These treaties, however, do not stop with the article which defines and enlarges the scope of arbitration. In Articles II and III provision is made for the establishment, if either party desires it, of a joint commission of inquiry. Such a commission is to be preliminary to arbitration and is to examine into and report upon the subject of the controversy between the two contracting parties. These articles follow in the main the provisions of The Hague convention of 1907, now in force, for the establishment of such commissions. The committee ventures to think that some of the changes here made from The Hague provisions are not in the direction of an advance, but of a retreat, because they revive the idea of confining membership in the commission, if insisted upon by either party, to nationals instead of to wholly disinterested outsiders, which is the conception of The Hague convention. But the important part of these two articles is contained in the last clause of Article III, a point at which these two treaties depart widely from The Hague provisions. The clause in question is as follows:

"It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article I of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the Joint High Commission of Inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty."

It will be seen by examination of the clause just quoted that if the joint commission, which may consist of one or more persons, which may be composed wholly of foreigners or wholly of nationals, decides that the question before them is justiciable under Article I it must then go to arbitration whether the treaty-making power of either country believes it to be justiciable or not. A special agreement, coming to the Senate after the joint commission had decided the question involved to be justiciable, could not be amended or rejected by the Senate on the ground that in their opinion the question was not justiciable and did not come within the scope of Article I. By this clause the constitutional powers of the Senate are taken away pro tanto and are transferred to a commission, upon the composition of which the Senate has no control whatever. It is said that the powers of the President under the Constitution are given up by the third clause of Article III just as much as those of the Senate. If this be true, it only makes the case more serious, but the President, under the provisions of Articles II and III, although he would be bound by the decision of the commission, can nevertheless control the formation of that body. To arrange the membership of the joint commission, however, so as to defeat an adverse decision in advance would not be consonant with the spirit of the treaty, but none the less that power of indirect control remains in the hands of the President and in his hands alone.

In approving Article I of the treaty the committee assents to the arbitration of all questions coming within the rule there prescribed. The terms in which the rule is stated are, however, quite vague and indefinite, and they are altogether new in international proceedings. It is possible that others may take an entirely different view from that entertained by the committee or by the negotiators of the treaty as to what was meant by justiciable or as to what was meant by the principles of law or equity when applied to international affairs, and in the absence of any established rules of international law for the construction of such provisions and of any precedents others might put upon these provisions a construction entirely different from that which the treaty-making power now intends. Under these circumstances to vest in an outside commission the power to say finally what the treaty means by its very general and indefinite language is to vest in that commission the power to make for us an entirely different treaty from that which we supposed ourselves to be making.

The last clause of Article III, therefore, the Committee on Foreign Relations advises the Senate to strike from the treaty and recommends an amendment to that effect. This recommendation is made because there can be no question that through the machinery of the joint commission, as provided in Articles II and III and with the last clause of Article III included, the Senate is deprived of its constitutional power to pass upon all questions involved in any treaty submitted to it in accordance with the Constitution. The committee believes that it would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States to confer upon an outside commission powers which, under the Constitution, devolve upon the Senate. It seems to the committee that the Senate has no more right to delegate its share of the treaty-making power than Congress has to delegate the legislative power. The Constitution provides that before a treaty can be ratified and become the supreme law of the land it shall receive the consent of two-thirds of the Senators present. This necessarily means that each and every part of the treaty must receive the consent of two-thirds of the Senate. It can not possibly mean that only a part of the provisions shall receive the consent of the Senate. To take away from the Senate the determination of the most important question in a proposed treaty of arbitration is necessarily in violation of the treaty provisions of the Constitution. The most vital question in every proposed arbitration is whether the difference is arbitrable. For instance, if another nation should do something to which we object under the Monroe doctrine and the validity of our objection should be challenged and an arbitration should be demanded by that other nation, the vital point would be whether our right to insist upon the Monroe doctrine was subject to arbitration, and if the third clause of Article III remains in the treaty the Senate could be debarred from passing upon that question.

One of the first of sovereign rights is the power to determine who shall come into the country and under what conditions. No nation, which is not either tributary or subject, would permit any other nation to compel it to receive the citizens or subjects of that other nation.

If our right to exclude certain classes of immigrants were challenged, the question could be forced before a joint commission, and if that commission decided that the question was arbitrable the Senate would have no power to reject the special agreement for the arbitration of that subject on the ground that it was not a question for arbitration within the contemplation of article 1. In the same way our territorial integrity, the rights of each State, and of the United States to their territory might be forced before a joint commission, and under article 3, in certain contingencies, we should have no power to prevent our title to the land we inhabit from being tried before a court of arbitration. To-day no nation on earth would think of raising these questions with the United States, and the same is true of other questions, which will readily occur to everybody. But if we accept this treaty with the third clause of article 3 included we invite other nations to raise these very questions and to endeavor to force them before an arbitral tribunal. Such an invitation would be a breeder of war and not of peace, and would rouse a series of disputes, now happily and entirely at rest, into malign and dangerous activity. To issue such an invitation is not, in the opinion of the committee, the way to promote that universal peace which we all most earnestly desire.

To take from the Senate, in any degree or by any means, the power of saying whether a given question is one for arbitration or not is to destroy the power of the Senate on the most important point to be decided in connection with differences arising with any other nation. Even if it were constitutional, to deprive the Senate to this extent of their share in the treaty-making power would be most unwise and most perilous. The Senate of the United States is as earnestly and heartily in favor of peace and of the promotion of universal peace by arbitration as any body of men, official or unofficial, anywhere in the world, or as anyone concerned in the negotiation of arbitration treaties. The history of the United States for a period of more than 70 years exhibits a record of arbitration treaties unequaled by that of any other nation on earth. Every one of those treaties has received the cordial assent of the Senate of the United States. The Senate to-day is heartily in favor, in the opinion of the committee, of enlarging to the utmost practicable limit the scope of general arbitration treaties. The committee recommends to the Senate the approval of the enlarged scope for arbitration proposed in article 1, but it declines to admit that the destruction of the constitutional powers of the Senate is necessary to the promotion of peace and arbitration, or that their maintenance diminishes by a hair's breadth the enlarged scope which these treaties propose for arbitration as the true method for the settlement of international controversies.

We have discussed the abandonment of the power of the Senate to take part in the construction and application of the treaty in particular cases as they arise with no selfish concern for the prerogatives or rights of the Senate itself, but rather with solicitude that the Senate shall perform the duty which has been imposed upon it by the Constitution and shall not, by its own act, deprive itself of the power to perform that duty. The inclusion of the Senate as a part of the treaty-making power was provided upon mature consideration in the Consititution and was deemed to be adopted to our system of government. It has, on the whole, proved of the highest usefulness for the prevention of hasty and ill-considered agreements with other powers and for the preservation of the interests of all and every part of the American people. So long as that duty rests upon us we must continue to perform it with courage and firmness and without evasion or abdication.

The committee itself, and in the opinion of the committee the Senate also, has no desire to contract the ample boundaries set to arbitration in the first article. But it must be remembered that if we enter into these treaties with Great Britain and France we must make like treaties in precisely the same terms with any other friendly power which calls upon us to do so. This adds to the gravity of the action now to be taken, for nothing could be so harmful to the cause of peace and arbitration or to their true interests as to make a general arbitration treaty which should not be scrupulously and exactly observed. As has been already said, there are questions which no nation will consent to submit to the decision of anyone but themselves. The only way to keep such questions from being forced forward, which is in itself promotive of dissension, ill feeling, and perhaps war, is by the reservation to each of the contracting parties of the power to decide whether or not a question is properly justifiable within the letter and spirit of the treaty.

There are certain questions at the present stage of human development which, if thus forced forward for arbitration, would be rejected by the country affected without regard to whether, in so doing, they broke the general arbitration treaty or not. In the opinion of the committee it should not be possible, under the terms of any treaty, for such a deplorable situation to arise. Nothing ought to be promised that we are not absolutely certain that we can carry out to the letter. If the third clause of article 3 remains in the treaty it is quite possible that the unhappy situation just described might arise and the treaty would then become, not what we fondly hope it will be, a noble instrument of peace, but an ill-omened breeder of bitterness and war. For that reason, as well as on constitutional grounds and in the best interests of peace and arbitration itself, the committee recommends that this clause be stricken from the treaty.

After the doors were reopened,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I present a document from the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to arbitration treaties now pending, from which the injunction of secrecy has been removed, and I ask that 5,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate. I ask that there be printed in the appendix the entire text of The Hague Convention of October 18, 1907. This document contains only certain articles, and I want the entire convention printed.

I also want printed a copy of the existing arbitration treaty with Great Britain of June 4, 1908, and I want Appendix B as in this report retained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order requested by the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. BURTON. Do I understand that it is the intention to print this report, with the appendices, before opportunity is given to file a minority report by the three members, or either of them, who do not concur in this report?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that order has already been made.

Mr. BURTON. I do not so understand. I had understood that the injunction of secrecy was removed, so that this report might be printed in the RECORD, but that——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] stated, I think, that he had had no objection to printing——

Mr. BURTON. But that the printing of the final report was to be postponed until time was given to file minority views.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the understanding in executive session to be that an order for the printing was to be entered, as indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts, as soon as we came into legislative session.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt about that. He withdrew his objection, and said he had none.

Mr. BURTON. My understanding was that the point decided in executive session pertained to publicity. The injunction of secrecy was removed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the motion, but a further understanding, as the Chair understood, was that the procedure now indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts should be followed.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether these documents would be printed immediately or whether they would be detained until a reasonable time could be given for the filing of minority reports?

Mr. LODGE. Why should they be detained? It is constantly done.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that they will be printed immediately, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. The Chair and the Senate can readily see what would happen. This report, if printed at this time, will go to the country without the statement of any views of the minority, and it seems to me it is sufficient for the present to give publicity by the publication in the RECORD and postpone the printing of the report in its completed form until the views of the minority can be filed.

Mr. SMOOT. As a public document?

Mr. BURTON. As a public document.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And both be printed in the same document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the remarks of the Senator from Ohio to be in objection to the order requested by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BURTON. If it is proposed to print this report without the views of the minority.

Mr. LODGE. Then I move that they be printed as requested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that an order be entered for the printing as indicated in his request for unanimous consent.

The motion was agreed to. (S. Doc. No. 98.)

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PENROSE. I present a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania presents a concurrent resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 22d day of August, 1911, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course the concurrent resolution ought to be referred to a committee.

I desire to state for the information of the Senate that a careful investigation has led to the conclusion that Congress can adjourn on the date fixed. I am aware of the fact that the concurrent resolution ought ordinarily to go to the Committee on Appropriations, but I suggest the propriety of its reference, and I believe it will facilitate the business of the Senate if the concurrent resolution is referred to the Committee on Finance, the tariff bills being the principal issues before this extra session of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, my attention was diverted, and I did not hear the reading or the import of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. It is a concurrent resolution fixing Tuesday, August 22, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon for the final adjournment of this extra session of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Is it a concurrent resolution that comes from the House?

Mr. PENROSE. No; it is a Senate resolution, to go over to the House.

Mr. WARREN. Originating with the Finance Committee?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is impossible to hear the colloquy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the reference to the Committee on Finance of the concurrent resolution fixing the day for final adjournment. Without objection, that reference will be made.

Mr. OWEN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to state for the further information of the Senate—oh, an objection has been made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma objected to such reference. In the opinion of the Chair the reference, therefore, should be to the Committee on Rules, and the reference will be such——

Mr. PENROSE. I move to refer the concurrent resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the resolution——

Mr. CULBERSON. On this side of the Chamber we have been unable to hear the conversation on the other side. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what he thinks of the proposition to change the rule of the Senate and to refer these adjournment resolutions to a different committee.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that in my experience here there has never been a concurrent resolution proposing final adjournment that did not go to the Committee on Appropriations, and there is where this should go. I ask that it be referred to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. PENROSE. I am entirely willing to have it go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, however, whether, from the standpoint of the Finance Committee, the concurrent resolution can not be changed so as to provide for final adjournment on Saturday of this week as well as Tuesday of next week?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not believe that Congress can get through by Saturday of this week.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Has the Senator, in fixing the time for final adjournment, assumed that both House and Senate can, before Tuesday, August 22, act upon all the tariff bills which are now before them?

Mr. PENROSE. After conferring with a number of Members of the House and Senate I was led to the conclusion that Congress could adjourn on Tuesday and complete action on all pending measures. Of course, however, this date is not conclusive. The concurrent resolution will go either to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Finance; and I am entirely indifferent as to which committee, and the date can be made earlier or later, as the situation may develop during the rest of this week.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to the reference of the concurrent resolution to any committee. I care not what committee shall consider it. But I think it is well to understand, so far as some of us are concerned, that we will not consent to the passage of any concurrent resolution fixing a time for final adjournment of Congress until we can see clearly that the bills which are now before us have been or can be finally acted upon by Congress.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa who he means by "we"? I suppose the Senate determines this matter by its vote.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly. I did not say "we."

Mr. PENROSE. I think the stenographer would probably say "we."

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the Senator from Pennsylvania is in error. I said that "some of us."

Mr. PENROSE. Well, can some of us hold up Congress as against a majority vote on a concurrent resolution which is not open to debate?

Mr. CUMMINS. Some of us can not; and I did not indicate that some of us could. I said, however, that such a concurrent resolution would not be passed with our consent.

Mr. PENROSE. Who are "our"?

Mr. CUMMINS. Those of us who really want to revise some of the schedules of the tariff. If a majority of the Senate desire to pass a concurrent resolution to adjourn, it always has the power to do it. It could have done it long before the reciprocity bill was passed if it had wanted to do it.

Mr. PENROSE. That again revives the mysterious term which shocked my ear, the term "our consent." I should like to be enlightened as to what the comprehensive term embraces.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sorry the Senator from Pennsylvania, having been here so long and so assiduously during this present session, can not apply that word. I leave it, however, to his fervid and fertile imagination. He may put just such meaning upon it as he thinks it ought to bear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Wyoming prefers that it go to the Committee on Appropriations, I am entirely willing.

Mr. WARREN. I do not desire to take anything from the power of the Finance Committee, but in view of certain transactions of late in both Houses, where we seem to have departed from the rules, it appears to me we ought not now to break an unbroken rule.

Mr. PENROSE. I will change my motion and move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the resolution he has just presented be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to say that for one I do not intend to consent to an adjournment of the Senate or the passing of a resolution of this kind until the tariff bills which are now pending have passed the Senate and are in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a question of reference, not of action upon the resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I understand, but I think this is as good an opportunity to express my views upon the matter of adjournment as I probably will have. We spent weeks here in putting articles which are produced by the American farmers upon the free list, articles that are not controlled by a monopoly and the production of which can not be controlled by a monopoly. Now, it is proposed to rush, if possible, a resolution through here to agree upon a time for final adjournment, when there has not been a single duty removed upon any article that is controlled by a trust and where the duties are excessive.

I can understand the reason why the Senator from Pennsylvania would desire this early adjournment. It is because we are now engaged in an effort to remove duties that have been a burden to the American people, and it is proposed now to adjourn Congress to escape a revision of the tariff which the American people have demanded ought to be made. We should stay here until that revision is made, and I hope that a majority of the Senate will not consent to any adjournment until these bills are in conference and a sufficient time or a reasonable time is given for an agreement.

I wanted to make these remarks so as to present to the Senate at least my views as to what we ought to do. I hope that a majority of the Senate are of the same opinion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer the concurrent resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, and by unanimous consent, Mr. POMERENE was assigned to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to fill the vacancy in the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 306) to confirm the name of Commodore Barney Circle, located at the eastern end of Pennsylvania Avenue SE., in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1785) to amend section 647, chapter 18, Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to annual statements of insurance companies, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 8622. An act to amend section 4 of "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," approved July 29, 1892, as to the flying of fire balloons or fire parachutes;

H. R. 10649. An act to regulate the assignment of wages, salaries, and earnings in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 12737. An act to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, regarding insurance.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 6747. An act to reenact an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across St. Croix River and to extend the time for commencing and completing said structure; and

H. R. 11303. An act for the relief of Eliza Choteau Roscamp.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of Local Grange No. 83, Patrons of Husbandry, of Goldendale, Wash., and a petition of Local Grange No. 362, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lake, Wash., praying for the establishment of a parcels-post system, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LEA presented memorials of sundry citizens of Graysville, Johnsonville, and Memphis, all in the State of Tennessee, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Johnston Sunday-rest bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented resolutions adopted by the Switchmen's Union at St. Paul, Minn., favoring an appropriation for the casting of a bronze tablet or bust to the memory of the late Edward A. Moseley, secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BROWN. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NELIGH, NEBR., August 13, 1911.

Hon. NORRIS BROWN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the people of Neligh, Nebr., and vicinity, assembled in our annual Chautauqua to the number of 1,500, would express our profound gratitude for the treaties of arbitration lately signed by the representatives of the United States, Great Britain, and France, and our hope that the same may be ratified by the Senate without delay or needless amendments. Adopted by unanimous vote August 13, 1911.

THOMAS C. HINKLE.

Mr. ROOT presented memorials of 100 citizens of Elmira, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Johnston Sunday-rest bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

THE METROPOLITAN COACH CO.

Mr. OLIVER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2904) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co., reported it with amendments.

SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN.

Mr. BRIGGS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate resolution 136, reported by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against ISAAC STEPHENSON, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, and to report to the Senate whether in the election of said ISAAC STEPHENSON as a Senator of the United States from the said State of Wisconsin there were used or employed corrupt methods or practices; that said committee or subcommittee be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate, to hold its session at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ stenographers, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or chairman of the subcommittee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey ask for present action on the resolution?

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask for present action on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRIGGS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back with an amendment Senate resolution 96, submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] July 5, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,440 per annum during the Sixty-second Congress.

The amendment was to add, at the end of the resolution, the words "to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSENGER TO CONFERENCE OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. BRIGGS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back with an amendment Senate resolution 107, submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] July 20, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the conference of the minority of the Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional messenger at an annual salary of $1,440, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

The amendment of the committee was after the words "one thousand" to strike out "four hundred and forty" and insert "two hundred," so as to read: "at an annual salary of $1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3224) forfeiting the grant of a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Washington Improvement & Development Co., made by act of Congress June 4, 1898; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FOSTER:

A bill (S. 3250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Caddo Lake, in Louisiana; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 55) to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States; to the Committee on Territories.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR FRYE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 138), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice President in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator WILLIAM P. FRYE from the State of Maine, vouchers for the same to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REPORT ON GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask whether the order was entered to have the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On August 15, 1911:

S. 2495. An act to define and classify health, accident, and death benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

S. 2766. An act to authorize the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. to construct and operate a bridge across the St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 8622. An act to amend section 4 of "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," approved July 29, 1892, as to the flying of fire balloons or fire parachutes;

H. R. 10649. An act to regulate the assignment of wages, salaries, and earnings in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 12737. An act to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia regarding insurance.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEADERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3052) granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out all after "South Dakota," down to and including that portion of the word "residence," on page 2, line 1, and to insert: "In the Denver, Pueblo, Sterling, Hugo, Lamar, and Glenwood Springs land districts, in the State of Colorado; in the Valentine, O'Neill, North Platte, Broken Bow, and Alliance land districts, in the State of Nebraska; in the Lawton, Woodward, and Guthrie land districts, in the State of Oklahoma; in the Dickinson, Minot, Williston, Devils Lake, and Bismarck land districts, in the State of North Dakota; in the Cheyenne, Evanston, Sundance, Buffalo, Lander, and Douglas land districts, in the State of Wyoming; in the Clayton, Fort Sumner, Las Cruces, Tucumcari, Roswell, and Santa Fe land districts, in the Territory of New Mexico; in the Phoenix land district, in the Territory of Arizona; in the former Spokane Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington; and in the Burns, Vale, La Grand, and The Dalles land districts, in the State of Oregon, are hereby relieved from the necessity of residence and cultivation."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNUAL STATEMENTS OF INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1785) to amend section 647, chapter 18, Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to annual statements of insurance companies, which were, on page 2, line 7, to strike out the word "classified," and on page 2, line 8, after the word "liabilities," to insert: "Classified according to regulations made by the superintendent of insurance."

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DECISION OF QUESTIONS CONCERNING CONSTITUTIONALITY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following bill, coming over from a former day.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3222) to provide rules for speedy and final decision of questions concerning the constitutionality of national and State laws and constitutional provisions and for the interpretation and construction of the Federal laws and Constitution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEYBURN. But, Mr. President, it went over yesterday on objection to a second reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the second reading and its reference.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it can not go to a second reading without a vote of the Senate, I think. There is no object in the rule unless that procedure can be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate consent to the second reading of the bill? The question is on that motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not my intention to consent to the second reading of the bill without consideration by the Senate. The matter is not before the Senate except upon a motion. It does not come before the Senate automatically, as I understand the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill comes up automatically.

Mr. HEYBURN. The question yesterday was not a request that it go over; it was an objection to the second reading. I did not request that the bill go over. I objected to the second reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Therefore it went over for one day.

Mr. HEYBURN. My attention has not been called to the rule that sends it over for a day. It stops the bill at the second reading, and it can not proceed automatically under any existing rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first clause of Rule XIV provides that if objected to it shall be postponed for one day.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is an objection to the second reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT (reading):

Whenever a bill or joint resolution shall be offered, its introduction shall, if objected to, be postponed for one day.

The present occupant of the chair was not here yesterday when the bill was introduced and had its first reading.

Mr. HEYBURN. Its first reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then an objection to the second reading was interposed. Therefore it comes up to-day—the next day—and the question is, Shall it have a second reading? which, of course, would be by motion in the face of an objection, if it can not be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. My understanding was that it could only come up on motion; that it could only move to the next stage upon a motion; that it did not automatically come up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is proceeding upon the motion that it now have its second reading.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not know that there was a motion that it have its second reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As a matter of fact, there has been no such formal motion made, but the Chair assumes that the introducer of the bill desired to make such a motion. Technically, the Senator from Oregon had not made such a motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. So I understood.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon now desires to make the motion, the Chair understands.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like the RECORD to show that the Senator from Oregon was seeking to advance the bill in order that it might have its legislative status determined.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair admits to having proceeded a trifle informally, but he supposed the Senator from Oregon desired the procedure he suggested.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no motion now before the Senate——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not——

Mr. HEYBURN (continuing). For the advancement of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to hold the floor?

Mr. HEYBURN. There is nothing to hold the floor for; there is not a motion pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon, then, is recognized.

Mr. BOURNE. I had assumed that the bill came up automatically for a second reading; that the right of the Senator to object held the second reading for the one day. If it is necessary to make a motion, I move that the bill now be read the second time and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has made his motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a debatable question, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. HEYBURN. Great questions have in times past been discussed under the relative condition in which we find this bill. I did not desire to have a discussion precipitated at this time, but I do desire to eliminate from the files and the consideration of the United States Senate measures of this kind. We should not proceed with them at all. They should be contraband. It is a proposition coming in the form of legislation that changes the organization and power of the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I desire first to call attention to the title of the bill. It is extraordinary and without precedent in the history of legislation here or elsewhere. It reads:

> A bill to provide rules for speedy and final decision of questions concerning the constitutionality of national and State laws and constitutional provisions and for the interpretation and construction of the Federal laws and Constitution.

To provide rules for whom? For the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a proposition that Congress shall make rules for the procedure in the Supreme Court of the United States in the ordinary conduct of its business.

I can not conceive of any history, legend, romance from which it could be gathered that any legislature had such power or ever had attempted to exercise the power to make rules for the Supreme Court of the United States upon such questions. I want to consider this bill somewhat in detail. Section 1 provides—

> That in any action, suit, or proceeding in the Supreme Court of the United States when the constitutionality of any provision of a Federal or State law, or of a State constitution, shall be drawn in question or decided, the constitutionality thereof shall be sustained unless the Supreme Court, by unanimous decision of all its members qualified to sit in the cause, shall determine that the provision in controversy is not authorized or is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States.

I desire to direct the attention of the Senate to this proposition. It may not seem to be serious at this time, or a subject pressing itself upon our attention, yet we are, or at least I presume we are, at some time going into recess and leave the country to get along without our watchful care. During the recess of Congress it is sought to give this measure a status and form that will make it available for circulating literature. I desire that it shall go out, if it goes out at all, with some explanation.

Mr. President, the motion that this bill proceed to a second reading should not have been made at this time; but that does not afford a justification for neglecting it. Inasmuch as the motion has been made, I think I will test the sense of the Senate first, by moving to lay the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] now moves to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho withdraw that motion for a moment, as I can not say what I wish to say unless he does so?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will be pleased to withdraw the motion.

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Sentor from Idaho that it would be a very bad precedent for us to set to refuse a second reading of a bill because it might contain matters of which we did not approve. This is a deliberative body, and every proposition which is submitted to the body by one of its Members is entitled to consideration; it is not entitled to approval unless it meets the approval of Senators; but it is entitled to consideration, it is entitled to examination by them, and to a judgment as to whether or not it should be passed.

I agree, in the main, with the Senator from Idaho in his view as to the merits of this bill. Unless something is presented to my mind different from what has yet occurred to it, I should not vote for the bill. At the same time, I think that every Senator who in good faith presents to this body a proposition which he desires to have enacted into law is entitled to have that bill properly considered and go through the regular parliamentary stages; and, even if it does not come to a vote in the Senate, receive at least the examination of the standing committee to which it legitimately belongs.

I think it is due to myself to state this much, because I shall vote against the motion to lay upon the table, and I should also vote against a motion to prevent the second reading of the bill and its reference to a committee.

Now, I want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that I can conceive of certain propositions which might be submitted to the Senate where the Senate would take the drastic action which he proposes. I think if a proposition were submitted to the Senate which was scandalous in its nature——

Mr. HEYBURN. I think this is.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no; in the sense in which I am speaking it is not. The Senator thinks that it is a proposition which is absolutely indefensible and one not entitled to be enacted into law; but the Senator does not misunderstand me when I say that if a measure were introduced here that was deemed to be scandalous, the Senate would not proceed to the point of its consideration; but anything which is respectful in its nature, which does not asperse any officer or any department of the Government is not scandalous; and in this case it can not be called an aspersion, because of the fact that the bill proposes, as I understand, to require unanimous concurrence of a court rather than the concurrence of a majority of the court; on this account it can not certainly be called scandalous; it is not an aspersion. One may distrust with some degree of reason the correctness of the judgment of a court, unless that judgment is the unanimous decision of its members, especially when taken in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Oregon when he introduced his bill that it happened that a bill declared to be unconstitutional had previously had the consideration of the Judiciary Committee of each House, of the majority of the Senators, and a majority of the Representatives. The contention of the Senator from Oregon was that the decision ought to constitute the judgment of the larger part of those whose consideration had been invoked in regard to the constitutionality of the law. While I do not agree with the Senator from Oregon about that, it is not a scandalous proposition, nor is any aspersion upon the court involved in it.

But I want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that every time a majority of a body thought that a bill was not the proper presentation of that which should be enacted into law, if that majority were then to exclude it from the consideration of the Senate, we would soon have a very great tyrannical exercise of power by a majority. It would in such case be a matter absolutely within the judgment and discretion of the majority as to what bill they would permit to be considered and what bill they would not permit to be considered. The Senator's proposition, if carried to its legitimate conclusion, would limit debate in this body to propositions which the majority might feel an inclination to permit to be debated, because, as the Senator well knows, while under our liberal practice sometimes Senators may have something to say when bills are introduced or upon the proposition for its second reading, there is really no debate practicable in the Senate except when the bill comes here on the question of its passage or rejection. If the Senate is going to set the precedent, when a bill is presented, if it shall meet with the objection of the majority, that that majority is going to arrest it at the second reading and not permit it to get to a stage where debate is to be had, it is setting a dangerous precedent, Mr. President, by which the majority, even-tempered as it may be now, and rather indefinite and uncertain as to its existence, may at some time when it has a definite power and in time of great political excitement, in a time when that power may be so great as to have no hesitation in its exercise arbitrarily—the time may come when the exercise of that power will be extremely dangerous to the liberties of the people and where it will result in the destruction of that which is most important of all things in a free government, and that is freedom of debate.

I shall not pursue the subject, Mr. President, but I trust that the Senate will not take the position which is advocated by the Senator from Idaho. There is no danger of this bill passing unless it shall meet with the approbation of a majority of the Senate; there is little danger of it passing unless it shall meet with the approbation of the majority of the Judiciary Committee, to which it should go; so that there is no practical danger in permitting it to proceed; but there is a tremendous practical danger in setting a precedent by which proposed legislation shall be throttled before the time comes for its proper debate and consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is not my intention to proceed upon the lines suggested by the Senator from Georgia. I fully realize the importance of what he has said in regard to the matter. I fully realize the serious feature of stopping or attempting to stop proposed legislation at the second reading; and were it not for a little experience which we have had in the last few weeks here I would not have resorted to this rule. I will not insist on the motion to lay the motion of the Senator from Oregon on the table—I did that at a suggestion which was brought to me—because I think that it is better, in the interest of the people, to whose attention it is to be brought, that it should go out after some consideration. This is a dangerous measure. It is as dangerous as the measure that passed the Senate the other day.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would never have dreamed that the recall of judges could have met with the approval of the United States Senate. It is the result of prolonged muckraking, the dragging down and attacking of men in public life, and yet, notwithstanding the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, that measure received the approval of this body.

I feel it a duty that some one must take up and perform to more closely and promptly and sharply antagonize this kind of legislation. If we do not, the people of the country are going to conclude that these propositions are unanswerable, and that there can be no objection urged to them. We sat here and saw pass a measure as destructive of the judiciary system of this country as is this proposition. The Senator undertakes to say to the Supreme Court of the United States how they shall decide a case.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just for a moment. I understand from the reading of the bill—and I am not prepared to say that I am in full sympathy with it in its entirety—that it simply purports to require a unanimous decision from the Supreme Court as to the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of a legislative act. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that there was no suggestion in the formulation of the Constitution of the United States, in the convention or at any other time, that the Supreme Court of the United States should have any power to upset an act of the legislative department of this Government? On the contrary, that power was intended to be denied to the Supreme Court of the United States by the Constitutional Convention; and this bill is simply declaratory of what was the original intention of the framers of the Constitution.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was denied by some people. That term expresses it exactly. The denial of that power came from the same class of political intellect that is supporting these innovations upon the law of a century.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to suggest, if the Senator will again permit me, that the Senator belongs to that large class of individuals in this country who believe that it is improper for anybody to suggest improprieties on the part of the Supreme Court of the United States. With all due deference to that body, there is a very large and growing sentiment in this country that the Supreme Court of the United States is encroaching upon the legislative function, and practically doing a little legislating on its own account. The Senator will concede that Lincoln did not hesitate to criticize the decisions of the court; Roosevelt did not hesitate to do so; and I think some of its decisions have been criticized since this Congress convened.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is a disposition to discredit the courts of the country, and it comes from those who are not in sympathy with our system of government or who are ignorant of it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. I remind the Senator from Idaho that Abraham Lincoln severely criticized the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think it might be well to have that stereotyped and posted up. I have heard it about a thousand times in this Chamber, as though it were conclusive of the question and binding upon Senators. We are here to exercise our own intelligence and judgment in this hour and not in the hour of half a century ago. Mr. President, there is as much ability to determine these questions in this age as there was in any age in the country's history.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator has made a statement which I think calls for a response in regard to the passage of the statehood bill. He has spoken of that as an indorsement and approval of the principle of the recall of judges. That statement is being very generally made, but not correctly made. I do not favor the initiative or the referendum or the recall, and yet I voted for that bill. Mr. President, upon what ground did I vote for that bill? I voted for it upon the ground that, while I do not approve of these things, I recognize the right of any people who do approve them to have them, and I do not recognize the right of Congress or of any other power in the Government, after a State has become clothed with the powers of a State, to dictate to it what shall be its practice in that regard. I believe it is unfortunate that it should have them; but, Mr. President, we may not have an opportunity to debate that question again in this Chamber, because, if the question is to be raised again, it will be raised in the other body and may not reach us at all. I do not know as to that, and therefore I want the opportunity now, in order that those of us who voted for it may not be misrepresented in the public view, to state the ground upon which we acted in voting for the passage of that bill.

We did not approve—I say "we"; a great many of those who voted for it did approve, but a number of those did not approve, certainly a sufficient number to have prevented there being a majority in its favor if they had voted otherwise—a number of those who voted for that bill did so upon this ground: Disapproving as we did of the features in the Arizona constitution which, aside from the provision for the initiative and referendum, went further and provided for the recall of judges—disapproving of that feature, the bill simply gave to the citizens of Arizona the opportunity to reconsider what they had already determined for themselves.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the amendment. That was not the bill.

Mr. BACON. That is what we voted for.

Mr. HEYBURN. When that was defeated we voted for the bill.

Mr. BACON. That was not defeated. That is in the bill as it passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. The indorsement of the referendum was not stricken out. That has passed.

Mr. BACON. Very well; but I am talking now about the recall of judges. That is the most serious question, and the provision in that bill is this: There was a provision which did not meet with the approval of some of us who were anxious to see that Territory clothed with powers of statehood, and therefore we went to the extent of saying, "While we do not recognize that Congress can impose upon a State any constitution which it does not desire so far as to make that its permanent constitution—for even if in its enabling act Congress does provide what the constitution shall be, upon the very next day the people can make a different constitution—recognizing that fact, still, in view of the gravity of the question of the recall of judges, we provide that you shall again consider that question by again voting on it; but if upon the consideration of it the second time you still determine that you wish that to be the law of the State, while we do not approve of it we recognize that you are the arbiters of your own fortunes; that you are the makers necessarily of your own laws. When you come into the Union as a State there is no power in Congress, as has been decided by the Supreme Court, to prevent you changing your constitution or enacting any law you may see fit which is not in contravention of the Constitution of the United States. Therefore we leave it to your decision upon your final vote."

Now, therefore, our proposition was this: Recognizing the fact that you will have—the people of Arizona will have—that power, we think we have gone to the fullest extent we should to endeavor to influence their decision when we call upon them to take another vote upon the question, and in their calm moments determine whether they want that to be their final and definite policy in the future. If the people of Arizona, after repeated contests at the polls, say they want the initiative and the referendum and the recall of judges, shall we say to them that because we differ from them on these questions Congress will deny to that Territory for all time to come the right to be admitted as a State? Where is such a contest to end in the case of a Territory having all the requisites and qualifications of a State? If the Territory is finally coerced and compelled to present a constitution here without the provision for the recall of judges, and the Territory should be then admitted as a State, does not everybody know that immediately after such admission the State could pass a law providing for the recall of judges? If so, where is the practical feature in all this tempest? Have we not gone far enough when we provide that the people of Arizona shall again vote on the question?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Shall I suspend now? Does the Senator from Oregon desire to ask me a question?

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment——

Mr. BACON. I would rather the Senator would let me complete the statement. Then I shall be more than happy to yield.

It is heralded from one end of this country to the other, and it is going to be again heralded from one end of this country to the other, that on the one side there stand those who are opposed to the recall of judges and who therefore oppose the admission of Arizona, and on the other side there are those who are in favor of the recall of judges and who therefore vote to admit Arizona.

I deny, Mr. President, that that classification is a proper classification of Senators and Representatives, and I assert that that will be a misrepresentation, and is a misrepresentation, whether made on the floor of the Senate or made elsewhere, or whether made now or made hereafter. It is an unjust classification to put all those who voted for the admission of Arizona under these circumstances in the class of those who defend or justify or uphold or approve the recall of judges.

I repeat, the action was taken in requiring another vote on the question in Arizona because we did not approve the recall of judges, and because of the fact that Arizona has put it in her constitution we intended that they should have an opportunity to reconsider that act. But we recognized that, having reconsidered it, one of two things must be done—either we must say that Arizona should never be a State, or we must recognize the fact that when she became a State she would have a right to determine that for herself. And when we went to the extent of requiring her to take a second vote upon it, we went as far as propriety, in my opinion, permitted.

What, on the contrary, is the position occupied by the Senator from Idaho and those who agree with him upon that subject? The Senator from Idaho is a good lawyer; nobody questions that for a moment; and nobody will question for a moment that he recognizes the proposition as a proposition of law that when Arizona becomes a State she can have the recall of judges, and that there is no power in Congress to prevent it. The Senator knows that.

The decision of the Supreme Court is to that effect, and when Senators say "we will not vote for a constitution which permits the recall of judges even though we provide that they shall take another vote on that question," they must intend to say that they will for all time say to Arizona, "Unless you change your constitution in that regard we will not admit you at any time in the future." Are the American people ready to take any such position as that, and keep Arizona forever as a Territory unless she submits to such dictation as that?

How absolutely impractical that is when those who say that know that even if they do exact that of Arizona they can not prevent her changing it on the very next day after her admission.

Mr. President, I am not willing myself that the Senator from Idaho, or others in this Chamber or out of it, shall base their opposition to this bill which we have passed upon the contention that they are the saints of the earth and the great and only friends and guardians and protectors of the judiciary, and that the recall of judges is favored by all others who do not believe that we can do that which the Supreme Court says we can not do; or by others who, believing that we can not ultimately control it to the contrary, are still willing that the State shall come in, and that she shall decide these matters for herself. Disagreeing with them, as we do, recognizing, as we do, that the people of the State must ultimately control it for themselves, we simply provide a safeguard—that the people of Arizona shall immediately have a second vote upon and determine that question upon a reconsideration; and when they shall have again determined upon it, recognizing that it is their right so to determine, when they have so determined it, we recognize that one of two things must be—either that they shall be perpetually excluded, or else that when admitted they have the power to fix it in the way that they themselves shall determine, and that there is no power in this Government, executive or legislative or judicial, to deprive them of that right.

Mr. HEYBURN. The trouble is that we have said to them, "Match your judgment again against that of the Congress of the United States, and if you still differ, we will allow the judgment of an unorganized political body to outweigh the judgment of the United States Congress." That is the situation it is in to-day.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator, with his permission, this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho further yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Would the Senator from Idaho, if he were satisfied that the people of Arizona would not change their constitution in that particular in the next 100 years, be willing that the Congress of the United States—of course, he can not hope himself to be here that long—but would it be in accordance with his view of the proper action that the Congress of the United States for the next 100 years should say to Arizona, "You shall not be admitted as a member of the Union because of the fact that you favor the recall of judges"?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I do not think I would consent to a violation of the organic principles and laws of our land merely because it had been long insisted upon. That does not appeal to me at all.

Mr. BACON. That was not the question I asked the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is talking as though there were a sovereignty down there that is invested with sovereign rights. There is no sovereignty in Arizona.

Mr. BACON. The people are.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the people in an unorganized Territory are not sovereign.

Mr. BACON. But when they become a State they will be.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know, but they have not yet become a State. So we can eliminate all talk about sovereignty.

Mr. BACON. I should like the Senator to answer the question.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer it. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. BACON. I will limit the question to the term of the Senator's future as a Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have answered that.

Mr. BACON. No——

Mr. HEYBURN. I have said I would exclude them so long as they insisted upon that kind of a constitution.

Mr. BACON. With the full knowledge of the fact that if they were admitted with that eliminated from their constitution they would have the right on the day after their admission to put it back in their constitution, the Senator would still prohibit their coming in for all time until they made that as the preliminary condition?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not need to go that far, because when they become a State they are under exactly the same guidance and power as other States. But that would not excuse us for giving our approval to a constitution that on its face permitted them to do something we do not approve of, merely because they might at some later time do it.

Mr. BACON. Some of us do not give our approval to it. But that is the exact point, and the very fact that we put it into this bill that they shall vote on it again shows that we do not approve of it; but we recognize that if upon calm deliberation and a second consideration they determine to put it in, it is their right, and we have no right to interfere with them and coerce them to take it out of their constitution; and, further, that it would be child's play to do so, because they can change their constitution to their liking on the next day after their admission into the Union.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. For a question.

Mr. BOURNE. It is a question for the Chair. I should like to ask what motion is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is that the Senate proceed to the second reading of the bill.

Mr. BOURNE. The Senator from Idaho withdrew his motion to table the motion?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. That left the motion stand as though my motion had not been made.

Mr. BOURNE. So the question is on the second reading?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is on the motion to proceed to the second reading of the bill, and I have only imposed upon the time of the Senate in order that this bill may not go out unbranded and mislabeled during our absence between now and the next session of Congress.

I have stated my purpose. It is of more importance than any conference report or any tariff schedule or any other question now pending in either House of Congress. If a bill of this kind could become a law it would be a harder blow at the institutions of this country than the failure of all the legislation now pending in either or both Houses.

Does the Senator realize that—that this is an attack upon the Supreme Court of the United States and upon its jurisdiction such as no man has ever even suggested in either House of Congress?

Mr. BOURNE. I differ entirely with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know; but I do not yield merely to be differed with.

Mr. BOURNE. I think we ought to have argument on these points.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I welcome any argument.

Mr. BOURNE. I am waiting for them.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have waited, too, for interruptions, and cheerfully. I intend that the objections to this class of legislation shall be in the same RECORD as the motion to proceed to a second reading, so that when people read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD they will have something on the same pages that will probably explain this proposition.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. For a question.

Mr. BOURNE. I was simply going to state that I concurred with the Senator in his desire to have relativeness furnished in the RECORD; and I am speaking——

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not yield for a counter discussion, because that may come in the Senator's own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho declines to yield further.

Mr. HEYBURN. This undertakes to provide rules for the speedy and final decision of questions concerning the constitutionality of national and State laws.

In other words, if a State legislature were to enact a statute that was in plain violation of, or beyond its power under, the Constitution of the United States, it would require a unanimous decision by the Supreme Court of the United States to stay its operation. That is written on the face of the proposition.

Mr. BOURNE. Does not the Senator from Idaho think the Supreme Court would be able to detect that unconstitutionality and that the decision would be unanimous in that case?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator has confused his question somewhat. The Senator is undertaking to provide that the decision shall be unanimous in order that it may stay the operation of a State statute that is in violation of the Constitution of the United States. He undertakes to provide that it can only be determined by a unanimous Supreme Court that such statute of a State is in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Now, I can imagine nothing more subversive of the principles upon which our courts and legislative bodies rest or the principles that discriminate and distinguish between the power of the State and the power of Congress. Nothing could be more dangerous. There have been times in this country within the memory of the Senator from Oregon, within my memory and that of many men, when a rule of that kind would have compelled the Government of the United States to stand still while its flag was being hauled down and while this country was being dismembered, by the necessity of a unanimous decision as to the effect of a State statute.

When I said that the proposition was one fraught with so much danger that I could not sit here and see it advance along legislative lines without calling it to account, I was seriously in earnest and am now. I do not assume to advise the Senator from Oregon as to what he should do in the exercise of his duty as a Senator, but I would urge upon him to consider seriously the advisability of withdrawing that from the files of the Senate, because it will stand here as an effort to destroy the power of the Supreme Court of the United States; and the charges, while I do not make them or attribute them to the Senator from Oregon, against an effort of that kind, will be that it is in the interest of anarchy, in order that a new State, for instance, should there ever be a State of Arizona, controlled by the element that controlled its constitutional convention, can make a law subversive of the principles of our Government and no protection will exist in the Supreme Court of the United States for the General Government in dealing with that State.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BOURNE. I am obliged to the Senator from Idaho for his solicitude in reference to myself and the responsibility I have assumed. I think I fully understand the scope of this bill. I gave it due consideration before I took the responsibility of introducing it. I have introduced the bill and shall continue my motion to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary notwithstanding the strictures of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the time to check and brand that kind of legislation is when it seeks to enter the field of legislation.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 12812.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present the conference report on House bill 11019, and move that the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to enter an objection against the Senate receiving this report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An objection does not avail against the Senate's receiving a report.

Mr. HEYBURN. It seems to me, with all deference to the Chair, that at least that manner of procedure should be suggested; otherwise it might afterwards be held that that was the time. This comes, or purports to come, from the House. There is no legislative law under which this measure can come from the House to this body. Of course, the Senate will take notice of the fact that——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, the report which I present does not purport to come from the House. I present the report of the conferees of the Senate on the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, as an original report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the regular order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The papers that have come from the House should be on the Secretary's desk.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The papers are in the possession of the Senate, and I present the conference report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, Mr. President, but the record——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair may be indulged for a moment, the papers which the Senator from Wisconsin has on his desk should be on the Secretary's desk and should be laid before the Senate by the Chair, and then the Senator should present the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Chair will permit me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The papers having been messaged over to the Senate, they are in the possession of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And should be on the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then there can be no question, and I think there could have been no question before, under the rules of the Senate, that the conferees could have at any time presented their report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; but not until the Chair had laid before the Senate the papers that came from the other House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present the report without reference to the action of the House, as the Senate conferees have the perfect right to do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the papers should be here, and the papers are here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They are here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Chair present it as a conference report coming from the House?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He presents it as a message coming from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I will object to that. That was the objection I suggested, because, under the law governing both bodies, no such papers can come from the House. These papers were in the possession of the Senate. They have no right under the law to be in the possession of the other body. That is clearly the law. There can be no question about it, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not of that opinion.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is stated in the rule in regard to conference committees that the conference must be asked for by the House possessing the papers, and the papers must be left with the conferees of the House granting it; that is, the Senate. The Senate granted the conference; they are in possession of the papers. Whether physically in possession or not, they are in possession of them under the rule. In one case the papers were in the physical possession of neither body; they were lying on a table in a committee room; but the Chair ruled that inasmuch as the law governing both bodies with reference to conferences prevailed, they should be with the House granting the conference and the physical possession made no difference. These papers were in the hands of the Senate conferees, and the rules governing this body are as binding as the law of the land. Neither House can disregard them. It would require joint action of both Houses to disregard the rules that are made applicable to the joint procedure of the two Houses. They provide in unquestioned terms that the papers must be left with the conferees of the House granting the conference, by which House and at what stages to be asked is laid down on pages 139 and 140 of Jefferson's Manual, which is the law governing it.

Now, because, forsooth, the House wrongfully had the physical possession of the papers, it gave it no right to act upon the conference report; and if there was no jurisdiction in the House to pass upon the conference report then the Senate should not receive it. The Senate acts originally upon the report under the law.

The Senator from Wisconsin, having charge of these papers and of this conference report, may very properly make an original report to the Senate, but there is nothing in the papers purporting to be a message from the House that can be laid before the Senate any more than as though there had been no bill passed. There is no jurisdiction for it to pass upon it.

Inasmuch as this has been the subject of frequent discussion, commencing as early as 1813 and carried all through the line of precedents, and it having been uniformly held that the mere accidental possession of the papers was not the possession contemplated by the parliamentary law governing us, I take the position that if we act here this morning, we must act upon the report of the conference that comes from our own conferees and not upon the report coming over from the House.

See the difference that it makes in legislation. It gives this body the possession and the jurisdiction of the question now, and it may never go to the House. This conference report may die or be defeated in this body, and it is a very serious question, affecting legislation vitally. It is not a question of easy accommodation, because we have the conference report here where it belongs. There can be no action in the other body until this body has acted upon it. There can not be concurrent action. There can not be concurrent jurisdiction to act upon it. It affects the very life of the legislation.

Suppose it were an appropriation bill, the conference being granted by the Senate, the mere fact that the papers were placed upon the wrong table or handed to the wrong man would not affect the jurisdiction of this body to first determine the action of the conference as to accepting or rejecting it. It would affect the legislation vitally, because until this body does pass upon it the other body has no jurisdiction.

Now, because, and only because, of the seriousness of this question have I assumed to take the time of the Senate. Here is a bill coming to the Senate from the House as other revenue bills, acted upon by the Senate, amended, and the conference at the hands of the Senate, the bill in the possession of the Senate, safe against the contention of the other body. Our amendments are safe against attack until after we have passed upon the question as to whether we will insist upon the amendments. It would be, if I may use a familiar term, rather slipshod legislation to say it did not make any difference which House passed upon it first, because one House might be favorable to the legislation and the other unfavorable to it, and if it came to the House under the parliamentary law that had jurisdiction of it that House would have a right to keep the legislation within its own possession and say that unless you do concur in the views of this body we will not permit this legislation to again see the daylight. That is not only a great privilege, but it is a sacred privilege. It belongs to the jurisdiction of the House, whichever one it may be, and gives it the power to control and enforce its legislation.

I urge this not because it would probably make much difference in this case, and yet it might. This wool schedule is open to debate and it is open to debate in this body and not in any other until after this body has passed upon the report and either adopted it or rejected it or sent the conferees back.

I do not want to discuss the wool schedule upon the basis of a conference report coming from the House, but I do want to discuss it upon the basis of a conference report coming from our own conferees originally into this body. Therefore I ask that the report offered by the Senator from Wisconsin be the report accepted by the Senate, and that the Senate do not accept the other report, because it is without jurisdiction, and that fact is within the knowledge of this body and needs no proof or circumstance to establish it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the report presented by the Senate conferees is the only report before the Senate. It is presented under the rules and is in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not object to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand the Senator from Idaho does not object to that.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; but I object to the one that the Chair presented.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But that is not the report which is before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Chair presented it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin presented a conference report, which he had a right to do under the rule. The Senate received a message from the House of Representatives on yesterday transmitting certain papers. It was necessary that those papers should be here to have the report of the Senator from Wisconsin acted upon. They are here. The report is here. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move that the Senate agree to the report of the Senate committee of conference.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate agree to the conference report. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the conference report be printed. It will obviate the necessity of interrogating the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have it presented to the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator concur in the request that it be printed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read, and when read will be printed in the RECORD as a matter of course.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I expected it to be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator consent that it go over and be printed, so that we may have the print before us when we discuss it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to dispose of it to-day——

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think that is possible.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is possible.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think it is possible.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The better course perhaps is to have the conference report read first any way.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the conference report read.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That will put it in the RECORD.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended by striking out all of Schedule K thereof, being paragraphs 360 to 395, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Schedule K. Wool and manufactures thereof.

"360. On wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and on all wools and hair on the skin of such animals, the duty shall be 29 per cent ad valorem.

"361. On all noils, top waste, card waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, bur waste, thread waste, garnetted waste, shoddies, mungo, flocks, wool extract, carbonized wool, carbonized noils, and on all other wastes and on woolen rags composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 29 per cent ad valorem.

"362. On combed wool or tops and roving or roping, made wholly of wool or camel's hair, or of which wool or camel's hair is the component material of chief value, and all wools and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 32 per cent ad valorem.

"363. On yarns made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 35 per cent ad valorem.

"364. On cloths, knit fabrics, flannels not for underwear, composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, and goods of similar description and character, clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including shawls, whether knitted or woven, and knitted articles of every description made up or manufactured wholly or in part, felts not woven, and not specially provided for in this section, webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, bandings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, edgings, insertings, flouncings, fringes, gimps, cords, cords and tassels, ribbons, ornaments, laces, trimmings, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, embroideries and all articles embroidered by hand or machinery, head nets, nettings, buttons or barrel buttons or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, and manufactures of wool ornamented with beads or spangles of whatever material composed, on any of the foregoing and on all manufactures of every description made by any process of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, whether containing india rubber or not, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 49 per cent ad valorem.

"365. On all blankets, and flannels for underwear, composed wholly of wool, or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 38 per cent ad valorem.

"366. On Aubusson, Axminster, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; on Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; and on carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms, and oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs, the duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem.

"367. On Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; and on velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, the duty shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

"368. On tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise; on treble ingrain, three-ply, and all-chain Venetian carpets; on wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets; on druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise; and on carpets and carpetings of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, not especially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

"369. Mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description.

"370. On all manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animal, or of which any of the hair mentioned in paragraph 360 form the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 49 per cent ad valorem.

"371. Whenever in this act the word 'wool' is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, whether manufactured by the woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process."

SEC. 2. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry or withdrawal thereof than the duty which would be imposed if such goods, wares, or merchandise were imported on or after that date.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of October, 1911.

And the Senate agree to the same.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
J. W. BAILEY,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
C. B. RANDELL,
FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will present to the Senate a written statement by the managers on the part of the Senate:

The managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and the manufactures of wool, submit the following statement upon the agreement recommended in the accompanying report:

The agreement of the committee of conference is in the form of a substitute for the House bill and the amendment of the Senate as to the differences between the two Houses on the rates of duty on wool and the manufactures thereof, is as follows:

The rate of duty agreed upon for all raw wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and on all wools and hair on the skin of such animals, is 29 per cent ad valorem instead of 20 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 35 per cent ad valorem on fine wools, 30 per cent ad valorem on fine wools on the skin, and 10 per cent ad valorem on all coarse wools and hair, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for all wool wastes and woolen rags is 29 per cent ad valorem instead of 20 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the House bill and the rates of 25 per cent ad valorem on shoddy, noils, wool extract, yarn waste and thread waste, woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, and 30 per cent ad valorem on top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and garnetted waste, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for combed wool or tops and on all wools and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for, is 32 per cent ad valorem instead of 25 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 40 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for yarns is 35 per cent ad valorem instead of 30 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 45 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for cloths, knit fabrics, women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, buntings and goods of similar description and character, ready-made clothing and articles of wearing apparel of every description not specially provided for is 49 per cent ad valorem instead of 40 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill on cloths, knit fabrics, felts not woven, and all manufactures of every description not specially provided for, and 45 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, on women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, and goods of similar description, and 45 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the House bill on ready-made clothing and articles of wearing apparel of every description not specially provided for, and 35 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the House bill on webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, bandings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, edgings, insertings, flouncings, fringes, guimps, cords, cords and tassels, ribbons, ornaments, laces, trimmings and articles made wholly or in part of lace, embroideries, and so forth, 55 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for all blankets and flannels for underwear, composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, is 38 per cent ad valorem, instead of 30 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the House bill on blankets and flannels valued at less than 50 cents per pound, and 45 per cent ad valorem as proposed in the House bill on blankets and flannels composed wholly or in part of wool when valued at more than 50 cents per pound, and 55 per cent ad valorem on all blankets and flannels for underwear as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for Aubusson, Axminster, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, on Saxony, Wilton, and Tourney velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpeting of like character or description, and on carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms, and on Oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs, is 50 per cent ad valorem instead of 40, 35, and 50 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in House bill, and 35 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and on velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp, or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, is 40 per cent ad valorem instead of 30 and 25 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 35 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let me interrupt the Senator, Mr. President. I should like to have those figures stated again.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The rate of duty agreed upon for Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and on velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp, or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, is 40 per cent ad valorem instead of 30 and 25 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 35 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is 40 per cent ad valorem in the conference report?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In the conference report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Instead of 30 per cent and 25 per cent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Instead of 30 per cent and 25 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 35 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that can not be done by a conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, I will conclude the reading of the report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but I want to be able to identify that item, because it is in violation of the rules governing conference committees.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That we will discuss hereafter. [Continuing the reading of the statement of the Senate conferees:]

The rate of duty agreed upon for tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise, and on treble ingrain three-ply, and all chain Venetian carpets, and on wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets, and on druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, is 30 per cent ad valorem instead of 25 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 35 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

The rate of duty agreed upon for all manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals is 49 per cent ad valorem instead of 35, 40, and 45 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the House bill, and 30 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment. This change was made necessary as a result of increasing the duty on the raw material from 10 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Senate amendment, to 29 per cent ad valorem, as insisted upon by the House conferees.

It is agreed that the date when the act shall take effect and be in force be changed from January 1, 1912, to October 1, 1911.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
J. W. BAILEY,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho having objected to the present consideration of the conference report, the question is, Will the Senate now consider the report?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know it is not; but, if the Chair will permit me, I did not understand whether the Senator from Wisconsin agreed to have this printed to-day. I would not raise the point if it could be printed to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It may be that the Senator does not wish it considered now; but the Chair understood that he did.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I certainly have asked for its consideration to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho objects. Therefore, the question is on the motion to consider the conference report.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before the Senator from Idaho begins, so that the Senator will not misunderstand the Chair, the Chair laid before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives which was sent over with the conference report, which was agreed to there. The Senator from Idaho objected to its receipt. The Chair stated to the Senator from Idaho that an objection did not avail. It may be that the Senate might desire to refuse to receive the report on motion by a vote, but a single objection would not avail. The Chair wanted to make that plain to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think it is of sufficient importance, both as it affects this case and as determining the practice, to raise that question and let it be passed upon. I move that the Senate will not receive the report from the other House. I think the Chair has just stated that in rather different language. I objected to receiving the report, and I ask that that question be submitted. If a motion is not in order, the Chair, I presume, under general parliamentary practice, would submit the question to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the motion that the Senate refuse to accept the message from the other House would be in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, I make the motion that the Senate refuse to accept the message from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho moves that the Senate refuse to accept the message from the House of Representatives transmitting the House conference report with the information that it has been adopted by the House. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The motion is lost.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays, and I hope they will be given.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, I will bring the matter to the attention of the Senate. If Senators are not impressed with the responsibility of maintaining the rules that protect their own procedure, I will not be included in that irresponsibility. There is no clearer proposition stated in the legislative law governing this body than that the Senate should stand upon its rights in regard to this matter, yet in this hour it seems to be very careless as to whether it does. The time may come, and the time will come, when it will realize that questions of this kind are worthy of more than a smile. The idea of the Senate of the United States caring so little for the parliamentary rules that protect it in its legislation as to refuse the yeas and nays on a motion of that kind will some day be appalling. Perhaps Senators would rather get home. Well, that is a worthy desire sometimes.

This report violates the law governing and limiting the rights of conferees in more than one instance. A few instances will be sufficient. The conferees have raised the duties on carpets above both rates prescribed by the House and the Senate. They can not do it unless they choose to violate that rule, as they have shown a willingness to have other laws violated; that is all. I do not know that it avails anything to point out these violations of the law in this hour, but it shall never be said that they were not pointed out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I do.

Mr. SMOOT. While the Senator from Idaho is on that point I want to call his attention to a more flagrant case than that of carpets.

The duty on the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals was 20 per cent under the Underwood bill and free under the original La Follette bill; the La Follette substitute made it 10 per cent, and now the conferees come in here with a report to make the duty 29 per cent.

Mr. HEYBURN. We might extend that criticism to several other items; in fact to nearly all of them. In this hour of absolute disregard of the law, perhaps that will be all right.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the proper way to reach this point, if there has been a change made by the conferees which is not authorized, would be by a point of order.

Mr. HEYBURN. A change! Why, the changes are too numerous to count.

Mr. CURTIS. What I desire to know is whether the Senator is making a point of order against such changes?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I am not making a point of order, because I propose to let the RECORD show for the future how seriously these questions were considered at this time—whether it was more important to get home than it was to follow the law.

The rate of duty proposed upon yarns is 35 per cent ad valorem, instead of 30 per cent, as fixed in the House bill, and 45 per cent, as proposed by the Senate amendment. That is within the rule; that is a compromise between two rates; but 49 per cent as against 40 per cent, the highest rate proposed by either House, is not within the rule; in other words, the conference committee have assumed to legislate outside of and beyond the terms of the bill of either House, and they have done it in direct violation of the laws governing conferences. There is a line of decisions in our book of precedents, covering pages, wherein the law is stated as it has been since the earliest days of the Congress of the United States that prohibits it; and the same is true in all legislative bodies.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand, Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was that the Senate adopt the conference report. After that the Chair put the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report, which motion was agreed to. Now, I ask, for the purpose of ascertaining just exactly what is the parliamentary situation, is the question now before the Senate on the motion to adopt the conference report?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do I understand that to be the parliamentary situation, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion to adopt the conference report.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the points which appear upon the face of the statement read by the Senator in charge of the conference report do not attract the attention of this body in this hour, perhaps some day, when these conditions are cited as a precedent, Senators will take notice. If we want to establish a precedent of this kind at this time for convenience, it may be inconvenient to meet these questions in future legislation. So much for the report.

Mr. President, the reduction of the duty upon wool, from 11 cents to 29 per cent ad valorem, is destructive of that interest in this country and also destructive of the meat interest involved in it. The duty of 29 per cent ad valorem on the price of wool yesterday in the market from which we buy wool is less than 2 cents a pound. It is a reduction from 11 cents today to less than 2 cents a pound. I have taken some care to ascertain the price upon which the customs duties would be estimated at the customhouse, and on the basis of yesterday's prices the duty as proposed in the conference report would have been one and a little over seven-eighths cents. They call that protection.

The wool industry of this country has grown up under a protective duty of 11 cents a pound. Senators, in the kindness of their hearts, have sought to excuse somebody for something by saying that it is only nominally 11 cents. I have gone as far into that question as the facts and conditions will permit it to be investigated, and I take issue with them. Merely because one quality of wool is included in the classification under the Payne-Aldrich bill, it does not follow that it diminishes the duty of 11 cents upon the fleeces.

I have taken some pains to ascertain the percentage of wool coming into this country that comes in fleeces. Such wool is unskirted; it comes in whole fleeces, and it includes the skirting clause, upon which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a few days ago gave us some very interesting information. When you bring the whole fleece in under a duty of 11 cents, it is immaterial how much of it comes in under the skirting clause or any other classification, because the duty is upon the whole fleece, to be apportioned in the estimate only by the purchaser and not at the customhouse. The great bulk of wool that comes into this country comes in whole fleeces.

I wonder if Senators know, as a business proposition, what is the effect of this conference report. It used to be said to us that by reducing duties we enlarge our foreign market. I heard that preached up and down this country in 1892, in 1894, and in 1896. They said that unless we gave the world generous terms the world would not buy of us. I have the Government's figures before me. Taking the two periods of four years, the outside world bought less of us when we were buying most in the foreign market. In the four years from 1894, covering 1897—really three years and a half—our imports of wool doubled. I am speaking in general terms to avoid using the detailed figures which I have before me. Our exports during that same time averaged about 25 per cent less than they did during the four years previous. There is the answer to the proposition that the world will not buy of us unless we buy of them and admit their goods free of duty. The importations of wool during the four years of the Wilson law were more than double the importations of the same commodity during the preceding four years and during the succeeding four years; so that the removal of the tariff on wool resulted in doubling our importation, diminishing and destroying the industry. It not only added nothing to the export trade, but diminished it. It diminished it, because as the flocks went out of existence we did not have the commodity to sell; we did not have that proportion and kind of commodity that goes into the foreign market.

Now, you are trying in this hour to repeat that experience, and you will succeed if you ever get this bill through. I have been admonished that there will be nothing gained by speaking in this hour; that there is some power waiting somewhere to lift our hope on wings of relief and protect us against our mistake. Well, I have no responsibility there; I have one here, and I propose to keep pretty close to my own responsibility and to rely as little as possible upon the responsibility of somebody else, and I do not care where that responsibility is.

I do not want this measure to go out to the country as having received anything but the condemnation of those who believe in the protective tariff policy of the Republican Party, and I do not intend that it shall. I want it printed in the same pages that tell the world of the mistake of this hour that we were not unconscious of the folly that we were committing.

It is a serious question. It is said: "Oh, do not be afraid; it will not become a law. We are going to shift our responsibility on to the shoulders of the executive branch of the Government." That does not appeal to me. I do not know what the President of the United States is going to do. I do care, but I do not know, and I am not going to anticipate his action. If it were as hot in here as the desert of Sahara and the days were longer than they are, nevertheless I would give some attention to a duty that rested upon me.

Mr. President, those figures ought to stop any man on either side of the House right here and compel him to vote against this report. Those figures are not in thousands of dollars; they are figures in hundreds of millions of dollars. Just think of the American people in those years of distress, those lean years, when it was all that they could do to live through them, and but for the hope at the end they would have been unable to endure them, just think of them paying out during that time $990,000,000 for wool to foreign countries! That money never came back—not a dollar of it. Nine hundred and ninety million dollars were spent abroad for wool that we should have and could have produced right here at home, and yet we sit here and let this conference report, that is a violation of every rule that governs this body, proceed to adoption, and we look on with a smile.

Do we regard it as unimportant to enact legislation that removes the duty on wool? Congress might as well have gone on and imposed a fine upon the raisers of sheep. It could not have hurt them any worse. They are being destroyed. A duty of 29 per cent on wool which in the market is worth 7¼ cents—and the market price is the basis upon which ad valorem duties are estimated—is a pretense. When you talk about 29 per cent protection on wool you are talking about a farce, and yet it is said, "Do not bother yourself; somebody will save us; somebody will throw out a plank." Why, a measure like that ought to be opposed upon this floor as long as the strength of men would endure. You sit here and draw $7,500 a year, and you will not starve, but you will starve thousands of people elsewhere who do not draw $7,500 a year; you will starve them all right, and yet the matter is regarded as a joke.

I am not speaking alone for my own State, but I am speaking for the citizens of all the States where this industry prevails.

Idaho is one of the large hay-producing States. Her hay crop is worth $15,000,000 a year. The sheep make a market for that crop. It is sold and fed to these animals, which, with the shepherd and his crook, are about to start for new pastures away from our country. It is a matter—I can not call it a matter of sentiment, and it would be absurd to call it a matter of business, so I will leave it unbranded. Yet we are expected patiently to sit here and see it go somewhere, in the hope that somebody will "scotch the snake." Of course, I have no hope of doing more than to express the views I entertain. I am not going to attempt any filibuster against this report, but I have some difficulty in keeping my mind within conservative lines of expression when I contemplate this kind of legislation.

Then they want to shut down the cotton mills of the South and the North for spite; they want to do so because somebody did something to them. I can not vote for that kind of thing. I would stand here opposing the reduction of the duties on cotton goods and manufactures just as long as I would on wool or lumber or farm products or the products of the mine or anything else, because I am a protectionist by principle and not by section.

We feed millions of dollars' worth of hay and grain to flocks that are involved in this kind of legislation, but we will not have the market for that hay and grain when these animals have been legislated out of the country.

It seems to me that this is the hour of political madness. We are in the dog days, and that may account for it, perhaps; but it is surely the hour of political madness when men will stand here with theories and fancies in regard to legislation affecting the interests of other people and propose a measure so absolutely devoid of justice and reason as is this.

Senators from cotton States, how could you support a measure like that, and then, as you must, insist upon adequate protection between your cotton producers and spinners and those of other countries in the world? It has started out wrong on both sides. Somebody thought months ago that they could get into power by fooling the people as to what ought to be done, and promising that they would do it. They made a mistake. They said, "We will get somebody to tell us what it costs to produce things abroad and at home and compare them, then we will fix the profit that they shall make, and the Government will guarantee success to business enterprises by fixing the per cent of profit." Well, if they can do it in commerce, why can they not do it in the case of railroads and every other enterprise, including banks, and say how much money the banks shall make?

Just look at this for a moment. I want to call your attention to this phase of ad valorem duties. Here are the quotations on wool. This is interesting. In the year 1910 coarse wool, washed wool, was 34 cents; in 1909 it was 73 cents. I will go one year back. In 1908 is was 36 cents. Suppose the ad valorem duties had been based upon the price of wool in 1898, and then the next year wool went up to 75 cents, would you change the tariff schedule to conform to the change in the value of the commodity?

Suppose upon wool, which last year was worth 22 cents a pound, which, upon a customhouse basis, would be about 13, you put 29 per cent ad valorem, and this year it is 13½—yesterday 14—what becomes of the equality in the protection? An ad valorem duty of 15 cents wool last year and on 6¾ and 7 cents wool to-day—I am giving foreign prices now—would mean that you would either have to readjust your tariff schedules every year or that the man in business would have to readjust his business through the hands of a receiver.

Ad valorem duties shift and change every day. I have before me a table of the price of commodities affected by this schedule this year and last year and the year before, showing the uncertainty and unsatisfactory methods of an ad valorem duty that must be based or estimated at the customhouse by percentage upon price at the time of the importation with the varying prices that occur every month and sometimes every day.

Then, again, look at this: What effect would it have upon merchants' undertakings? A merchant buys wool in May. He buys wool in May, and pays an ad valorem duty upon the basis of 7 cents. His neighbor buys it in July, and pays an ad valorem duty upon 5 cents. How are those two men going to have fair competition, based upon the cost of the product that they are selling?

You take a woolen mill that is using up tons of wool a day. One mill on one side of the street buys it when the ad valorem duty of 29 per cent amounts to only, say, 5 cents, and wool drops, as it did when this bill was reported, 4 cents a day, and his neighbor buys his wool on the reduced market with the advantage of 4 cents in price and 29 per cent of 4 cents added to that, and then they both start their mills to work to manufacture it, and one of them has a product that cost him one price and the other has a product that cost him a greater price, and how are those two men both going to live in the business world? One of them can sell the other out of existence.

There is the difficulty with that class of duties; and the idea of a Republican conference committee or a Republican Senate shifting from specific to ad valorem duties in an hour, as it were, abandoning the principles that they have contended for since the foundation of the party. At whose behest? At the behest of those who have never known anything of practical government or politics—and I use it in the respectable sense and not in the disreputable sense—who have known nothing about it; who theorize and talk about it, but who have never successfully conducted either a political or a business enterprise. They came here and said, "Why, yes; ad valorem duties." If you could fix by legislation the price at which commodities should be bought, and have it fixed for a year, then all men would be on the same footing buying on the basis of ad valorem duties. But inasmuch as the price shifts every day, the cost of the product of the buyer in this country differs every day.

The great party of protection seems to be napping at this time. It seems to be in the hands of men who care more for being in office than they do for the principles of the party they are supposed to represent. That is what is the matter with our party politics to-day. The question is, "Can I stay there another term? Can I be reelected?" It is not the question, "Are you for the old principles of the party that have been tried and tested and found to be sufficient?" That is not the question. The question is, "How many votes will it cost me if I do this or that or do not do it?"

The great difficulty is that the virus of this condition finds its way into the coming voters—that is, the generation who are to follow—and I am afraid it will require a severe dose of experience to cure this evil.

Mr. President, I am loath to see the conditions that surround us to-day in legislation. We met here under the supposition that the country was in distress, travail, and that we had to redeem it. We have been in session since April, and we have widened Florida Avenue 3 feet for a length of two squares, and we have provided for the building of some bridges across some rivers; but we have not passed a single law except two urgent deficiency bills. They were, of course, a natural result of this session. Outside of that we have enacted no legislation.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Idaho forgets when we corrected the errors of the last Congress in a matter in which he was vitally interested.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; we did not do that. We repealed some laws that were enacted at the last session.

But we did widen Florida Avenue, and of course that was important. Some people think we have passed a reciprocity tariff act, but we have not. We have to have the consent of a little lady up north here that we see pictured so often as Miss Canada. We are in small business. Instead of being a dominant power among the nations of the earth, we are waiting at the behest of a people that are not a nation, but only a Province. We are not even matching pennies with a full-grown opponent. We are matching pennies with Canada, and Canada will probably do what the small child generally does—it will flaunt its fingers at us and trot away.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not consider that the time of the session has been entirely lost, because we have had a great deal of interesting talk.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is perhaps gainful to some. I have benefited by much that I have heard, but I would have gotten it anyhow at some time. But we have been engaged in high patriotic duties.

They tell us that no measure that has been voted upon here will receive the approval of the Executive. I am not going to enter into the consideration of that. If it does not receive that approval, we have wasted our time, and these speeches to which the Senator from Georgia refers have gone off into the air. But it has been a great occasion. It is useful as a lesson, just as the danger sign is useful at the air hole in the ice. We will probably not again skate around so near to it. I think that somebody else will think before they spend $2,000,000 as the expense of keeping men who happen to be in office at their duties. I think so. There never was such a waste of time and money in the history of the Government as that represented by this futile Congress in special session.

If any Senator can call my attention to any measure of value that has or will become a law by reason of this special session, I will be interested to know about it, and so will the people when they inquire about it. They will be interested, and they will wait for an answer just about a minute, and if the answer does not come quick and sharp and clear and satisfactory, the people will probably indulge in a pronouncement that will not be forgotten in the lifetime of anyone present.

Now, take this wool bill, and if you will, sacrifice the interests of these people whom you do not know, but who are just as much citizens of this country and entitled to the benefits of its laws as are the Members of this body. I have said my say.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not purpose to take the time of the Senate to reply to anything said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] except to his strictures upon the conference committee for having departed from the rates fixed in either the Senate or the House bill.

This bill, of course, originated with the House. It came to the Senate. It was not amended by the Senate except as it was amended by the substitute striking out everything below the enacting clause and introducing an absolutely new measure. That opened the entire subject to the fixing of such rates as the conferees might see fit to name.

There is a uniform line of precedents upon that subject, and I send to the clerk's desk for reading by the clerk only two or three, which I have marked, reported in Hinds' Precedents:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6421:

"Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text, and the differences over this substitute are referred to conference, the managers have a wide discretion in incorporating germane matters, and may even report a new bill on the subject. On March 3, 1865, Mr. Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 51) entitled 'An act to establish a bureau of freedman's affairs,' reported that the Senate had receded from their amendment, which was a substitute, and the committee had agreed upon, as a substitute, a new bill, entitled 'An act to establish a bureau for the relief of freedmen and refugees.'

"As soon as the report had been read, Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point that the report did not come within the scope of the conference committee. It did not report the proceedings of the Senate or an agreement by the committee on an amendment to the Senate's amendment to the House bill, but it reported an entire substitute for both the original bill and the substitute adopted by the Senate, and it established a department unprovided for by either of the other bills."

The Speaker [Mr. Colfax] said:

"The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead. Two separate bills have been referred to the committee, and they can take either one of them or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either. They have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them."

On an appeal the Chair was sustained—yes 89, nays 35.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the ruling of Mr. Speaker Carlisle.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Section 6422 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5:

"'6422. On August 3, 1886, the House had under consideration the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill.

"'Mr. William M. Springer, of Illinois, made the point of order that the conferees had included new matter in their report.

"'The Speaker (Mr. Carlisle) ruled:

"'The House passed a bill to provide for the improvement of rivers and harbors and making an appropriation for that purpose. That bill was sent to the Senate, where it was amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a different proposition in some respects, but a proposition having the same object in view. When that came back to the House it was treated, and properly so, as one single amendment and not as a series of amendments, as was contended for by some gentlemen on the floor at the time.

"'It was nonconcurred in by the House and a conference was appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. That conference committee having met, reports back the Senate amendment as a single amendment with various amendments, and recommends that it be concurred in with the other amendments which the committee has incorporated in its report. The question, therefore, is not whether the provisions to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes are germane to the original bill as it passed the House, but whether they are germane to the Senate amendment which the House had under consideration and which was referred to the committee of conference. If germane to that amendment, the point of order can not be sustained on the ground claimed by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair thinks they are germane to the Senate amendment, for, though different from the provisions contained in the Senate amendment, they relate to the same subject, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.'"

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the decision by Mr. Speaker Henderson.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Section 6423, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

"'6423. On February 25, 1901, Mr. GILBERT N. HAUGEN, of Iowa, presented the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898.

"'The conferees recommended that the House recede from its amendment, which was in the nature of a substitute, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a new text; and they further recommended that the House agree to the Senate text with certain specified amendments.

"'Mr. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, made a point of order that the conferees had exceeded their authority and incorporated in their report matters not in difference between the two Houses. The House text had substituted reference to the Court of Claims instead of to the commission proposed by the Senate text. The conferees not only recommended the adoption of the Senate text, but had enlarged the provisions of it, making the number of commissioners five instead of three, although, he asserted, there was no issue between the two Houses on this point, and also materially changing the Senate text in those portions relating to the right of appeal.'

"After debate the Speaker [Mr. Henderson] held:

"'The current of authorities in regard to the action of the conferees is that they must be held strictly to the consideration of such matters as are in issue between the two Houses. That is the general governing principle, and a most valuable one, and a necessary one. In this case, however, the Chair sees no difficulty. As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Mahon], the Senate presents a proposition for a commission; the House turns that down, so to speak, and adopts an amendment, by way of substitute, providing that these Spanish claims shall be referred for determination to the Court of Claims. In other words, the Senate contends for a commission, the House for the Court of Claims. The method of treating these Spanish claims is thus put in issue. The House, when it sent over to the Senate its amendment by way of substitute, said: 'We will not entertain your method; we have a better one; we offer you a substitute whereby these matters shall be referred to the Court of Claims instead of a commission.' That puts in issue every question bearing upon this controversy between the two Houses. The able remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] have not suggested a single question that is not brought in issue between the two Houses in the present position of this question. The conferees have not gone beyond the matters in issue. On this point the Chair will ask the Clerk to read from the Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representatives, section 1420, a decision made by Speaker Colfax.'

"The section having been read, the Speaker concluded:

"'The House will readily see that the precedent just read bears strongly on this question, although in the present case the conferees have not gone so far as they did in that case. There is nothing here that is not germane to the main issue. In reference to no matter in controversy between the two Houses have the conferees attempted to trench upon or change a single expression that the two Houses have agreed upon. The Senate sends to this House a bill for which the House presents a substitute, and the report of the conferees seeks only to treat the matters in issue. The Chair feels clear that he is justified in overruling the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the report.'"

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The precedents which I have requested the Secretary to read completely answer the criticism made by the Senator from Idaho. I do not care to take the time of the Senate to make any reply to anything the Senator from Idaho said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that the Senator from Idaho raised the point of order, although he discussed it. So there is nothing to dispose of.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate long, but I do feel it my duty to call its attention to some of the inconsistencies in the bill as reported by the majority of the conferees of the two Houses.

I also wish to call the attention of the Senate to the course taken by this legislation. I have been a Senator for over eight years, and I have never yet seen a piece of legislation acted upon and pushed through Congress in the way that this has been. It came to this body from the House with certain specified rates, supposed to be the rates that the House of Representatives thought proper as Democratic revenue rates. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] made a speech July 26 upon a substitute that he offered to the bill, and a compromise was reached between the Senator and the Democratic Party to pass his substitute bill with a revision of rates before ever the speech was printed in the RECORD or before any Senator had any chance to read it. I want to call attention now——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not mean there was an agreement before any bill was passed?

Mr. SMOOT. I said before the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh!

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the attention of Senators now to the House bill, to what is known as the "La Follette original substitute," and to what is known as the "La Follette substitute," agreed to by him and the Democratic Party, and passed by the Senate, and to the conference report as the conferees agreed last Saturday.

Again, I suppose a nickel was put in the compromise slot machine yesterday and brought forth another change in the conference report. These substitutes are all different, changed sometimes to the amount of 200 per cent. I noticed in his speech the Senator from Wisconsin made this statement:

I want to ask the attention of Senators upon this particular point: The amendment which I offer, starting with a 40 per cent duty on the raw product—the raw wool—as a base line, has been worked out with elaborate care, and with the assistance of the best experts, I believe, in this country.

That was the statement the Senator from Wisconsin made upon this floor when he offered his original bill, and he goes on and states:

For whatever I have done in constructive legislation, here or elsewhere, I have done not because I have made conquest of the whole field of knowledge but because I have always been willing to call to my assistance the best expert knowledge of the country, and I think I have done that in the construction of the amendment which I have submitted to the Senate. I say to you that beginning with the 40 per cent base line on raw wools, as you follow the product of raw wool step by step clear through to the finished manufacture, every article takes the duty which it should be given in order to measure the cost of production in the various stages.

I want the Senate to take notice of these perfect rates that had been so carefully studied out and that had been prepared by the best expert knowledge in the country, and see what has become of them and what the Senator from Wisconsin has reported back to the Senate and for which he is asking the votes of Senators.

In the La Follette original substitute Class 1 wool carried a rate of 40 per cent and through some source of juggling of figures or by the mere whim of two men, one from each House, having the destiny in their hands of nearly a billion dollars of property with millions of people depending upon it, submit a conference report and instead of the 40 per cent rate that was based on the best expert knowledge possible to obtain they now say that 29 per cent is the proper rate.

Class 2 wools, certain of them, were 40 per cent. Now they are 29 per cent.

Class 3 wools were 10 per cent. Now they are 29 per cent.

Was the expert wrong? Is the 200 per cent increase right now or was it wrong before?

In his original bill he had the hair of the camel and the Angora goat and the alpaca and other like animals on the free list, and here we find it at 29 per cent.

Let us examine some of the rates upon manufactured goods and see what has resulted to that wonderfully scientific substitute after being studied as no brain ever studied a bill before and presented to the Senate. On this point I read from the Philadelphia North American:

> The La Follette bill is the most scientifically framed protective tariff measure ever presented to Congress.

And not two weeks have passed until its author has consented to changes in some instances amounting to 200 per cent increase. Oh, scientific, of course! I say the bill as reported has been juggled and rates changed by compromises and not because the House bill, the La Follette substitute, or the bill as reported from conference are based upon a scientific principle, but for other purposes.

Again from the same paper:

> It was prepared by a board of experts in strict accordance with the party promise of basing tariff legislation upon scientific data which would show with mathematical accuracy the difference between the labor cost of production in this and competing countries.

Here we have before us, as I said, a report offered by the author of that scientific substitute asking for your votes with changes amounting to 200 per cent in some cases.

Take combed wools or tops. The House provided for 25 per cent. The La Follette original bill provided for 45 per cent. The substitute bill provided for 40 per cent; the conference of last Saturday provided for 34 per cent; and the conference of yesterday provided for 30 per cent.

Take yarns: The House provided 30 per cent; the La Follette original bill provided 50 per cent; the La Follette substitute bill provided 45 per cent; the conference report last Saturday provided 39 per cent, and the conference report of yesterday morning provided 35 per cent. Conditions must have changed rapidly in this country if these are scientific rates as has been told us.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Utah look upon the tariff bill of 1909 as a scientific production?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I look upon it as being as much of a scientific production as the present bill and a great deal more so. In the framing of the tariff bill of 1909 at least all the Members of the majority party had something to say about it, but in this case only two, one Member of the Senate and one of the House decided upon the rate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am speaking now of scientific accuracy. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah further whether he remembers what was done in the paragraph relating to structural iron and steel and the paragraph relating to oilcloths and linoleums in the conference committee; and I ask the Senator whether he regards the work of both the conference committee and the Senate, which was then being led by the Senator from Utah and his associates, as scientific.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember very well that certain structural steel—that is, assembled structural steel—was changed in conference. I was not one of the conferees. I remember also that the floor oilcloth and linoleum paragraph, 347, as I remember it, was changed as to the wording in the conference.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only wanted to ask the Senator this question, and was leading up to it. My question relates to a great many other paragraphs. If these duties were right when they left the Senate, were they also right when they were returned to the Senate from the conference committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as far as changes in conference were made there were very, very few in the Payne-Aldrich bill. I think the Senator covered the two principal ones in the question asked by him.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can remind the Senator from Utah of another very serious one, and that is the paragraph which covers the duty on window glass.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that was changed. The paragraph on window glass was voted upon in the Senate, and the changes were made upon a motion offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood the Senator to say that the Senate conference report had been made on Saturday, and he stated the rates fixed in that conference report, and that since that report was made it had been changed. Is that true?

Mr. SMOOT. I have here House bill 11019, a conference report, printed. That was printed upon Saturday. The changes I have spoken of were made after the report was printed, after it had been given out to the public.

Mr. CURTIS. The question I asked was whether the changes had been made after the report had been presented to the House or Senate. If so, it was done without any authority of the conferees to act upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe it had been reported to the House. I think the changes were agreed upon before it was reported to the House, but this was the agreement which was published on Saturday, and on Monday I was handed the further changes that had been made and these changes are as the report of to-day shows.

I must hasten on, Mr. President, but I could go through every item in the bill and show the inconsistencies to as great a degree as I have already pointed out.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that this bill is far worse for the American manufacturer of woolens than the Wilson bill was. The Wilson bill brought destruction almost to the wool industry of this country. I have a list of the woolen mills that failed in one year, in 1896. There are 61 of them. I have no time to read it, but I want to say to Senators that the woolen manufacturers of this country passed through an experience which tried men's souls. If I had the time I would like to go into this question carefully and call attention to what the results of each failure were.

We find that the bill you are asked to vote upon gives less protection to the manufacturer in this country than the Wilson bill did. This bill, if it becomes a law, would destroy the manufacturer. There can be no purchaser for the farmers' product of wool, if the manufacturer is destroyed. He would have to send his wool to a foreign country and sell to a foreign buyer.

Let me call attention to just a few of these items. Take yarns. The average ad valorem duty in the Wilson bill was 39 per cent with free wool. The duty as provided in this bill which you are asked to vote for is 35 per cent with 29 per cent on wool. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in his statement said that it took 80 per cent of wool. I say it is only 70 per cent. Take 70 per cent of 29 per cent and you have 20.3 per cent, leaving a net protection to the manufacturer of 14.7 per cent against 39 per cent in the Wilson bill. How can the yarn manufacturer with such a rate exist?

Take wool and worsted goods. The average ad valorem duty in the Wilson bill was 48 per cent with free wool. Under the bill that is before us it is 49 per cent with 29 per cent on wool. Fifty per cent of the cost of woolens and worsted consists of wool. The Senator from Wisconsin says it is 65 per cent. I say it is 50 per cent only. Fifty per cent of 29 per cent on wool is 14½ per cent, leaving only 34.5 per cent instead of 48 per cent in the Wilson bill.

Take flannels and you find almost the same result. Take blankets. The average duty in the Wilson bill was 29 per cent, with free wool. Under this bill it is 38 per cent, with 29 per cent on wool. One-half of the cost of blankets is the wool contained in them. One-half of 29 per cent is 14½ per cent.

Take 14½ per cent from 38 per cent, the duty provided, and you have 23½ per cent as against 29 per cent in the Wilson bill.

Under the La Follette substitute on second-class wool the rate was 10 per cent. It is advanced to 29 per cent. A scientific change, of course!

Carpets. With free wool under the Wilson bill the duty was 40 per cent. Now, with a duty on wool of 29 per cent we find the rates 30, 40, and 50 per cent. I might proceed, showing these unexplained changes all through the conference report.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said in his speech:

> An estimate made by Samuel S. Dale, editor of the Textile World Record, based upon actual prices at which wool is sold in the London auction, which fixes the world prices of wool, shows that the duty on raw wool is as high as 550 per cent.

I ask the Senator from Wisconsin where on earth can he buy raw wool at 2 cents a pound? The rate on raw wool is 11 cents per pound and in order to carry a rate of duty of 550 per cent the cost could not exceed 2 cents per pound. Is it true? I do not care whether Mr. Dale or any other living man makes such a statement, it is not true. There may be a few pounds of shoddy imported into this country, run through a garnett or picking machine, carrying a duty so high, imported no doubt to see how low a stock can be handled in a foreign country. It is not raw wool, but diseased rags run through a picker, and the Senator refers to it as raw wool.

The Senator from Wisconsin also says that it takes only 1½ pounds of wool in the grease to make a pound of yarn. He makes his argument upon that basis and says that the manufacturers of the country are protected on the basis of 2½ pounds of wool in the grease and 35 per cent ad valorem and therefore make the difference. I ask the Senator if there is a clip of wool in the United States that 1½ pounds of wool in the grease will make a pound of wool yarn. If he had been a manufacturer he would never have made that statement. I might just as well say to the farmers of this country that 2 cents per pound, which he has named as the price for raw wool, would be the price that they would receive protection on at 29 per cent, which would be only .58 of 1 cent per pound protection under the proposed measure.

I desire to say to Senators that you are about to vote upon a bill that is vital to a great industry in this country. The rates reported in this bill have been the result of a compromise between two men, agreed upon, juggled in such way that they do not give the protection that the Wilson bill afforded the woolen manufacturers of this country.

There is another very harmful provision, and one that certainly no man who knows anything about the manufacturing of cotton goods or woolen goods would ever think of perpetrating, and that is this: If a yarn is No. 4 it is protected under this bill with the same ad valorem rate as a yarn drawn to No. 60. No man will deny, who knows anything about the making of yarn, that there is not one-quarter of the labor necessary for the making of No. 4 yarn that there is in spinning a No. 60. What is a No. 4 yarn? It is one pound of wool drawn four times 360 yards. What is a No. 60? It is one pound of wool drawn 360 yards 60 times. This bill provides the same ad valorem rate for the fine yarns as the coarser. The House of Representatives in passing the cotton bill recognized the fact that there is more labor in making a fine thread than a coarse one, and made one dividing line, but here we have a bill with none at all.

Mr. President, I had a number of other questions to discuss, but time is fast passing. I want to call the attention of the Senate to a happy prediction that was made by William M. Springer when a Democratic tariff bill was under discussion in the House. The prophecy reads as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Wilson bill or the Mills bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No, the Springer bill; and this is what Mr. Springer said:

> Pass this bill and thousands of feet heretofore bare, and thousands of limbs heretofore naked or covered with rags, will be clothed in suitable garments; and the condition of all the people will be improved. It will give employment to 50,000 more operatives in woolen mills; it will increase the demand for wool, and prices will increase; and with increased demand for labor wages will increase. Those who favor its passage may be assured that they have done something to promote the general weal, something
> "To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land."

Mr. President, the result that followed the passage of the first Democratic tariff bill was absolutely the contrary. Instead of bare feet being clad and instead of the American people being clothed with garments of wool, I say to you that the children of this country were not thinking of what they had on their feet or the patched clothes upon their backs; they were thinking about getting enough to eat, and their parents were trying to keep the wolf from the door. Instead of 50,000 more employees being employed in woolen mills of this country, but few of the woolen mills were able to keep the wheels running, and men were seeking employment in other lines and in other avocations. Instead of "scattering plenty over the smiling land," this land, smiling as it had been in the past, became almost a land of desolation, and men marched from ocean to ocean pleading for work and for something to do that they might have food to eat.

Mr. President, they present a compromise bill that is worse than the bill which brought that condition upon the country and ask a favorable vote of the Senate. I hope and trust that it never will become a law. I believe if it does there will be a repetition of the conditions that the woolgrower and manufacturer passed through during those wretched years of the Wilson bill.

Mr. President, the American people are not going to approve of the enactment of laws vitally affecting the great industries of the country brought about by compromise, by party alliances, or for political purposes. The country to-day, before a revision of the tariff is made, wants a report from the Tariff Board. The business interests demanded a tariff board to gather the necessary information and Congress appropriated money for that purpose. The report upon this schedule will be ready by December 4—less than four months' time.

I feel, Mr. President, that the proper thing for the Senate to do is to reject this conference report. That would be to the best interests of the American people. Let us at least hesitate before we rush madly into a legislative program mapped out not after due hearings and consideration by men who are acquainted with the workings of this schedule, but for the purpose of saying to the people, we have revised Schedule K. Let us judge what the result may be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before passing to a discussion of the conference report I am warranted in first taking some notice of the address of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], to which the Senate has just listened. This I may properly do, because of the statements, tone, and coloring of the speech.

It is fitting, sir, that the defense of the infamous woolen schedule, when it is at last brought to the bar of this Senate, should be made by a Senator who is himself a beneficiary of the protective duties of that schedule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not uttered one word of defense of the Payne-Aldrich bill; I never referred to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not yield for that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as being the beneficiary——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senate well remembers the Senator's speech. If he has something to say in response to what I have just said, I will yield for that, but I will not permit him to take my time to repeat his speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say, in relation to being a beneficiary——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a statement on that subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator yields.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that there will be no misunderstanding about my being a beneficiary under the present law, I wish to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I own $2,475 worth of stock in a woolen mill in this country, and I will assure the Senator that the mill has never paid more than 3 or 4 per cent a year. That is all that I own in any woolen mill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator admits owning a dollar's worth of stock in a woolen mill, he confesses his shame, for he has just engaged in a defense of tariff duties which are a benefit to the industry in which he owns an interest. I accept the Senator's statement as to the extent of his individual holdings in woolen-mill stocks, but the Senator from Utah stands in rather a unique position in this Senate. Will he say a certain institution, intrenched as a stronghold in Utah, is not interested in woolen mills, and that it does not own stock in the woolen industries of this country?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I will gladly say that the woolen mills, and the only mills of Provo, were bought by Mr. Jesse Knight at a sale. The church—that is what I suppose the Senator means——

Mr LA FOLLETTE. That is exactly what I mean.

Mr. SMOOT. Had stock in the original mill, but it was sold out. I can not say that they own a dollar to-day in the Knight mill. It is not the Provo mill any longer, but it is owned and controlled by Mr. Jesse Knight.

Another thing I will say is, that I am not the owner of a single head of sheep, nor is the church the owner of a single head of sheep.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I take the Senator's answers so far as his holdings are concerned, and I take the Senator's answers so far as the particular woolen mill is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But I say, Mr. President, notwithstanding——

Mr. SMOOT. They do not own a dollar in any woolen mill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say that the Senator from Utah has already stated that he is the owner of stock in a woolen mill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If he is, he never has had any right to vote on a tariff schedule that affected the product of that woolen mill. It is an outrage against common decency that any Member of the United States Senate should vote to represent his own interests, personal or pecuniary. We are here in a trust capacity, as sacred a trust as ever was committed to men. We are in no position, with a dollar of interest of our own in any question pending here, to pass upon that question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it would instantly disqualify any trustee in any court of equity in the country, and it ought to; but the official conscience, the congressional conscience, has become so dulled that Senators, the holders of stock in United States banks, have sat here and voted to defeat legislation requiring such banks to pay interest on Government deposits; Senators who are the holders of stock in mines, in smelters, in lumber, in rubber, and in all the great manufacturing concerns of every character, will sit here day after day, session after session, and vote against reducing duties, vote to increase duties, vote to increase their own profits—in plain words, sir, vote against public interest and betray their public trust. This blot upon the integrity of the record runs through the whole calendar of legislation.

It is time, Mr. President, that public protest should be made, and I make it here and now. It is time to make an end of this reprehensible practice. It is time that this Senate should adopt a rule that any Senator who has a direct personal or pecuniary interest, or has an interest through members of his family or others which ought in honor to disqualify him as trustee of any trust, expressed or implied, shall be disqualified and prohibited from voting upon any question affecting such interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if certain publishers did not vote on the Canadian reciprocity bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They did.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suppose the Senator raises that question because I am the publisher of a magazine. The Senator must know that the paper used in the publication of my magazine—or he should have inquired before he asked the question—was not in any way affected by that vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that it was affected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was not affected.

Mr. SMOOT. It affected all papers under 4 cents a pound.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But I have been obliged to pay more than 4 cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, if the Senator pays more than 4 cents a pound, he is paying more than he ought to, and more than all the other publishers pay.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have long felt that I was paying more than I ought, Mr. President. [Laughter.] Beginning with the first number of that magazine, I paid for the paper used in its publication more than 4 cents a pound. And after the passage of the Payne-Aldrich bill, that you as a member of the Finance Committee helped to frame, the rate I was required to pay for that quality of paper was very soon advanced to a still higher price.

Now, Mr. President, coming to the subject of "driving this revision of the woolen schedule through the United States Senate," the Senator from Utah says he never saw a like example. Let me remind him that there came over to this Senate from the House of Representatives two years ago a great bill revising all the schedules of the tariff. It was a bill of two or three hundred pages; it was a bill beginning with Schedule A, the chemical schedule, a schedule to understand the first line of which requires a glossary—a schedule which would have been as readily comprehended for practical legislative purposes if it had been printed in a foreign language. The same was true, though not in like degree, of all the other schedules of the bill. What happened? The control of the Senate was then with the high-protective-tariff Republicans. The Senator from Utah was a member of the Committee on Finance having control of that bill. The bill was referred to that committee.

The then Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Aldrich) was chairman, and I am tempted to ask Senators to let me remind them just how that committee was organized. A caucus was held out here in the marble room at the beginning of that session. The caucus was called to order. A motion was promptly made that Senator Hale be chosen as chairman, and the motion was put and declared carried. Hale assumed the chair. Aldrich at once moved that the chairman, Hale, appoint a Committee on Committees—that is, a committee to name the legislative committees of the Senate. The motion was put and declared carried, and the caucus adjourned in less than three minutes after it convened. That settled what would be done with the Payne bill when it reached the Senate, and the job was completed in less than three minutes.

Aldrich had made the motion authorizing Hale as chairman to appoint this all-important committee. After the adjournment of the caucus whom did Hale appoint as chairman of the Committee on Committees? Why, Aldrich, of course; that was all understood in advance. Then Hale proceeded to name as the other members of this great Committee on Committees the Senators whom Aldrich told him to name, and that too was all understood in advance. Whom did Aldrich direct Hale to appoint as the second member of that committee? Why, Hale, of course; and that also was understood in advance. And then the other members of the committee were named.

That has been the system plan for controlling legislative committees for many years. It will not be maintained here much longer, Mr. President.

That is the kind of Committee on Committees that selected the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] became a humble member.

The Payne tariff bill passed the House, was transmitted to the Senate, and in two days recalled by the House, finally returned to the Senate on April 19. It was referred to the Committee on Finance and reported back to the Senate on the same day. Altogether it was in the possession of the Senate committee not to exceed 48 hours.

Forty-eight hours behind locked doors and they made over 600 increases in duties over those contained in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. Talk about "railroading legislation through the Senate!"

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Wait. The Senator can reply to me after I have concluded. I am not willing to have the course of my argument broken into.

Then what happened? Mr. President, I am going to be reasonably regardful of the courtesies of debate. But I sat here this afternoon through two or three hours of speech making markedly personal in character. I offered no interruption, preferring to allow Senators to finish, and make such answer as seemed proper. I believe this to be a much more orderly procedure than that usually followed of interrupting a Senator at every other sentence. That was the opinion of the late Senator Frye, whose seat I now occupy, but whose great place in the Senate I can never hope to fill, however extended my span of life.

I think Senators know that I do not insist upon this course because I shrink from meeting the fire of interrogatory. There is nothing, Mr. President, that so stimulates one on his feet as the sting and challenge of interruption, but it invariably leads to digression and destroys the logical course of argument. For these reasons I prefer to proceed with the history of the Payne-

Aldrich bill without interruption and without having the order of my argument shot with questions and interruptions that are, to say the least, not always relevant but always certain to induce repetition and digression neither interesting nor enlightening.

With a scant 48 hours of consideration by the Finance Committee the Payne-Aldrich bill was reported to the Senate. Talk about "railroading legislation through!" There was a bill of more than three hundred pages. It covered the whole subject of the tariff. It was laid on the desk of the Secretary of the Senate, and what then? The crack of the whip, the orders of the boss of the Senate; the demand that the Secretary begin to read and that the Senate should vote upon the papagraphs of the bill as read. There was no report; there was a brief statement by Mr. Aldrich, not relevant to the subject, excepting in so far as it dealt with and affected the revenues. For the first time in the history of all tariff legislation a bill for the general revision of the tariff was presented to the Senate without a written report, without any explanation of the changes which had been made in that bill from the time it came from the House of Representatives until it was laid before this body and pressed for a vote by paragraphs.

Mr. President, economic conditions have so changed in this country that the rates of duty fixed in that bill were so utterly indefensible that they could not stand analysis and publicity. So the only way to put the bill through the Senate of the United States was to drive it through under the boss system that prevailed. The rates of duty fixed in the Committee on Finance and by the committee of conference were determined behind closed doors.

Contrast that record with the history of the bill now before the Senate. The rates agreed upon by the conference committee in this bill were discussed and determined, Mr. President, I rejoice to say, for the first time in history with the doors wide open and the press reporters present.

No committee can write duties such as we find in the Payne-Aldrich bill; no committee can so frame a provision on tops that it will carry within its technical and obscure terms duties running from 70 to 250 per cent, with the doors of the committee room wide open, the discussion public, and the correspondents of the great newspapers in attendance.

The duty on tops was written into the bill that is now the law with a paid employee of the Woolen Trust in a confidential relation with Aldrich when he framed that paragraph. The whole country knows the offensive scandal that grew out of that affair.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] rendered the country an important service when he made the motion in the conference on this bill that the doors should be opened and the public, through the representatives of the press, admitted, to the end that they might report to the public the reasons assigned by the conferees for the rates which they agreed should be reported to the two Houses. I trust, sir, that it will become a precedent for all committee action upon the public business in the future.

Mr. President, it was not long after the Senate began the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich bill before an order was entered here—and all it needed was the word of one man to put that order through the Senate—that the Senate must assemble at 10 o'clock in the morning and remain in continuous session until 11 o'clock at night.

I repeat a statement I have already made, that never before in the history of all tariff legislation had a tariff bill ever been presented to the Senate of the United States for their consideration by a Finance Committee which was not accompanied by a written report explaining every change proposed in the existing law; and never before in the history of tariff legislation, Mr. President, had the Senate been called upon to act upon a tariff bill, with its accompanying report, without being given weeks, and, in one or two cases, I think, as much as three months, to consider the report and the bill before the Senate was required to act upon it by the chairman of the Finance Committee in charge; but in the extra tariff session of 1909 the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator from Utah was a member, seized upon the Payne bill as soon as it reached the Senate Chamber, carried it off to the Committee on Finance, and behind locked doors, with everybody excluded excepting the Republican members, appointed, as I have described, and those who wanted the duties increased, who were admitted one by one, made 600 increases in the bill, reported it back, and the Senate was then forced immediately to consider it, without notice and without explanation.

There was a band of men here who were determined to analyze the complicated thing and find out whether it was fair and just to the 90,000,000 consumers of this country. They did the best they could. Day after day, worn by the labors of the session, each man, with the best help that he could employ to assist him, labored far into the night in preparation for the next day's session to resist the wrongs that were being imposed upon the American people. I speak for myself when I say that, going to my home after these 11 o'clock night sessions, I worked until the early morning hours for nearly three months on the paragraphs of the bill that were to be considered the next day. I worked until sometimes, despite all I could do, I fell asleep in my seat here on the floor. I believe as firmly as I believe I am now addressing the Senate that that brilliant, able, that wonderful man—Jonathan P. Dolliver—so loved by all of us, who sleeps now in the heart of Iowa, lost his life because of the cruel system that drove that bill through this Senate and forced men to work to the very limit of everything there was in them to understand and discharge their duties to the American people. And the Senator from Utah now complains about rushing this bill through the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, I did contend when I offered this bill, and I maintain now, that the duties on manufactures throughout were accurately figured with relation to the different processes as the raw wool passes through the various stages of manufacture to the finished product; and when the duties were scaled to meet the objections raised to the bill as first presented—objections on the other side—they were scaled relatively.

Mr. President, I am not going to spend much more time on this subject. I will just contrast briefly the existing rates of this schedule, which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and those who agree with him will vote to sustain, with the duties fixed in the conference report.

On clothing wool the present rate is 44½ per cent; the conference rate is 29. But as framed the conference report eliminates the skirting clause and all other devious provisions of the existing paragraphs on raw wool through which the woolgrower is robbed of nearly one-half of the protection which the existing law professes to give him. The conference gives the farmer a straight ad valorem duty of 29 per cent protection, which is pretty nearly the equivalent of the total duty he actually has to-day.

The average duty on wool of the third class—the so-called carpet wool—is 37.24 per cent. The conference rate is 29 per cent. The Senate bill provided a duty of 10 per cent; the House bill 20 per cent. Now, Mr. President, the 29 per cent rate in the conference report was a straight concession made by the Senate conferees to the House conferees to get an agreement. It was not possible to secure any legislation giving to the people of this country a little relief against this schedule that smells to heaven without some adjustment of the differences between the Senate and the House. I supposed that the conference committee was appointed for the express purpose of adjusting, if possible, the differences between the two Houses.

The House contended for a single classification on all wool. The Senate bill provides a 10 per cent duty for revenue purposes on carpet wools because they are not produced in this country, and, upon the protective theory, should be made free or assessed a low duty for revenue.

The carpet manufacturers purchased more than $10,600,000 worth of their raw material abroad last year. The total value of the domestic production amounted to only a little over $50,000. It will be seen that there is no carpet-wool industry to protect. Therefore the Senate bill provided simply a revenue duty of 10 per cent.

But, Mr. President, there has been complaint on the part of the woolgrowers of this country that it was possible to use some of the imported carpet wools in the manufacture of woolen cloth. The carpet manufacturers contend that not more than 3 to 3½ per cent of the carpet wools are used in manufacturing clothing. The woolgrowers contend that from 20 to 25 per cent is used. Be that as it may, if we were to have an agreement upon this schedule at all and offer to the people of this country, so far as Congress is concerned, any relief from the enormous burdens that they are bearing under this abomination of all tariff legislation, it was necessary that concessions should be made upon both sides, and we agreed to make a single classification and fix the duty at 29 per cent.

The paragraph of the existing law on combed wool or tops and on wool or hair advanced in any manner beyond the washed or scoured condition is little less than a monstrosity. The percentages tell the shameful story: 111 per cent, 252 per cent, 112 per cent, and 73 per cent.

The Senate bill provided a 35 per cent duty on raw wool and a duty of 40 per cent on tops; the House bill a duty of 20 per cent on wool and 25 per cent on tops. The conferees agreed upon a 32 per cent duty on tops. With the duty on raw wool at 29 per cent, the conference rate of 32 per cent on tops is a protective rate, as I shall presently show.

In the process of manufacture the next stage after tops is yarn. The present extravagant duty on yarn is 134 per cent if valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, and 76 per cent if valued at more than 30 cents per pound. The Senate bill provided a duty of 45 per cent on all yarns; the House bill a duty of 30 per cent. The conferees agreed on a duty of 35 per cent. With the duty on raw wool fixed at 29 per cent and on tops at 32 per cent in the conference agreement, a duty of 35 per cent on yarn measures the difference in the cost of manufacture, as I shall demonstrate a little later.

After yarn, the next step in manufacture is cloth.

The present high duties on cloth, knit fabrics, plushes, and other pile fabrics, dress goods, wearing apparel, trimming, etc., are from 60 per cent to 159 per cent. The bill passed by the Senate fixed a straight ad valorem of all of 55 per cent; the House bill 40 per cent. The conferees agreed on 49 per cent.

Blankets and flannels for underwear under existing law bear excessive duties ranging from 71 per cent to 182 per cent. The Senate bill reduced these rates to 55 per cent; the House bill fixed the rates from 30 to 45 per cent. The conference report places the single rate of 38 per cent upon all.

Carpets, under the present law are taxed from 50 to 80 per cent. The Senate bill, as we passed it, provided for a duty of 35 per cent; the House bill from 30 to 45 per cent. The conference agreed upon rates from 30 per cent for the cheaper to 50 per cent for the most expensive carpets.

That, Mr. President, explains in detail the report of the conferees on Schedule K.

In presenting my bill for a revision of the woolen schedule to the Senate at that time, I said I believed that the duties proposed were greater than necessary, but, bearing in mind that revision at the present time would be somewhat temporary in its character, to be followed by a more thoroughgoing revision, and with the purpose of meeting the views of a majority of the Senate to the end that some reduction might be promptly secured, I offered the bill.

Returning again to the criticism of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as to the character of the bill that I offered, I stated repeatedly in the course of that debate that what I claimed for the bill was that it was scientifically drawn, so far as the relation of duties on the manufactured products was concerned; but I stated again and again that the duties which I had fixed in that bill as I offered it here were so rated that it left beyond any question of doubt a protective margin, amply sufficient to warrant any Senator, however devoted to high duties, in supporting it.

I venture a prediction now, and I know how dangerous prophecy is. We shall have in a few months a report from the Tariff Board. I say that if the Tariff Board does its work with thoroughness it will report lower duties on all the manufactures of wool than the duties named in the conference report. Mark my words: If the Tariff Board does its work thoroughly, Senators are invited to challenge this statement at another session only a few months away if that does not prove to be the case. I have gone into this subject far enough to feel safe in making that prediction.

Now, I will take the time of the Senate to show that the duties on tops, yarn, and cloth agreed upon by the conferees are sufficiently high to measure the difference in cost of production between this and the principal competing country. Of course, it is not claimed that all of the varying details on each phase of this great and complex subject have already been ascertained. If this were so, we would not require the thorough investigation of a permanent Tariff Commission, composed of trained men, as all progressive Republicans contend we do. But, sir, enough is known at present to give assurance that the reductions proposed in the conference report can safely be made at this session. I have depended to a considerable extent, among other experts, upon the investigations made by Mr. W. A. Clark, who is at present abroad, as the agent of the Tariff Board, investigating the actual cost of production in textiles.

He made, something over two years ago—and I have called the attention of the Senate to it on other occasions—a very interesting and valuable report upon certain standard samples, comparing the cost of producing woolen cloth in this country and Great Britain.

I have also had the benefit of matter published from time to time in the Textile World Record, which is the trade paper of these great industries, by the editor of that paper, Mr. Dale, who has had practical experience in woolen manufacturing as a mill man. A man of superior intelligence and education, he finally passed from the factory to the editorship of this great journal, the Textile World Record. I have studied the reports of his investigations and experiments, and read much that he has written. Some time since he made an actual manufacturing experiment to ascertain the cost of producing tops, yarns, and cloth under the conditions which would fairly approximate the cost of foreign production. Starting with raw wool on a free basis and following each process—wool to tops, tops to yarn, yarn to cloth, the finished product—he ascertained the charge attending upon the different operations.

Taking the figures which I find in Mr. Dale's account of his experiments and combining therewith the important data available from Mr. Clark's report, it becomes apparent that the duties fixed upon tops, yarn, and cloth in the conference will afford an adequate measure of protection to the American manufacturer.

Mr. Dale ascertained the quantity of wool required to make a pound of tops, foreign cost, to be 35½ cents, or expressed decimally, 35.5 cents. The foreign cost of manufacturing 1 pound of tops was found to be 5 cents. The total foreign cost of 1 pound of tops would therefore be 35.5 cents, the cost of the wool, plus 5 cents, the foreign cost of manufacturing the pound of tops, or 40.5 cents for the finished pound of tops on the other side of the Atlantic.

If imported into this country, when this pound of finished tops reached the customhouse at New York it would be subject to a duty of 29 per cent, as fixed by the conferees. The importer would therefore have to pay 29 per cent of 40.5 cents, the value of the tops, or a duty of 12.96 cents. Hence the pound of foreign tops would cost the importer 40.5 cents plus the duty, or 53.46 cents. To this he must add the cost of packing, cartage, ocean freight, and insurance.

Now, let us see what it would cost the American manufacturer to import his wool, pay American wages, and manufacture tops in competition.

The figures of both Dale and Clark place the American manufacturing cost at 50 per cent in excess of the foreign manufacturing cost.

The foreign manufacturing cost of 1 pound of tops is 5 cents. Hence the American cost would be 5 cents plus 50 per cent of 5 cents, which equals 2.5 cents, or 7.5 cents as the American cost of manufacturing 1 pound of tops.

Taking, then, the wool necessary to make a pound of tops at the foreign cost of 35.5 cents, add to it the duty of 29 per cent fixed by the conference report, or 10.29 cents, and the wool would cost the American manufacturer duty paid 45.79 cents. Add now the American manufacturer's cost necessary to convert that wool into a pound of tops and his pound of finished tops will cost him 53.29 cents.

The American manufacturer of tops would therefore be able to undersell the importer by the difference between 53.46, the importer's cost, and 53.29, the American manufacturing cost, and would have added to that rail and ocean transportation and insurance as a further protection.

Of course, to the American manufacturers of tops who have enjoyed duties from three to five hundred per cent higher than justly protective, it would be regarded as a great hardship to be compelled to accept a rate equal to the difference in the cost of domestic and foreign production. But, Mr. President, we are approaching the time when the American people will no longer submit to the extortion which this schedule exacts in every paragraph.

Passing now to the yarn, let us determine whether the rate agreed upon in conference is sufficient to protect the American manufacturer.

The foreign cost of the quantity of wool required to make 1 pound of yarn is 38.3 cents. The foreign cost of manufacturing that wool into a pound of yarn is 8 cents. Hence it costs the foreign manufacturer to buy his raw material and manufacture it into 1 pound of yarn the sum of 46.3 cents.

If this pound of yarn is imported into this country it would have to pay, under the rate fixed in the conference report, a duty of 35 per cent, or 16.2 cents. The total cost of the pound of yarn to the importer in New York would therefore be 46.3 cents plus the duty of 16.2 cents, or 62.5 cents.

Now, what would it cost the American manufacturer to import his wool and manufacture yarn in competition? The foreign manufacturing cost of 8 cents would be increased to 12 cents. The compensatory tariff on the wool necessary to make a pound of yarn would be 29 per cent of the foreign cost of the wool, or 29 per cent of 38.3 cents, which is 11.1 cents. Adding, therefore, the manufacturing cost of 12 cents and the compensatory tariff of 11.1 cents to the foreign cost of the wool, 38.3 cents, we find the American manufacturers' cost of importing the wool and converting it into yarn is 61.4 cents, as against 62.5 cents, importer's cost. Here, again, without counting the cost of transportation, the American manufacturer would have a margin of 1.1 cents against the importer.

A similar computation shows that the conference rate of 49 per cent on cloth leaves a margin abundantly safe for the varying qualities of goods included under that name.

For a pound of cloth serge, piece dyed, the cost of wool abroad is 45.9 cents, and the manufacturing cost is 24.4 cents, making the foreign cost 70.3 cents. The conference rate of 49 per cent on this figure amounts to 34.4 cents, making the importers' cost $1.04 cents per pound.

Now the American manufacturers' cost, at an increase of 50 per cent, would be 36.6 cents as against the foreign costs. To compensate him for the duty on wool he requires 29 per cent of the foreign cost of the wool, or 29 per cent of 45.9 cents, amounting to 13.3 cents. His total cost on this kind of cloth is therefore approximately 95.8 cents per pound against the importers' cost of $1.04 per pound.

The margin on other classes of goods taking the 49 per cent rate might be more or less than this amount of 8.5 cents per pound, but the margin is enough to allow for the widest differences in kinds and qualities of those goods.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] made a most pathetic appeal to the Senate not to pass the proposed reductions in the duties of Schedule K, lest we bring on again business depression and disaster such as visited us in 1893. And he charged the dire effects of that period against the Wilson tariff law. I never have believed the Wilson tariff law was the cause of the financial troubles of that time. Those troubles began before the enactment of the Wilson tariff law. It was a period of general business depression. It began abroad in 1890 and swept over the whole world. It culminated in the panic of 1893. It is purile to attribute it to the Wilson tariff law of 1894. I know the claims that have been made by many Republican newspapers and campaign orators, and I know how labor has been appealed to, and, as election approaches, how it has been driven to the support of the standpat policies and candidates out of the fears that have been played upon in the heat and fever of the campaign, threatening a repetition of those heart-breaking times if the sacred tariff rates of the Dingley and Payne-Aldrich laws were even threatened with revision.

I hope, Mr. President, that the voters of this country are becoming enlightened enough to know that those appeals are without any substantial economic basis. There were other amply sufficient reasons to account for all of the depression and financial distress that swept over this country at that period of time. I do not know whether we have recovered more rapidly following the panic of 1907 than we did the panic of 1893, because the financial troubles of 1893 were world-wide. The panic of 1907 was confined to this country, and it came upon us without any justification, financially or economically. There were no industrial disturbances. It had no relation to tariff legislation any more than the panic of 1893 was related to the Wilson tariff law which was enacted in 1894.

Mr. President, I have differences with gentlemen upon the other side. Those differences rest upon certain principles. I am willing to fight those differences to a finish with the Democratic Party, but when the Republican Party can not win upon any issue without juggling and petifogging the case, I refuse to make that kind of a campaign.

I shall not be surprised, Mr. President, if the people of this country, whenever we revise the tariff or whenever we endeavor to pass tariff legislation, shall be treated, if not to a real panic, to something that looks like a real panic. The industrial and economic changes that have been imposed upon the people of this country in recent years have placed the control of business in the hands of a very few men. It is not difficult for those men to give this country a panic and to push them over into it at any time. So I anticipate, Mr. President, that whenever we attempt tariff revision or seek to enact legislation interfering with the trust control of business a panic will be foreshadowed, that prices will be depressed for the products of the farmer, that labor will be thrown out of employment, and that all of the threats which will serve to frighten the farmer and the wage earner will be heard on the hustings and seen on the printed page. But I shall do what I can to persuade the business men of small means and the wage earners of this country to discredit those warnings as having any logical relation to wholesome legislation.

The predictions of panic resulting from tariff reductions may come true. They can be brought to pass. They need not come true. These great industries are overprotected. Their duties could be reduced in most cases much below the point fixed in this conference report and not disturb in the slightest degree a single industry in the country. Of that I am confident. These duties will be reduced, Mr. President, if not at this session of the Congress then in the very near future; and defeat at this time, whether it be here or whether it be interposed by Executive veto, as threatened, will not long delay the lifting of these great burdens from the backs of the American people.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a clipping from the New York Evening Post on the conditions existing at the present time under duties ranging, as I have stated, from 30 per cent up to 300 per cent. It is not dated, but was published only a few weeks ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

VAGRANCY IS INCREASING—THIS YEAR, IT IS FEARED, WILL BREAK THE RECORD—MUNICIPAL LODGING-HOUSE FIGURES AN ACCURATE MEASURE OF THE SERIOUSNESS OF THE PROBLEM—NOT A TEMPORARY CONDITION—REMEDY BELIEVED TO LIE IN A STATE FARM.

Vagrancy is rapidly increasing in this State and is becoming a problem of alarming proportions, according to statements made by Charles K. Blatchly, superintendent of the joint application bureau of the Charity Organization Society and the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, at the New York State Conference of Charities and Correction. In New York City particularly the number of homeless and unemployed men applying for relief has shown a startling advance in the last few months as compared with the same months in previous years, and is practically twice as great as it was in the corresponding period of 1910.

"While exact figures as to the number of professional tramps, mendicants, and temporarily or permanently unemployed men able to work in the State at large can not be obtained," said Mr. Blatchly, "we know from our experience, from the records of other relief organizations, and from the testimony of local officials in all parts of the State that the vagrancy evil is assuming alarming proportions. In this city especially the records of the various relief organizations show a tremendous increase of homelessness and vagrancy within the last 12 months. Our own figures show that in the six months up to the end of March we had more than 18,000 applications from homeless men, as compared with 12,000 in the same length of time in 1910, an increase of 50 per cent. The Charity Organization Society reports a similar increase in the number of applicants at their wood yard, and we are sending them over 3,000 a month regularly.

LODGING-HOUSE FIGURES.

"We maintain a social secretary at the municipal lodging house, and it is probable that the figures showing the number of men sheltered at this institution furnish the most accurate indication of the increase of vagrancy in this city. In the last four months the number of men sheltered there has been practically twice as great as it was in the first four months of 1910, and the total for the last year was many thousands in excess of the highest previous record and nearly three times as great as it was five years ago.

"The following table shows the number of persons cared for at the municipal lodging house in the first four months of each of the last five years, indicating that the recent increase shows no signs of falling off, as would be the case if it represented merely a temporary condition:

	January.	February.	March.	April.
1911	24,366	18,905	19,457	15,715
1910	11,252	11,779	10,318	7,776
1909	12,544	11,507	12,081	9,694
1908	11,864	10,902	11,024	9,353
1907	5,067	4,187	4,234	3,723

"From these figures it will be seen that the number of men seeking the city's protection for a night's lodging has been between four and five times as great throughout the first quarter of 1911 as it was in 1907. Of course, general employment conditions were better in 1907 than they are now, and this undoubtedly accounts in part for the increase, but it does not explain the doubling of the figures in the last year, as there has been no such marked change in industrial conditions within that time.

"The following figures show the total number of men sheltered at the municipal lodging house during each of the past five years: 1910, 116,182; 1909, 102,421; 1908, 96,934; 1907, 53,741, and 1906, 40,872.

"From these figures it appears that 1910 was a record-breaking year for vagrancy in New York, but if the increase recorded for the first quarter of the present year is maintained the figures for 1911 will leave this total far behind.

"STATE FARM COLONY NEEDED.

"The remedy for this condition, in the opinion of the practical workers who have been brought into direct contact with this problem of the increase in vagrancy, is to be found in the establishment of a State farm colony where the labors of these men may be utilized to meet the expense of their maintenance and where some of them undoubtedly can be turned from tramps and beggars into self-supporting citizens. The records show that about one-third of those committed to penal institutions in this State for vagrancy are under 30, and a farm and industrial colony would be able to turn some, at least, of these younger men into self-supporting workers. For the others it would make them contribute some part, if not all, of the cost of their support, which at present represents an annual expense to the State of over $2,000,000.

"A very important effect of the adoption of the farm colony plan which is provided for in a bill now before the legislature would be in ridding the State of a large proportion of its tramps, of whom New York now has far more than its due quota in proportion to its population. Those of us who have had occasion to note the startling increase of the vagrancy evil hope that the Chanler bill providing for a State commission to investigate vagrancy and to locate a site for a State farm colony, possibly on lands now belonging to the State, will be enacted into law before the legislature adjourns."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the inference to be drawn from the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is that the Payne-Aldrich bill passed the House, came to the Senate, and the Committee on Finance considered the bill but 48 hours and reported it back with some 600 changes. I simply want to say to the Senators that as soon as the Finance Committee was organized in the Sixty-first Congress the committee met every day of the week at 10 o'clock in the morning, labored until 5 and 6 in the evening for weeks and weeks before ever the Payne tariff bill passed the House of Representatives, and by the time it did pass the House the Finance Committee of the Senate had considered every schedule of the bill. The Finance Committee of the Senate had the hearings that were held before the Ways and Means Committee of the House. They gave hearings to anyone attended by a Senator who desired to be heard. Any Senator who appeared before the committee upon any schedule was heard; and the time given to the bill was not 48 hours, but it was weeks and weeks.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait until I finish, then I will gladly yield.

Another thing, Mr. President, I wish to just answer briefly. The Senator from Wisconsin says that the Wilson bill had nothing whatever to do with the financial condition of the United States during the years 1894–1897. I say that the Wilson bill had an effect upon the woolen industry of the United States, and an effect upon the woolen industry of England.

Let me quote here what the London Times said of the woolen industry of Bradford, England, at the close of the year 1895. The London Times said:

There is room for doubt whether outside the West Riding of Yorkshire it is at all generally realized that the year 1895 witnessed a revival in the worsted industry of such magnitude as to be a matter not only for local but for national congratulation. After long years of depression the varying, sometimes, doubtless, intermitted gloom of which had lately become painfully intense, the great manufacturing district of which Bradford is the center was visited last year by the full sunshine of prosperity. Roughly speaking, the Wilson tariff, which came into effective operation in the last month of 1894 in place of the strangling system of duties associated with the name of McKinley reduced the customhouse charges upon the principal products of the Bradford district imported into the States from 100 per cent of their value to 50 per cent.

I also call the attention of Senators to the fact that during the year 1891 there were 11,886,716 pounds of cloth imported; by 1892 there were 16,248,313 pounds; and in 1893 there were 13,604,965 pounds, or in those three years 41,739,996 pounds, while in the single year of 1895, when the country was in the throes of poverty, there were imported from England 40,070,148 pounds. There were imported within a few thousand pounds in that one year of what was imported during the three preceding years under the McKinley bill.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the discussion as to whether the tariff had anything to do with the general distress throughout this country, but I know that it closed the woolen mills of this country and it opened the woolen mills of the Bradford district, in England.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I rise with some reluctance on this report.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. REED. I rose to ask the Senator from Utah a question, and he said he would prefer I would wait until he had closed. I did wait, and I should like to have the privilege of asking the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield for that purpose?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator from Utah now to say that the Senate Finance Committee did hold meetings for many weeks and did have hearings.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I said that the Senate Finance Committee did hold hearings for weeks, and that any Senator who desired to be heard upon any schedule was given the chance, and whomsoever he brought with him was given a hearing.

Mr. REED. I had not concluded my question. I want to know if the Senator from Utah desires now to change the statement he made on this floor in a recent speech, in which he said that the meetings were secret meetings, had by only the Republican members of the committee, and that no one was admitted except those interested parties who came before that secret tribunal organized out of the Republican members of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no desire to change any statement that I have ever made on the floor. I say now to the Senator that there had been given by the Ways and Means Committee of the House full and complete hearings—nine volumes of them.

Mr. REED. I am talking about the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait, I will come to the Senate.

Mr. REED. I trust the Senator will not take a change of venue to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator does not want me to answer, I will take my seat; but if he will be a little patient, I will come to the Senate.

Mr. REED. I have infinite patience when I am being entertained and instructed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say that the hearings were open hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and there were nine large volumes of them. The Finance Committee of the Senate decided that there was no necessity of having public hearings covering the same ground, but also decided that any Senator who desired to appear before the committee, or have any of his constituents appear before the committee, could do so and be heard upon any schedule in the bill. I will say that there were a great many Senators who appeared and a great many men interested in the several schedules. I do not know that they could be called secret meetings. There were all the members of the majority party at those meetings.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the Senate Finance Committee, acting upon the Payne-Aldrich bill in relation to having only the majority members of the Finance Committee present, followed exactly the same course as was taken in the consideration of the Wilson bill and also all other Democratic tariff bills.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me one word further—because I want a specific statement on this if I can get it—does the Senator say that when the Wilson bill was being considered by the Finance Committee of the Senate hearings were held by the majority members sitting alone and held in secret, or does he mean merely to say that, after having had their hearings, public in their nature, then the majority members met for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion, the distinction—so that there can be no misunderstanding—being between a committee holding public meetings——

Mr. WARREN. I hope this ancient history may be boiled down as closely as possible, as the hour is late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WARREN. I yield for concrete questions and answers.

Mr. REED. I will endeavor to boil it down so as to leave sufficient time for any Senator to represent his own interest on this floor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not believe that the courtesy which I have shown to the Senator deserves the discourtesy that the Senator evidently intends for me.

Mr. REED. Well, if the Senator does not desire to yield, I will desist and will occupy the floor in my own right.

Mr. WARREN. I had yielded to the Senator, and he is taking advantage of that to be discourteous to me, and I decline to yield further at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming declines to yield.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I was about to say when interrupted, I rise with a great deal of reluctance to discuss this conference report because I assume the condition is much the same as when the old farmers used to say, "The matter can't be helped; the calf's eyes is sot." I do not suppose that anything I may say or anything any other Senator may say will change, at this juncture, a single vote in this Chamber, but I must not sit in silence when a matter of this kind is presented lest I may be understood as supporting the measure.

I take it for granted that in enacting a tariff law we must either have in view the matter of revenue, the matter of protection, or the matter of general benefit to the consumer. In my opinion, this bill is a failure as a revenue producer unless, indeed, we shall resort to the low wages for labor of foreign countries in order that we may successfully compete with a product produced with labor at one-half or one-third the wages paid in this country. It is a failure, I believe, so far as benefiting the consumer is concerned, unless we do that same thing—employ pauper labor or labor at pauper scale of wages. As a protective measure the so-called wool bill would be a miserable failure, both as to sheep and wool growing and wool manufacturing.

The talk of wool and woolen tariff percentages sounds large but conveys to the listener or reader an entirely erroneous idea of the real charge against wool and woolens. If an article is worth 5 cents, 100 per cent sounds large, and yet the 5 cents and the 100 per cent added make but a small sum.

Mr. President, so far as the consumer is concerned, if the woolgrower gave up his raw wool at the shearing pens for nothing it would not make a difference of over 50 to 75 cents on a suit of clothes such as you buy at, say, $10, and it could not make a difference of as much as $2 on any suit of clothes that a tailor will produce for you at from $35 to $75, if again the farmer furnished the raw wool free of cost. So, in talking of percentages, how insignificant the cost of wool in a suit compared with the total cost of a suit of clothes. And if it is true that a woolgrower's product that goes into a suit of clothes is not worth over from a half dollar to a dollar and a half or two dollars in toto, how much have you saved to the consumer if you have reduced slightly the tariff on the woolgrower's product? Again, there is not a suit of clothes worn in this Chamber, unless it is a peculiarly fancy suit that some of my friends may indulge in, out of which the manufacturer gets to exceed $5 or, at the very most, $6. Take the best blue all-wool serge that is made to-day, and it takes three yards and a half of the regular double-width cloth, at from $1.30 to the very highest, $1.48, a yard at the mill. Other all-wool serges may be had for less than $1 a yard, and cotton warp and wool serge for much less than $1 a yard. You may make a present to the consumer of the cloth already made and you have not reduced the tailor's price of that suit in any great degree.

The cost of a suit of clothes on the back of a consumer does not lie with a tariff on wool, nor does it lie with the tariff or the effects of the tariff on the manufacturer. When I state it as a fact that the woolgrower gets from 50 cents to less than $2 for the wool in a suit, and when I say that the manufacturer gets only from $1.50 to a possible $6 for finished cloth, enough for a full suit of clothes, and when we consider the bills that we pay our tailors, as I said before, from $35 to $75, it seems to me that we have got to look in some other direction for any very great measure of relief to the consumer in "iniquitous Schedule K" than to either woolgrower or woolen manufacturer.

Whenever you lengthen the hours and reduce the price per hour of labor you may touch the point and render a material difference in the price of clothing to the consumer. For instance, labor in the woolen mills and on the farms of Germany is one-third or less of the price of American labor, and in England and Belgium about an even half.

Mr. President, if, under this proposed reduction-of-wool-tariff bill, we are to increase our revenue or even maintain the amount of revenue that we now are collecting, we must either raise no sheep and wool or ship our wool abroad, which, of course, is impracticable, or close our mills, so that either all the cloth or all the wool will come from another country; for if all the wool and woolens consumed in this country were taxed the proposed rates, we would still be short of the revenue now received under the present tariff law.

It is easy to say, Mr. President, that the Wilson bill did not disastrously affect the sheep grower or the manufacturer; it is just as easy to tell the child if he sticks his hand in the fire that it is not the fire that burns him; but he knows that he has got a sore hand, he knows that he had the hand in the fire, and those two facts convince him that he burned his hand in the fire. If it pleases the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] to say the Wilson bill did not close the woolen mills of the United States and annihilate the woolgrowers, he may do so; but the fact remains that both woolen mills and woolgrowers were prosperous before the Wilson law was enacted and also after it was repealed, but were nearly all of them wrecked during the time the law was in force. We have had a tariff on imported wool and woolens for nearly a hundred years, sometimes higher and sometimes lower; we have had panics severe enough, the Lord knows—for instance, the panic of 1873 and the earlier panics—but there was never a time that the majority of woolgrowers could not live under it until the panic following the enactment of the Wilson-Gorman law. There never was a time during those earlier panics—never a time in a hundred years—when the woolen mills were compelled to close as they were under the operation of the Wilson tariff law. I assume, therefore, that it is fair for us to say that that condition was due to free wool and greatly reduced tariffs on woolens, that that closed the mills, and that that reduced the number of sheep in this country from fifty-odd million to 37,000,000 in the short time of some four years. The Senator from Wisconsin assures us that perhaps we shall have hard times following tariff changes, even such as he proposes. It may be proper for us to arrange a soft place upon which to fall when we have debauched the tariff; it may be better for us to say beforehand that we expect panics, that we expect receding prices. I think myself that it is well to prepare the people for them if they are to come; but why legislate in any manner which will invoke or invite hard times?

I do not believe, and I do not indorse the theory that the Wilson bill had no adverse effect upon the business of this country. I am willing that the matter may stand in the judgment of this country and with the voters of this country exactly upon the ground: Did or did not the passage of the Wilson bill ruin the sheep industry and the woolen industry, or so nearly so, as to leave the wrecks of that industry lining the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific?

The proposition of the present bill is for an ad valorem duty upon wool and woolens. I am a believer in ad valorem tariff duties as to a great many commodities, but they are totally inapplicable to wool. They never have been a success as to wool, and never can be a success, from the very nature of things. Nor could a system of ad valorem duties on wool and woolens be satisfactory if it were a success, so far as collection of revenue is concerned. The woolgrower, if he needs any protection at all, needs it just as much when wool in a foreign country is low as when it is high—in fact, he needs protection most when the price of wool is lowest. So, from a protective standpoint, when the woolgrower is struggling with a low market and prices are low at home and abroad, under the ad valorem duties his protection is reduced to a point where he goes out of business. On the other hand, when he is prosperous and the market is high, he then from an ad valorem tariff receives that which he does not so much need.

The ad valorem duties must apply to value. How do you determine the value as to wool? The commodity of wool comes over here in sacks and bundles. The individuality of wool and the numerous thousands and thousands of strains, types, textures, and conditions that exist, conditions as to shrinkage, and so forth, are such that, in order properly to value wool every bale of it would have to be opened upon the pier upon its landing. That is not practicable. On the other hand, as to values and conditions, there is no tariff schedule in the world so intricate, as everyone knows, as Schedule K. I am willing to admit that. So must we all. I wish I knew more about it, and I wish we all knew more about it; and for that reason I desire to have the benefit of the investigations of the Tariff Board, which, from all sides of this Chamber, received its support and commission, its authority, and its order to examine and report upon this very schedule.

Now, I come back in this intricate schedule to the matter of the protection to the woolgrower. Who represents him at the dock or the customhouse? The man who seeks to enter the country with wool is, of course, interested in swindling the Government, or at least in depressing prices and in saving himself money; the man who buys the wool in this country seeks to get the lowest possible valuation; the woolgrower is a thousand, two thousand, or three thousand miles away; and there is nobody to protect him unless it be some representative of the Government who may be at the customhouse to-day and gone to-morrow, and who possibly may be an expert—more probably not. Most likely he may be one of those whom the gyrations and fortunes of politics change occasionally, and who only knows of wool what he may learn at his post of duty from those who are all on one side, and that side the one against the woolgrower.

As to the percentages on first-class wool, second-class wool, and third-class wool, taking a superficial view of the matter from the point of view of the woolgrower, the bill as reported by the conference committee would be a very great improvement over the bill as it first came here from the House of Representatives; but I can not subscribe to the statement that we raise no carpet wool in this country, and that no third-class wool is used for clothing purposes, except a small percentage, for it is known to everyone who has watched the business—and it is now recognized in the market papers and recognized and assented to by the manufacturers—that a very large proportion of No. 3 wool goes into the clothing of this country. Of course every pound of that wool that comes in at a lower rate than No. 1 or No. 2 wool displaces a pound of No. 1 or No. 2, and therefore reduces the protection, just as the price of the cheaper No. 3 wool is lower than the price of No. 1 wool.

The woolgrower has had his percentage of protection enlarged in the conference report over the original Underwood bill—and I am glad to see it enlarged as it has been—but, of course, it is perfectly patent to everybody that the American woolgrower has only one market, and that is the American market, and the American market for wool is with the manufacturers of the United States. Therefore, if this tariff bill is intended to protect the woolgrowers, and protect the woolgrower in full, his product must be successfully used here in the United States. On the other hand, if it can not be used here, it does not matter whether the rate of duty is 29 per cent or 99 per cent or 9 per cent, because unless our manufacturers can be protected against foreign cloth they can not run and consume our American wool, and thus the woolgrower is thrown upon the markets of the world and is compelled to ship his wool to Liverpool or to some other port and loses all benefits of American wool tariffs.

I wish it were different; but we may as well face the fact that the woolgrower, in order to be protected, must not only have his product as he delivers it provided for, but it must also be possible for the mills of this country to buy the wool of this country instead of having cloth brought in from another country.

My opinion of this bill—I do not see the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] here just at this moment—is that it is unscientific; that it would be a failure; that all those who vote for it if it is ever put into effect will rue the day that they voted for it no matter to what political party they belong. In saying that I assume that men on both sides of this Chamber want every industry in this country to be fairly successful. I am assuming that those who vote for a reduction of the tariff believe that the interests to be affected can sustain a cut in tariff duties and still exist and live; but, in my opinion, it is impossible for the sheep industry to survive under this proposed tariff; and I do not believe, either, that the manufacturers of this country can be successful under it. It is possible, Mr. President, that such of the very few sheepmen as can maintain themselves for a few years and sustain their losses will not be so much injured in the long run, because they may receive compensation as did the cattlemen in the matter of hides.

It was said by some that the cattle growers would not feel the difference; that hides would be just as high after being made free as they had been under the 15 per cent duty; and when the question was asked, "Then why reduce it?" the leather and shoe men said, "To give us—the consumers—cheaper shoes," which we were persistently, continuously, and tumultuously promised. Now, as a matter of fact, the abrogation of the tariff did not reduce the price of hides at the time, and, worse than that, it did not reduce the price of shoes. But whether it raised the price of shoes or not the price of shoes went up just about the time we took the tariff off of hides, and this country lost $3,000,000 that we had been collecting as revenue, and no one was benefited except a few of the manufacturers of shoes, and they had said beforehand they did not need the tariff on shoes and boots and that if we removed the tariff on hides they would relinquish all claims to protective legislation.

To explain my statement that in the survival of a few of the sheep growers and their probable success after long, dark days of disaster, I have in mind the flesh-food supply needful for this country. The mutton supply in this country is as much a consideration to the consumers of the country almost as the wool supply. We are reading every day in the newspapers of the growing scarcity of beef and of cattle. We are reading every day that it will soon amount to a rise in prices with the retailer, which has already taken place with the wholesaler and in the central markets of cattle, because while cattle are growing scarce our country is growing more populous and our needs greater. This country must have meat. There must be a food product, and the equilibrium has been very largely kept down these late years through our generous mutton supply when sheep growing has been successful under an adequate tariff. Mutton is a commodity which can be handled easily anywhere, and especially it is the poor man's meat, for he can go to market and buy a quarter of mutton, getting it at a semiwholesale price, take it home, and preserve it, enjoying a variety of cuts and styles of meats without taking a very large total weight or paying a large price, while he could not thus get beef. To-day, with all the mutton we have, we have hardly sufficient to support this country and keep the price down at a level where the consumer may live. If we reduce the number of sheep, as the enforcement of such a tariff bill as this will surely do, the prices of meats must, of course, advance.

All the time our population is growing, and the difficulties are increasing as to our flesh-food products.

We have land enough to raise cattle and sheep in greater numbers, but in order to do that we have to more intensely cultivate the land, we have to spend money for fertilizers, we have to spend money for irrigation, we have to spend money in different quarters, which of course raises the value of the land, and therefore the value of any commodity raised upon the land; so that just as you reduce the sheep of this country in numbers you raise the price of the mutton, and while it will sweep from the face of the earth a large number of the sheep growers, the small balance of them will ultimately live without doubt, but at the expense of the consumer, who will pay a higher price for his meat.

I notice the votes in another place where a very large number of those who associate with the party that believes in some measures of protective tariff voted for the acceptance of this or a similar conference report. Let me say to those who come from those farming States where few, if any, sheep are bred that if they think because they raise only corn and other grains and hay that they are immune from the effects of this tariff, if it shall affect the sheep grower, they are mistaken. For as a matter of fact, the largest percentage of sheep now grown in this country are grown in that section of it beyond or west of the corn States, and every year thousands, nay, millions, of those sheep are shipped down into the corn country and fed upon the corn and hay raised there, and the growers who fatten their sheep at home draw their grain supplies largely from these same States, and the farming States will feel the effect of this; if not the same, they will feel it sufficiently to know the difference in having a market both east and west of them for their grain and forage and of having only a market east where they must meet a greatly curtailed consumption and enlarged competition.

Mr. President, the tariff busters of this and another House seem to forget, when they would assassinate Schedule K, that they leave undisturbed the present tariff on about everything the woolgrower and wool manufacturer have to buy—not only to eat and wear, but to perfect his product. In wool manufacture chemicals are used profusely all the way through from the scouring of the wool to the last finish of the cloth. Every piece of all the expensive machinery used is under high protective tariff, as well as everything used in packing, shipping, and so forth.

And, again, we have a class of "smart ducks" who are always ready to tell us all about the cost of sheep growing, and so forth, though they may scarcely know a sheep from a goat. As an example I have here what appears to be an Associated Press dispatch, as follows:

OGDEN, UTAH, July 29.

W. C. Barnes, representing President Taft and the Tariff Board in checking up the information of the Government on wool and sheep inddustries, arrived in Ogden this morning after visiting four of the largest sheep States of the West. In a statement made public to-day he says the data obtained proves that sheep can be raised and wool clipped and marketed and lambs disposed of at a cost of $1.50 per head, the annual revenue from which, with wool at 13 cents, totals $3.31, leaving a profit of $1.81 a head. His figures are as follows:

Cost per head to raise sheep, all expenses incident to grazing, herding, shearing, dipping, lambing, freight on wool and mutton, interest on money investments, etc., $1.50.

Average price of lambs, $3; average pounds, at an average of 13 cents per pound, delivered, 91 cents.

Average price of lambs, $3; average increase being figured at about 80 per cent, placed on the market, $2.40.

Total receipts, $3.31.

Total net receipts per head, $1.81.

Mr. Barnes stated that there may be a slight variation by States in the cost of raising sheep and the marketable value, also the wool clip, lambs, and mutton, but that the above figures show quite accurately that the average is in the territory over which he has traveled. He suggested that the cost of raising sheep might be reduced considerably by better business methods by sheep owners.

Of course Mr. Barnes did not say this—he has denied it in toto—but somebody said it; and in order to get it into the newspapers the name of an employee of the Tariff Board was stolen for the occasion.

To those who know the business the item is as amusing as the "glossary" which the House Ways and Means Committee so confidently published, claiming that all sheep were wethers (males) after the first shearing when they became 1 year old, notwithstanding sheep are born and raised almost exactly even in numbers—males and females.

And this "wise guy" from Ogden would raise 80 per cent of lambs each year from his flock, even if but one-half could be mothers, to say nothing of his allowing nothing for death rate—old age, disease, and various contingencies.

Mr. President, I hesitate to invade any new territory in discussing this question, but on account of some invidious distinctions made in this debate with reference to who may vote in the Senate and who may not vote, I want to observe that if we have come to a point where it is said of a man (a Senator) who may have a dollar invested in this or that property, or any property which may be affected by legislation, that he is disqualified from sitting or voting here, what are we going to do about the sitting lawyers who are legislating for law suits, manufacturing new laws, the natural course of which is increased business for lawyers? Lawyers would have little business without it.

I would like to know whether, if a man happened to have a share of railroad stock, he is to sit here like a Stoughton bottle, shamefaced, and without the right to speak for himself or his people on railroad legislation. I want to say that it is belittling, indeed, if it be true that any man who sits in this body would vote differently upon any matter because forsooth of his personal investments. I will not accuse any man of so sitting here, because I would not insult either a Senator or the State from which he comes by charging such veniality. I do not think Senators are of that character. It is belittling to say or even think of a man who accepts the commission of this great office to here represent the United States and represent his own State that if he happens to have a dollar in this or that or the other interest he must be dumb, and the people who send him here—the State that sends him here—must lose their representative in the consideration of laws affecting an industry in which the major portion of the citizens of the State are interested, and that the Senate must lose the knowledge and experience of each Senator who is not a pauper, and the States must be confined to the one idea of electing a man who has not got a dollar in the world for fear he might have some interest that he might subserve here.

Mr. President, I have not got to that point where I myself entertain the feeling that I can not legislate on those things that I am or may not be interested in the same, and I do not believe that other Senators in this body are in that condition of mind or are of that character, but if so, in what plight are those who wish to reduce wool tariff so they may buy cheaper clothes for their backs, though wages of laborers on ranches and in factories are reduced and their hours lengthened in consequence as compared with those who wish a tariff maintained sufficient to prevent bankruptcy and maintain living wages for labor?

Carried to its logical conclusion, if a Senator may not vote if he have any property interests, the States would be reduced to the extremity of selecting their Senators from among penniless hobos who traverse the country stealing rides on the brake beams of freight cars in order to secure free-handed representation.

Mr. President, at the risk of being considered as interested in woolen manufactures—and I never had a dollar's interest in them in the world, and never expect to have—I want to say if it is a fact that the Wilson bill, with its free wool and its tariff on manufactures of wool, was such as to cause the closing of the woolen mills, where they had 40 to 50 per cent tariff, with free wool, is it not fair to believe that we have put too large a strain upon them when we now give them a margin between raw-wool tariff and their own tariff of something like half as much as they had under the Wilson bill? In other words, if the manufacturer could not exist with 40 or 50 per cent protection and free wool, how is he going to exist when wool tariff is 29 per cent and he has thirty-odd to fifty-odd per cent? That is a question I think we ought to consider in all fairness.

I believe the woolen manufacturers to-day are in better shape to survive a cut in the tariff than they were at the time of the passage of the Wilson bill; I believe that more of them, a larger percentage, could live to-day, but I do not believe that they can possibly furnish a market to the woolgrower and conduct their business under a tariff bill upon the lines of the one now before us.

Whatever may be my opinions, I would rather wait until competent agents, with commissions to enter into all of the ways and byways affecting these interests, had passed upon the question and rendered us some finding and some recommendation, even though the rates might be lower than were wished for, because I believe that, take them altogether, they should and I believe will better match one with the other. I am not one of those who believe everything I find in the columns of the daily press, and I do not want to misquote a Senator. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] a question? I notice in the press this quotation from some speech of the Senator. I do not assert it is correct, but I should like to ask. The Senator is reported as saying:

> This is a temporary revision. That is all we expect to make of it. We are at work here at best with blacksmith's tools.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator that I do not recall whether I used that language or not.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator would be justified in using it, and I only beg to differ with him in this way: If this country were on the verge of collapse; if we were in such misery that we would only use blacksmith's tools, even if it were to pull teeth, I might favor some bill that flavored of that kind of manufacture. As it is, I would rather wait and get some kind of benefit from the $450,000 that we are spending, and of which we have spent a large proportion through authorized agents, authorized by us to take up this whole matter and report upon it.

So, I shall vote against this report, and I hope it may not become a law.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I doubt if any bill ever came from a committee, and I doubt if any conference report ever came from the conferees of the two Houses, which was exactly as any Member of either House would have made it had he been given the complete and absolute control of it. I do not pretend to think or to say that this bill as it has been agreed upon in conference suits me in all respects; but I do say, without any hesitation and without any fear of successful contradiction, that all in all it is a vast improvement on the law which it is intended to repeal, and for that reason I cordially support it.

There were differences, not merely of rates and percentages, but there were differences as to the principle upon which a tariff law should be constructed between the Senate's own conferees. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] as a protectionist believes in graduating the ad valorem duties as an article advances in its state of manufacture, for in that way only can it cover the difference between the cost of production here and in foreign countries. As a revenue-tariff Democrat I would lay a flat ad valorem duty upon a given article in all of its forms and conditions, leaving that ad valorem duty to take care of all increases in its price made through fabrication or through other processes until it might be fairly classed as a luxury, or nearly so, when I would increase the rate. A duty of 30 per cent on wool and a duty of 50 per cent on woolen goods is a clear protection to the woolen manufacturer equal to the difference of 20 per cent. I do not disguise that from myself, and I would not, if I could, disguise it from my countrymen. They understand it now, and they will understand it better before this discussion has been concluded. But I could not have my way in that regard. Indeed, the bill which came to us from the House was not constructed exactly on my theory, and I felt that the Senate conferees were both generous and fortunate in arriving at a disposition of this matter so fair to all and affording so much relief to the people.

Mr. President, I assume the full responsibility, although I am sure my associates will be willing to share it with me, for the increase which appears in this conference report in the duty on carpets above the rate fixed in both the House and in the Senate bills. Indeed, sir, I not only avow my responsibility for that increase, but I was willing to make that increase greater still, because an examination of the report will disclose the fact that it was made only with respect to carpets of the highest quality.

My own view is that carpets whose price averages more than $2 per yard are as much a luxury as silk and wine, and I would levy a duty on such carpets as high as I could make it without reducing the revenue which their importation yielded. If there be those who would make that duty less, I am ready to argue that difference with them on some suitable occasion. Not only did I actively urge an increase in the duty on those finer carpets, but there were one or two other items on which I would have readily agreed to increase the duty. Had it been practicable to separate the cheaper from the finer laces I would have made the people who want those finer laces for ornament and decoration pay a duty that would reach the point prescribed for luxuries, while upon the cheaper laces, which people of moderate means buy, I would have laid a moderate duty.

In insisting as I did upon this increase in the duty on carpets of the highest class I was well within the rule which governs all conferences between the two Houses, for as the Senate had stricken from the House bill all after its enacting clause and had inserted a complete and independent measure the conferees were at liberty under the practice to report an entirely new bill.

This much, Mr. President, is all the occasion requires me to say. But I will go one step further, though I shall detain the Senate but a moment longer, while I say to the Senator from Wyoming that the duties on woolen goods against which he has declaimed are 50 per cent higher than the duties which the fathers of protection asked in 1824, when the woolen industry was in fact a struggling and an infant one. Stimulated by the embargo of 1808 both cotton and woolen factories sprang up in different parts of our country, because we could not otherwise supply our people with those textiles which it had been our habit to import from England in the days of peace. Following the end of that artificial and unintentional protection there came a period of distress as great, and perhaps greater, than has ever occurred within the memory of any Senator here. The accumulated surplus of textile fabrics of Europe came here in superabundance, and both the cotton and the woolen factories felt those importations with tremendous and disastrous effect. Yet in that time, when they were begging to be saved by a tariff which should protect their weakness and their infancy, they did not beseech the Congress to lay a duty as high as that imposed by the compromise bill now before the Senate.
